of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, shall extend to persons given employment under the provisions of this act. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government, and shall determine its necessary administrative and other expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid. All expenditures of said Corporation shall be in accordance with the laws generally applicable to the expenditures of the several departments and establishments of the Government. All claims and accounts of said Corporation shall be submitted to the General Accounting Office as provided in the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921: Provided, That the appointment of any person receiving a salary of $4,000 or more per annum from the funds of the Corporation shall be subject to the confirmation of the Senate of the United States.

The Corporation shall, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report in writing to Congress stating in detail its activities, the names, salaries, and duties of all employees and officers in the employ of or under the supervision of the Corporation, and an account of all moneys it has disbursed.

(f) The Board is authorized to make such bylaws, rules, and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Corporation.

SEC. 4. (a) The Corporation shall have succession in its corporate name, and shall have power—

(1) To sue and be sued in its corporate name in any court of competent jurisdiction, Federal or State.

(2) To adopt and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

(3) To establish, and to assist in the establishment of farms and farm homes, together with the necessary buildings and other structures, livestock, equipment, implements and machinery, furnishings, supplies, facilities, and to assist the beneficiaries of this act in the organization of cooperatives: Provided, That any individual farm shall be of such size and fertility and so stocked and equipped as to reasonably indicate returns which will permit the occupants thereof to repay any obligations incurred by them for the purchase thereof, and to maintain a decent standard of living: And provided further, That the Corporation shall have power under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Corporation and the Secretary of the Interior to finance in the same manner the establishment of individual farms and homes upon the public domain or upon lands within any reclamation project.

(4) The Corporation shall limit the loan made to any purchaser to the amount that will provide a farm to be limited in area to the size of an average farm in the State where the land is located as determined by the preceding Federal census, and not to exceed in cost the price of property of similar size and value in the same section or area. No property, real or personal, shall be purchased hereunder save upon an appraisal by competent experts, reported in writing and sworn to and filed and preserved for inspection by the Congress, or any Member thereof. No separate tract of property shall be bought at a price in excess of the value shown by the appraisal as herein provided for. If the services of appraisers of the Federal land bank are available, no farm land shall be bought by the Corporation save upon an appraisal by one or more appraisers of the Federal land bank, reported in writing and sworn to and filed and preserved for inspection by the Congress, or any Member thereof.

(5) In carrying out the provisions and purposes of this act, to enter into contracts, make loans, and to acquire, by purchase, gift, or otherwise any real or personal property or any interest therein, and to improve, develop, maintain, and sell any such property or interest therein. The provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, shall not apply to lands acquired, or construction work undertaken by the Corporation under the provisions of this act, and title to all land, chattels, and other property, real or personal, acquired under the provisions of this act, shall vest in the Corporation for the purposes of this act.

(6) To enter into contracts to sell or lease its properties, and to make conveyances under the terms of such contracts: Provided, however, That no such lease shall be for a period of more than 5 years. The Corporation may lease any farm which has been repossessed by it, pending a resale of said farm.

(7) To pay all expenses incident to the examination and survey of the necessary areas and the acquisition of title to lands to be acquired, including fees for the services of abstractors, title attorneys, and escrows, official certifications and evidences of title, and title insurance policies, recording fees, and options when deemed necessary, to assist the beneficiaries of the program to secure and maintain appropriate insurance policies, and to pay such other expenses as may be determined necessary to the efficient carrying out of the programs herein authorized.

(8) To accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, cooperate with such Federal and State agencies, and utilize, with the consent of the State, such State and local officers and employees as may be necessary.

(9) To establish such branch and local offices as it may deem necessary, but the principal office of the Corporation shall be in the District of Columbia.

(10) To utilize the service of other corporations and agencies on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to the efficient exercise of the powers specifically conferred.

(b) Preference shall be given applicants who are married or who have dependent families, farm tenants, share-croppers, farm laborers, or those who recently were farmers; but the Corporation shall not approve any application for the benefits of this act if it finds that the income of the applicant derived from farm property owned by him is sufficient to support his family and to pay the expenses of operating such property and the fixed charges on his indebtedness in connection with such property.

(c) The Corporation may provide for such amortization periods for the repayment of indebtedness owed to it, and may postpone the date when the initial installment shall be due, as it may deem advisable, but in no event shall the amortization period exceed 60 years.

(d) The rate of interest to be charged by the Corporation upon indebtedness owed to it shall be not to exceed 3½ percent per annum, and may include a reasonable charge to be applied toward the expenses of administering the provisions of this act, not to exceed 1 percent per annum.

(e) The board and the Corporation shall give due consideration to the desirability of avoiding the expansion of production for the market of basic commodities for which the price is lower than the parity price as defined in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended; and shall, so far as practicable, assist beneficiaries of the program to become established upon lands now in cultivation.

(f) Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the Corporation to make a loan to any corporation for the purpose of purchasing real property, to sell or otherwise dispose of any real property or interest therein owned or held by the Corporation to any other corporation, or to enter into any contract or agreement with any other corporation with respect to the acquisition by it of any real property or interest therein.

SEC. 5. All contracts of sale executed by the Corporation and all mortgages taken by it shall contain a provision that if a voluntary lien is created by the debtor on any of the property covered by such contract or mortgage, or if an involuntary lien is established on any of such property, the Corporation may declare all unpaid installments of principal and interest (accrued or to accrue) to be immediately due and payable. No land purchased from the Corporation herein created up to the value of $2,500 shall ever be encumbered with any lien or obligation, either statutory or contractual. Such land shall not be subject to any debt, or debts, or obligations of any kind of the owner, except taxes, and every conveyance, lease, or contract executed by the Corporation herein created shall contain a provision that the land shall forever remain free of all liens or encumbrances of whatever kind, and such provision shall be a covenant running with the land as long as it shall be used as a farm homestead. This provision shall not affect the lien of the Corporation for the money loaned for the purchase of the land, or equipment for the land or judgment for tort or a statutory offense or for contractual obligations in which enter the elements of fraud or deceit.

SEC. 6. No purchasers of property from the Corporation shall, so long as the purchase price is not paid in full, without the written consent of the Corporation, sell, lease, mortgage, transfer, assign, or convey any such property included in a contract of sale by the Corporation or in a mortgage to the Corporation: Provided, That if he shall have first given the Corporation 60 days' notice of his intention to sell and convey said property, and unless the Corporation, within such 60-day period, does not purchase such property at a price equal to the appraised value thereof, as established by an independent appraisal, such sale shall not be prohibited hereby. If any sale, lease, transfer, assignment, mortgage, or conveyance of such property is made without complying with the foregoing requirements, or if any property is abandoned, the Corporation may declare all unpaid installments of principal and interest (accrued or to accrue) to be immediately due and payable.

SEC. 7. (a) The jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall not be changed by reason of such acquisition: Provided, however, That this section shall not be deemed to affect the jurisdiction of the United States to punish offenses against the United States; the intent of this section being that the several States in which such lands are situated shall not, by reason of such acquisition, lose their jurisdiction, nor the inhabitants thereof, their rights and privileges as citizens, or be absolved from their duties as citizens, of the respective States.

(b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property held by any purchasers from the Corporation, notwithstanding the legal title remains in the Corporation, from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

SEC. 8. The Federal Reserve banks are authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Corporation.

SEC. 9. (a) Whoever makes any statement, knowing it to be false, or whoever willfully overvalues any property, for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Corporation or the board upon any application, advance, purchase, or repurchase agreement, or loan, under this act, or any extension thereof, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000.

(b) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation or coupon, in imitation of or purporting to be a note, debenture, bond, or other obligation, or coupon issued by the Corporation; or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to utter, pass, or publish any false, forged, or counterfeited note, debenture, or other obligation or coupon, purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited; or (3) falsely alters any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation; or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any falsely altered or spurious note, debenture, bond, or other obligation or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to have been falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(c) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged or otherwise intrusted to it; or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation, or any other body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiners of the board or the Corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of, or to, the board or the Corporation, or without being duly authorized, draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other obligation or draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

(d) The provisions of sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 202–207, inclusive), insofar as applicable, are extended to apply to contracts or agreements of the Corporation, which for the purposes hereof shall be held to include advances, loans, purchase and repurchase agreements, extensions and renewals thereof, acceptances, releases, and subtitutions of security therefor, and sales of property to the Corporation.

(e) No person, partnership, association, or corporation shall directly or indirectly solicit, contract for, charge, or receive, or attempt to solicit, contract for, charge, or receive any fee, charge, or other consideration from any person applying to the Corporation for a loan or other assistance, whether bond or cash, except ordinary fees authorized and required by the Corporation for services actually rendered for examination and perfection of title, appraisal, and like necessary services. Any person, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Several Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ADAMS (when Mr. WAGNER's name was called). The junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is unavoidably detained on an important committee matter.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Utah, [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] are detained from the Senate on important public business.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on important committee work.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. They have a general pair.

I also announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who are paired on this question. If the Senator from Vermont were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay", and if the Senator from Utah were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

I also announce that on this question the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. If present and at liberty to vote, the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay", and the Senator from New York would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 32, as follows:

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR AND RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the first portion of the request nor have I objection to taking up unobjected bills on the calendar, but I think we should have a time fixed when we should desist from consideration of bills on the calendar. I suggest that hour be fixed at 5 o'clock this evening.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I modify my request accordingly, that until the hour of 5 o'clock the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, that the hour of 5 o'clock an executive session be held, after which the Senate shall take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that tomorrow I expect to call up the joint resolution extending the so-called "nuisance taxes" for another year.

THE CALENDAR—BILLS PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

STRENGTH AND DISTRIBUTION OF LINE OF NAVY

The bill (H. R. 5599) to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, personally I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill, but the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is necessarily absent, desired me to request, if the bill should be called, that it should go over. He left a memorandum with me asking that I request that the bill go over. In his absence I am compelled to respect his request.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I had very much hoped we could have the bill considered at this time. It has been on the calendar 4 or 5 weeks. It is an important measure, and has to do merely with a matter of administration in order that the line of the Navy may be increased commensurately with the present building program. I very much hope we may have the proposed legislation enacted at this time instead of having to make it a special order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah, at the request of the Senator from New York, has asked that the bill go over. It will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2213) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2481) to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States and to establish a national bituminous-coal reserve; to provide for the general welfare; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LOSSES OF COOPERATIVE MARKETING ASSOCIATIONS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) for the adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative marketing associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection to enable me to make a brief statement?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. FRAZIER. This is the same as a joint resolution which was passed last year. As originally introduced it applied only to grain cooperatives. I am perfectly willing, if it shall meet with the approval of those who object to the bill, to move to strike out, on page 1, line 9, the words " and/or cotton ", and the same words in lines 6 to 8, on page 2, so it shall apply only to grain cooperatives.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I have asked for information and for data respecting the measure. I expect to obtain it tomorrow, and I shall then be glad to join with the Senator in asking that the matter may be considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say he had offered an amendment?

Mr. FRAZIER. I should be willing to offer the amendment stated if it should meet with the approval of those who object to the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to going that far.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1460) to fix standards for till baskets, Climax baskets, round stave baskets, market baskets, drums, hampers, cartons, crates, boxes, barrels, and other containers for fruits or vegetables, to consolidate existing laws on this subject, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 2416) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. FRAZIER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that order of business 516, being the bill (S. 2416) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, may be indefinitely postponed. It is a proposed amendment to an act which has been declared to be unconstitutional.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1227) to authorize the issuance and sale to the United States of certain bonds of municipal governments in Puerto Rico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONG. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

The bill (S. 2228) to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges and agricultural experiment stations was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LONG subsequently said: Mr. President, can I persuade my friend from Utah [Mr. KING] to let us take up Senate bill 2228? It is merely a bill to provide for extension work in land-grant colleges.

Mr. KING. We passed a bill the other day giving large grants to the colleges, and I think the measures are parallel. Let the bill go over. I shall look into it.

FRANK FISHER

The bill (S. 1689) for the relief of Frank Fisher was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Frank Fisher, who was a member of Troop E, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 19th day of June 1884: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE LIBRARIES

The bill (S. 1861) to incorporate the National Association of State Libraries was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mabel R. Gillis, State librarian of California; Horace E. Flack, executive, department of legislative reference, Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. John Trotwood Moore, State librarian, Nashville, Tenn.; Margaret C. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 212) to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest by establishing an efficient credit system, through the use of the Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Reserve Banking System, and creating a Board of Agriculture to supervise the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1476) to provide for unemployment relief through development of mineral resources; to assist the development of privately owned mineral claims; to provide for the development of emergency and deficiency minerals; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The bill (S. 2313) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, with respect to farm prices was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONG. Let that go over.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, this bill should be indefinitely postponed. The subject matter was dealt with in another bill. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is this Senate bill 2313, introduced by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and Senate bill 2313 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 738) to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I am advised that there are some amendments to be offered to this bill. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

Mr. KING. I have been requested by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to have the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REPAIRS OR CHANGES TO NAVAL VESSELS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4760) to increase the statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes to naval vessels, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$600,000 for any two consecutive fiscal years" and insert "$450,000 for any 18 consecutive months", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the total appropriation expenditures for repairs or changes to a vessel of the Navy undertaken in a navy yard shall not exceed $450,000 for any 18 consecutive months: Provided, That if, during the overhaul of a vessel, the estimated cost for such overhaul having been approved as within the limits herein imposed, accomplishment of essential items will involve expenditures in excess of such limits, the Secretary of the Navy may, and he is hereby authorized, appropriation otherwise being available, to complete the work, and it shall thereupon be his duty to report to the Congress at the next regular session thereof the expenditures from each of the appropriations involving expenditures in excess of the authorized limit for such work: Provided further, That such parts of the acts of March 2, 1907, March 3, 1909, and August 29, 1916, contained in section 468, title 5, of the United States Code, as relate to statutory limit of expenditure for repairs or changes on naval vessels, are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill limiting expenditures for repairs or changes to naval vessels."

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 86) authorizing an annual appropriation of $10,000 to enable the United States to become a member of the Pan American Institute of Geography and History, authorizing the President to invite the institute to hold its second general assembly in the United States in 1935, and authorizing appropriation of $10,000 for expenses of such meeting, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2762) to exempt from taxation, under certain conditions, on the basis of reciprocity, official compensation of a consular officer, nondiplomatic representative, or employee of a foreign country was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF WATERS OF THE RIO GRANDE

The bill (H. R. 6453) to amend the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande", etc., as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have an international commission which has been functioning for many years, and I understand its jurisdiction would enable it to carry out the purposes of this measure. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 665, being House bill 6453. Objection was made, but I think the Senator making the objection is ready to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Texas a question. Does the bill relate to the waters of the Colorado River, or to the utilization of its waters in the United States or in Mexico?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the bill provides for a study preparatory to negotiations with Mexico with relation to the utilization of the waters of several international streams, including the Colorado, Rio Grande, the Tia Juana, and other streams. It does not bind the Government to anything, because a treaty must finally be made. The State Department asks for the legislation. The Committee on Foreign Relations, of which the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is a member, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is chairman, has given very careful consideration to the matter, and I think we have satisfied all parties that it is a meritorious measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the Senator's statement, and the information which I have obtained, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill. I desire, however, to make a very brief statement which is pertinent to the measure before us.

Many years ago there was created what is known as the "Mexican Boundary Commission", which was charged with the duty, among other things, of determining the rights of the United States and Mexico in and to the waters of the Rio Grande River and of fixing the boundaries of the two Republics. The boundaries of the Rio Grande, by reason of floods, underwent many changes so that it became necessary to redefine the boundaries of the two countries and also to determine the proprietary rights abutting on it. I have not been able to learn the reason for the delay attending the work of this Commission.

Years ago, when I was in the House, there was some discussion concerning its operations, and since I have been in the Senate references have been made to the lack of progress upon the part of the Commission in determining matters committed to its charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the words "The Secretary of State, with the approval of the" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "The"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "Mexico", to insert the words "or other Federal agency"; on line 7, after the word "information", to strike out the words "on which to base" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "which may be used as a basis for the negotiation of", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 13, 1924, entitled "An act providing for a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande below Fort Quitman, Tex., in cooperation with the United States of Mexico", as amended by the public resolution of March 3, 1927, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The President is hereby authorized to designate the American Commissioner on the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, or other Federal agency to cooperate with a representative or representatives of the Government of Mexico in a study regarding the equitable use of the waters of the lower Rio Grande and the lower Colorado and Tia Juana Rivers, for the purpose of obtaining information which may be used as a basis for the negotiation of a treaty with the Government of Mexico relative to the use of the waters of these rivers and to matters closely related thereto. On completion of such study the results shall be reported to the Secretary of State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, after the word "authorized", to strike out "(a)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 22, after the word "and", to strike out the words "Mexico or upon a stream or watercourse constituting or crossing the boundary between the two countries and upon the tributaries of any such stream or watercourse where international matters are involved; (b)" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "Mexico", so as to read:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of State, acting through the American Commissioner, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, is further authorized to conduct technical and other investigations relating to the defining, demarcation, fencing, or monumentation of the land and water boundary between the United States and Mexico, to flood control, water resources, conservation, and utilization of water, sanitation and prevention of pollution, channel rectification, and stabilization and other related matters upon the international boundary between the United States and Mexico.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from California if he does not have an amendment he desires to offer to the bill at this point?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, an amendment was prepared, and if the Senator from Texas will offer it, I shall be very glad.

Mr. CONNALLY. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered to the amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 3, line 2, after the word "Mexico", it is proposed to insert the words "and is authorized and empowered to construct, operate, and maintain any and all works or projects which are recommended to the President as a result of such investigations and are approved by him as necessary and proper."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that this is an amendment drawn for the purpose of protecting some municipality in California which is now using the water. I do not really understand the details of it; probably the Senator from California can explain it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the amendment was prepared by Mr. Stanley Reed, and is one intended for the protection of all those interested in the Mexican situation in that vicinity; that is all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from California whether it would afford any basis for any claim upon the part of Mexico or its nationals in or to the waters of the Colorado River? The Senator knows the upper basin States, of which Utah is one, are profoundly interested in the waters of the Colorado River, and desire to take all necessary steps to protect their rights.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, there is no such intention, and the amendment would have no such result, in my opinion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me state to the Senator from Utah the general purpose of the bill. It is true that the International Boundary Commission has for many years kept records about the flow of the streams, and things of that kind, which is merely preparatory to what we now propose to do by this bill, to providing for an intensive study of the situation with a view to making a treaty with Mexico, so as to settle the question with Mexico. The treaty, of course, will have to be ratified by the Senate. The treaty will have no force unless ratified. The purpose is to bring to a head the thing which the Senator has in mind.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall not object, but I wish it distinctly understood that Mexico has no right to any waters in the Colorado River, by treaty or otherwise, and that any water Mexico gets from the United States she gets by an act of grace on the part of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Texas regarding the work to be done by the International Boundary Commission. Is it not true that at each session the Congress passes some bill imposing duties on the International Boundary Commission?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know whether it does so at every session, but I know it is very often done. Let me say that the International Boundary Commission is now engaged in a very useful function imposed by the Congress, to wit, the absolute fixation of the boundary on the ground, by dikes and channels and other marks, and the International Boundary Commission has really been performing a very fine public service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as indicated, Utah and the upper-basin States are determined to take every necessary step to protect their rights, and the rights of their citizens, in and to the waters of the Colorado River. There have been intimations from time to time that Mexico laid claim to a part of the waters of the Colorado River and denied that all said waters had been appropriated and used in the United States. As Senators know, the waters of the Colorado River have their sources in Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona. These States and their inhabitants, as well as the States of California and Nevada, and their inhabitants, claim to have appropriated for beneficial use all the waters of the Colorado River. These States and their inhabitants would be unwilling to support any measure that would weaken or jeopardize their rights or would afford any basis for Mexico's claiming any of the waters of the Colorado River.

Several years ago I was informed by a United States ambassador that some conversations had been carried on between the United States and the Republic of Mexico regarding the Colorado River, and that the Mexican Government had indicated that it would abandon any claim which it might have in and to the waters of the Colorado River upon payment of a certain sum which was to be retained by the United States to apply in liquidation of claims of American nationals against Mexico and its nationals. I stated to him that so far as I was advised the States above referred to, as well as their residents, denied that Mexico had any rights in the Colorado River and were unwilling to compose differences if any existed between the two Republics based upon any theory that Mexico had any interest in the Colorado River or its tributaries.

I am sure that the States referred to would protest against any treaty that conceded any rights to the Mexican Government or its nationals in and to the waters of the Colorado River.

Mr. JOHNSON. I may say that I reecho the sentiments just expressed by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and also the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. There is no such purpose in this bill, I am perfectly assured; it is a bill which the people of Texas have sought here for a long period of time, and it has undergone the scrutiny of the State Department and of all the parties in interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 3, page 3, line 3, to insert the words "SEC. 3. (a) The President is further authorized"; in line 5, after the word "Mexico", to strike out the words "as contemplated in section 1 of this act, or which it may be appropriate to construct independently of a treaty with Mexico and for the repair, protection, maintenance, or completion of" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "and to repair, protect, maintain, or complete"; in line 10, after the words "construction or", to insert the word "those"; in line 14, after the word "and" where it first occurs, to strike out "(c)" and to insert in lieu thereof "(b)"; in line 16, after the word "Commissioner", to strike out the words "as the Secretary of State may promulgate" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "or any Federal agency as the President may cause to be promulgated"; in line 23, after the words "requirement as the", to strike out the words "Secretary of State" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "President", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. (a) The President is further authorized to construct any project or works which may be provided for in a treaty entered into with Mexico and to repair, protect, maintain, or complete works now existing or now under construction or those that may be constructed under the treaty provisions aforesaid; and to construct any project or works designed to facilitate compliance with the provisions of treaties between the United States and Mexico; and (b) to operate and maintain any project or works so constructed or, subject to such rules and regulations for continuing supervision by the said American Commissioner or any Federal agency as the President may cause to be promulgated, to turn over the operation and maintenance of such project or works to any Federal agency, or any State, county, municipality, district, or other political subdivision within which such project or works may be in whole or in part situated, upon such terms, conditions, and requirements as the President may deem appropriate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, to change the number of the section from "3" to "4"; on line 2, after the words "act, the", to strike out the words "Secretary of State" and to insert in lieu thereof "President, or any Federal agency he may designate"; on line 6, after the word "section", to strike out the figure "2" and to insert in lieu thereof the figure "3"; in line 19, after the words "discretion of the", to strike out the word "Secretary of State" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "President"; on page 5, in line 2, after "(c) to", to strike out the words "request the withdrawal" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "withdraw"; in line 4, after the words "States as", to strike out the words "the Secretary of State" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "he"; in line 5, after the words "necessary and", to strike out the words "upon receipt of any such request that", and to insert in lieu thereof the word "thereupon"; in line 14, after the words "removed by the", to strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior with the approval of the Secretary of State" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "President"; in line 16, after the word "regulations", to strike out the words "and, in his discretion, to delegate to the American Commissioner, International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, any of his functions and powers provided for herein", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. In order to carry out the provisions of this act, the President, or any Federal agency he may designate is authorized, (a) in his direction, to enter into agreements with any one or more of said political subdivisions, in connection with the construction of any project or works provided for in section 3 hereof, under the terms of which agreements there shall be furnished to the United States, gratuitously, except for the examination and approval of titles, the lands or easements in lands necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance in whole or in part of any such project or works, or for the assumption by one or more of any such political subdivisions making such agreement, of the operation and maintenance of such project or works in whole or in part upon the completion thereof: Provided, however, That when an agreement is reached that necessary lands or easements shall be provided by any such political subdivision and for the future operation and maintenance by it of a project or works or a part thereof, in the discretion of the President the title to such lands and easements for such projects or works need not be required to be conveyed to the United States but may be required only to be vested in and remain in such political subdivision; (b) to acquire by purchase, exercise of the power of eminent domain, or by donation, any real or personal property which may be necessary; (c) to withdraw from sale, public entry or disposal of such public lands of the United States as he may find to be necessary and thereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands so designated to be withdrawn from any public entry whatsoever, and from sale, disposal, location, or settlement under the mining laws or any other law relating to the public domain and shall cause such withdrawal to appear upon the records in the appropriate land office having jurisdiction over such lands, and such lands may be used for carrying out the purposes of this act: Provided, That any such withdrawal may subsequently be revoked by the President; and (d) to make or approve all necessary rules and regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 21, to change the number of the section from "4" to "5", and in line 23, after the words "provisions of", to strike out "section 1", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. Any moneys contributed by or received from the United Mexican States for the purpose of cooperating or assisting in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be available for expenditure in connection with any appropriation which may be made for the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WAIVER OF INDICTMENT IN CERTAIN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

The bill (S. 1313) providing for waiver of prosecution by indictment in certain criminal proceedings was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all prosecutions for capital or otherwise infamous crimes, in the courts of the United States and the courts of the District of Columbia, shall be by presentment or indictment of a grand jury unless the accused shall, in open court and in writing, and under such rules as the court may prescribe, expressly waive prosecution by presentment or indictment, and consent to the filing of an information against him. In the event of such waiver the prosecution shall, with the approval of the court, be by information, and any judgment rendered and sentence imposed in any such case shall have the same force and effect in all respects as if the same had been rendered and imposed pursuant to a prosecution by presentment or indictment.

PROMOTION OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 476) relating to promotions of civil-service employees was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Utah to state the last time this bill was reached on the calendar that he would look into it.

Mr. KING. To be frank with the Senator, I have not done so. I withhold the objection to permit an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator objected before, and I thought he said he did not intend to object again.

It is now contrary to the postal regulations for a civil-service employee to be promoted on political endorsement. I have on my desk the exact terms of the regulation which forbids it. This bill simply provides a method of enforcing that regulation.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the method?

Mr. BLACK. The method of enforcement is that when a civil-service employee is promoted he shall file an affidavit that he has not sought or obtained political recommendations for the promotion. The regulations now provide that he shall not seek or obtain such recommendations. This bill provides that he shall make an affidavit that he has not done so, and, if he has sought promotion in that way, contrary to the regulations, that he shall not be promoted.

If we are going to have promotion by political endorsement, of course, that is perfectly all right. Then let us do away with the regulation and the law, and not have them standing there continuously and constantly violated. If, on the contrary, we wish to have promotion in obedience to law and in obedience to regulation, this bill will provide it.

I have introduced the bill to see whether or not we wish to have real, genuine, honest promotion on merit in the civil service. If we do not wish to have promotion on merit, the fact should be known. Usually, everybody is for promotion on merit, until a law is proposed which provides for promotion on merit, and then somebody is against promotion on merit. I have introduced this measure to find out if everybody is for promotion on merit. If we are not, I favor abolishing the civil-service law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I understand that this bill requires that the employees referred to shall make affidavit that they have not had any political endorsements?

Mr. BLACK. That they have not sought political endorsements. That is exactly what the regulation says they shall not do.

Mr. CONNALLY. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not believe in making employees swear that they have not had any influence, because there is more influence inside the departments than anywhere else; and if we pass this bill, nobody but the pets of the bureau chiefs will ever be promoted.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know about that; but I do know, as I stated a while ago, that if we are not going to have promotion on merit we ought to abolish the law. I agree with the Senator that the pets of bureau chiefs ought not to be promoted, nor should those promoted be the pets of Senators or Representatives or political committeemen.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true; but if we should pass this bill, a Representative or a Senator would not have any influence at all, and all these good jobs would go to persons who stand in with the bureau chiefs.

I dislike exceedingly to object to the Senator's bill, because I usually agree with him; but I do not believe in laws of the Inquisition, bringing in men and putting thumbscrews on them and making them swear that they have not done this, that, or the other.

Mr. BLACK. Let me say to the Senator that if he can devise any other way besides what he calls a method of the Inquisition, I shall be glad to have him do so. This is not a method of the Inquisition; but let us be honest in the Senate, anyhow, and if we are not going to have promotion on merit, let us repeal the law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course no law is ever going to work to the extent of 100 percent, the civil-service law or any other; but if this bill should be passed, whenever the departments wished to give a man the "skiddoo", or discharge him, they would find some place where he had solicited somebody's endorsement, and then, having his affidavit that he had not done so, out he would go.

Mr. BLACK. Of course this bill would not prevent any employee from coming before a committee of the Senate, or from having a matter taken up; but I know, and everybody else knows, that, so far as civil service being real, genuine, honest civil service, it is an illusion and a farce.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I favor as soon as possible either having a real, genuine, honest civil service, based on integrity and based on promotion on merit, or repealing it and letting the country know that there is no civil service.

Mr. CONNALLY. Allow me to say to the Senator from Alabama that if he ever anticipates any such system as promotion only on merit, integrity, and character, he will have to wait until he goes up yonder, and walks on the golden streets and through the alabaster halls.

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the Senator that he may be correct. I myself think there is a very excellent civil-service system in England; but that is no reason why the Senate and the House should constantly stand in the way of enforcement legislation when it is written on the books that there shall be no political interference in promotion, and when the regulations of the Post Office Department so prescribe. We have had constant violations of all the laws in this country. We write them and then permit them to be disobeyed; and when we make an effort to have them obeyed we cannot get them obeyed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let me preface my remarks by saying that I should like to see the civil-service law enforced and observed. This difficulty, however, may arise: Someone might recommend an employee within the civil service for promotion, and blame might be attached to such employee when he had not invited the recommendation. I may cite an instance. Within the last 30 days relatives of an employee in one of the Government services wrote me requesting that I suggest certain action on the part of the department in behalf of the employee. Before taking the action I communicated with the individual, and he said that it was done without his knowledge, and that if it were done it would be done over his objection.

I will be frank. There is a regulation of the War Department which forbids an Army officer from seeking political influence to aid in his promotion. Frequently friends of an Army officer who regard him as in every respect worthy of promotion, desiring to help him, volunteer their suggestions to persons in political places; and it is entirely possible, under such conditions, that one who is in no way to blame would be censured and fail to secure recognition which he might otherwise obtain.

Of course, it would not happen often that someone would volunteer a recommendation without the consent of the person supposed to be benefited by it, but I know it has happened a number of times.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I may suggest to the Senator that the circumstances to which he refers would not be touched by this measure? It requires that the person himself must have sought the influence.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that fully.

Mr. BLACK. Which is usually the case, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. If someone's brother writes to an official asking for his brother's promotion, there is such a powerful presumption that it was done with the knowledge or consent of the employee that it would be very difficult for him to convince the official receiving the letter that the contrary was true, although in a particular case it might not be true.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I merely desire to state, in order to clear my record, that I not only observe this regulation of the Civil Service, but I never write a letter of recommendation for anyone for any office, showing how far ahead of my time I am.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator just goes ahead and appoints them, or tells someone that he has to appoint them, and if he does not, he will put him out of office. That is the way the Senator from Louisiana proceeds.

Mr. President, what is the status of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas objected, and the Chair was about to announce that the bill would go over and the clerk should announce the next bill on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1952) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HARRY H. A. LUDWIG

The bill (S. 1225) for the relief of Harry H. A. Ludwig, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of section 6 of the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof', approved July 3, 1926, as amended", approved May 29, 1930, the United States Civil Service Commission is authorized and directed to extend the benefits of such act to Harry H. A. Ludwig, formerly an employee of the War Department, Engineer Department at large, in the same manner and to the same extent as if application had been made within 3 months after the effective date of such act of May 29, 1930. The application of the said Harry H. A. Ludwig for the benefits of such act of May 29, 1930, shall be filed with the United States Civil Service Commission within 3 months from the date of the approval of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2405) to provide for a special clerk and liaison officer was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 373) for the relief of the American Surety Co., of New York, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LUTHER M. TURPIN AND AMANDA TURPIN

The bill (H. R. 805) for the relief of Luther M. Turpin and Amanda Turpin was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M. PACE

The bill (H. R. 2708) for the relief of James M. Pace was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we ought to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. BURKE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he will not withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I withhold the objection.

Mr. BURKE. This is a bill to credit the postmaster at Macomb, Ill., with approximately $21,000 covering stamps and cash which were stolen. Burglars with the most up-to-date burglary tools entered the post office in the dead of night and looted the safe. The Post Office Department recommends that payment be made. The House has passed the bill, and there seems to be no reason why this postmaster should not be credited on his accounts with the amount provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to recurring to the consideration of House bill 2708?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit James M. Pace, former postmaster at Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., in his accounts with the sum of $21,476.99, the amount of money and postage stamps lost in the burglary of the post office at Macomb, Ill., on April 5, 1929.

THOMAS J. GOULD

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 760) for the relief of John L. Hoffman, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARION SHOBER PHILLIPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1935) for the relief of Marion Shober Phillips, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,500", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Marion Shober Phillips the sum of $2,500, the payment of such sum being in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States by reason of injuries sustained by the said Phillips on May 27, 1934, while assisting Government officers under their orders, in seizing and destroying an illicit liquor distillery: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. W. TARRENCE

The bill (H. R. 2987) for the relief of E. W. Tarrence was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIO GRANDE BRIDGE, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 6630) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE AIR MAIL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6511) to amend the air mail laws and to authorize the extension of the Air Mail Service, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the following amendments are made to the act of June 12, 1934, as amended by the act of June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 933, 1243; 39 U. S. C. 469, Supp. VIII): Section 3 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for initial periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible or qualified under this act, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Comptroller General, who shall speedily determine the issue, and his decision shall be final: Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 33⅓ cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus one-tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile."

SEC. 2. Section 3 (c) is amended to read as follows:

"If, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant extensions of any route: Provided, That the aggregate mileage of all such extensions on any route in effect at one time shall not exceed 200 miles, and that the rate of pay for such extensions shall not be in excess of the rate fixed for the service thus extended."

SEC. 3. Section 3 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and as secondary routes. He shall designate as primary routes at least three transcontinental routes, with such termini as he may deem advisable, and, in addition thereto, such other routes as he may consider in the public interest, but no route less than 1,000 miles in length shall be designated as a primary route: Provided, That the present route from Seattle to San Diego may be held and regarded as other than a primary route: Provided further, That the eastern coastal route from Newark (or New York City, as the case may be) to Miami, Fla., and the southern transcontinental route from Boston via New York (or Newark, as the case may be) and Washington to Los Angeles, shall be designated as primary routes."

SEC. 4. Section 3 (f) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air mail routes or extend such routes in excess of an aggregate of 32,000 miles, and shall not pay for air mail transportation on such routes and extensions in excess of an annual aggregate of 45,000,000 airplane miles. Subject to the foregoing, the Postmaster General shall prescribe the number and frequency of schedules, intermediate regular stops, and time of departure of all planes carrying air mail, with due regard for the volume of mail carried over each route and for connecting schedules, and he may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize and notwithstanding any other provisions of this act compensate for a special schedule or an extra or emergency trip in addition to any regular schedule over air mail routes or portions thereof at the same mileage rate paid for regular schedules on the contract route or routes, or at a lesser rate if agreed to by the contractor and the Postmaster General, and he may utilize therefor any scheduled passenger or express flight of the contractor between the terminal points or over a portion of any route whenever the needs of the service may so require: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, upon application by an air mail contractor, authorize said contractor for his own convenience to transport air mail on any nonmail schedule or plane, with the understanding that the weights of mail so transported will be credited to regular mail schedules and no mileage compensation will be claimed therefor and the miles flown in such cases will not be computed in the annual aggregate of flown mileage authorized under this section."

SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 6 of such act of June 12, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. (a) The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed, after notice and hearing, to fix and determine by order, as soon as practicable and from time to time, the fair and reasonable rates of compensation within the limitations of this act for the transportation of air mail by airplane and the service connected therewith over each air mail route, and over each section thereof covered by a separate contract, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates of compensation, and to publish the same, which shall continue in force until changed by the said Commission after due notice and hearing, and so much of subsection (g) of section 3 of said act as is in conflict with this section is hereby repealed."

SEC. 6. Section 6 (e) of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows:

"In arriving at such determination the Commission shall disregard losses resulting, in the opinion of the Commission, from the unprofitable maintenance of nonmail schedules, in cases where the Commission may find that the gross receipts from such schedules fail to meet the additional operating expense occasioned thereby.

"In fixing and determining such rates, if it shall be contended or alleged by the holder of an air mail contract that the rate of compensation in force for the service involved is insufficient, the burden of establishing such insufficiency and the extent thereof shall be assumed by him. In no case shall the rates fixed and determined by the said Commission hereunder exceed the limits prescribed in section 3 (a) of this act."

SEC. 7. Section 6 (b) is amended to read as follows:

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed at least once in each calendar year from the date of the award of any contract to examine the books, accounts, contracts, and entire business records of the contracting company, to review the rates of compensation to be paid to the holder of such contract in order to be assured that no unreasonable profit is being derived or accruing therefrom and in order to fix just rates. In determining what may constitute an unreasonable profit the said Commission shall take into consideration the income derived from the operation of airplanes over the routes affected, and in addition to the requirements of section 4 hereof, shall take into consideration all forms of expenditures of said companies in order to ascertain whether or not the expenditures have been upon a fair and reasonable basis on the part of said company and whether or not the said company has paid more than a fair and reasonable market value for the purchase or rent of planes, engines, or any other types or kind, or class, or goods, or services, including spare parts of all kinds, and whether or not the air mail contracting company has purchased or rented any kind of goods, commodities, or services from any individuals who own stock in or are connected with the said contracting companies or has purchased such goods and services from any company or corporations in which any of the individuals employed by or owning stock in the air mail contracting company have any interest or from which such purchase or rents any of the employees or stockholders of air mail contracting company would be directly or indirectly benefited.

"Within 30 days after a decision has been reached by the Interstate Commerce Commission touching such profit a report of its results shall be made to the Postmaster General, to the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

SEC. 8. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 6 is amended to read as follows:

"Any contract (1) let, extended, or assigned pursuant to the provisions of this act, and in full force and effect on March 1, 1935, or (2) which may be let subsequent to such date pursuant to the provisions of this act and shall have been satisfactorily performed by the contractor during its full initial period, shall, from and after such date, or from and after the termination of its initial period, as the case may be, be continued in effect for an indefinite period, and compensation therefor, on or after March 1, 1935, during such period of indefinite continuance, shall be paid at the rate fixed by order of the Commission under this act, subject to such additional conditions and terms as the Commission may prescribe, upon recommendation of the Postmaster General, which shall be consistent with the requirements and limitations contained in section 1 of this act; but any contract so continued in effect may be terminated for cause by the Commission upon 60 days' notice, upon such hearing and notice thereof to interested parties as the Commission may determine to be reasonable; and may also be terminated, in whole or in part, by mutual agreement of the Postmaster General and the contractor, or by the contractor at its option at 60 days' notice, or by the Postmaster General at his option at 60 days' notice."

SEC. 9. Section 7 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of, or thereafter to hold an air mail contract, (1) if, at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract, such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has) a member, officer, or director, or an employee performing general managerial duties, that is, an individual who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails: Provided, That whenever required by the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission the bidder shall submit an affidavit executed by the bidder, or by such of its officers, directors, or general managerial employees as the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission may designate, sworn to before an officer authorized and empowered to administer oaths, stating in such affidavit that the affiant has not entered nor proposed to enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails, nor made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person to bid or not to bid for any mail contract, or (2) if it pays any officer, director, or regular employee compensation in any form, whether as salary, bonus, commission, or otherwise, at a rate exceeding $17,500 per year for full time: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any such officer, director, or regular employee to draw a salary of more than $17,500 per year from any air mail contractor, or a salary from any other company if such salary from any company makes his total compensation more than $17,500 per year."

SEC. 10. Section 13 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. It shall be a condition upon the holding of any air mail contract that the rate of compensation and the working conditions and relations for all pilots and other employees of the holder of such contract shall conform to decisions heretofore or hereafter made by the National Labor Board, or its successor in authority, notwithstanding any limitation as to the period of its effectiveness included in any such decision heretofore rendered. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of any such employees by collective bargaining to obtain higher rates of compensation or more favorable working conditions and relations."

SEC. 11. Section 15, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. After June 30, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts for carrying air mail on a primary route shall be awarded or hold any contract for carrying air mail on any other primary route, nor on more than three additional routes other than primary routes. In case one person holds several contracts covering different sections of one air mail route as designated by the Postmaster General, such several contracts shall be counted as one contract for the purpose of the preceding sentence. It shall be unlawful for air mail contractors, competing in parallel routes, to merge or to enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership. After June 30, 1935, no air mail contractor shall be allowed to maintain passenger or express service off the line of his air mail route which in any way competes with passenger or express service available upon another air mail route, except that off-line competitive service which has been regularly maintained for at least 4 months next preceding July 1, 1935, and such seasonal schedules as may have been regularly maintained during the year prior to July 1, 1935, may be continued if restricted to the number of schedules and to the stops scheduled and in effect during such period or season: Provided, however, That if the Interstate Commerce Commission, after due notice to the Postmaster General and all parties in interest and a hearing thereon, shall be of the opinion that the public interest so requires, it may by order require the suspension or the decrease or may permit an increase in the frequency of such schedules.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized to hear any complaint filed by the Postmaster General or any interested air mail contractor setting forth that the general transport business or earnings upon an air mail route are being adversely affected by any off-line flights or extra schedules not provided for in the original contract, nor authorized by the Postmaster General, of another air mail contractor or for any alleged unfair practice by another air mail contractor. Upon the filing of such complaint the Commission shall give personal notice to the person complained of, inquire fully into the subject matter of the allegations; and if the Commission shall find such competition or practice, or any part thereof, to be unfair, or that such competitive service, in whole or in part, is not reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, then the Commission may enter an order requiring such air mail contractor to discontinue or restrict such competition or practice in accordance with the findings and order of the Commission, and the compensation of such air mail contractor shall be withheld while it continues to violate such order."

Mr. BULKLEY. I desire to ask that the bill go over, but I will withhold the objection temporarily.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, there are several perfecting amendments which I wish to offer for the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Tennessee on behalf of the Senator from Vermont will be stated in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 9, line 16, after the word "route" and the semicolon, it is proposed to strike out the following provisos:

Provided, That the present route from Seattle to San Diego may be held and regarded as other than a primary route: Provided further, That the eastern coastal route from Newark (or New York City, as the case may be) to Miami, Fla., and the southern transcontinental route from Boston via New York (or Newark, as the case may be) and Washington to Los Angeles, shall be designated as primary routes.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That the present routes from Seattle to San Diego and from Boston via Newark (or New York City, as the case may be) to Miami, Fla., may be held and regarded as other than primary routes: Provided further, That the southern transcontinental route from Boston via New York (or Newark, as the case may be) and Washington to Los Angeles, shall be designated as a primary route.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I understand it is proposed to strike out all the remainder of section 3 after the words "primary route" in line 16?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I could not hear the amendment as it was read by the clerk. Does the amendment make any change?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever.

Mr. KING. I should like to have some explanation of this bill. It is a very important one. I do not know whether under the 5-minute rule we ought to take it up for consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will let us take up amendments which have been offered by certain Senators, I shall make an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment.

The next amendment to the committee amendment was, on page 14, line 19, after the word "contractor", to strike out the comma and the words "or by the contractor at its option at 60 days' notice, or by the Postmaster General at his option at 60 days' notice."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the committee amendment was, on page 17, line 10, after the word "maintained", to strike out "for at least 4 months next preceding" and to insert "prior to."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the amendment was, on page 17, line 12, after the word "maintained", to strike out "during the year."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 16, after the comma. Should not the words "on petition of any contractor interested or on its own initiative" be inserted there?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will send those words to the clerk he can state the amendment, and we can act on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 17, line 16, after the word "Commission", it is proposed to insert "on petition of any contractor interested or on its own initiative."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. McKELLAR to the committee amendment, was, on page 17, line 20, after the word "schedules", to insert "and after such hearing it may permit an air-mail contractor to maintain passenger or express service off the line of his air-mail route whether it competes with passenger or express service available upon another air-mail route or not."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the amendment was, on page 18, line 1, after the word "in", to strike out "the original contract" and to insert "this section."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the amendment was, on page 18, line 10, after the word "necessity", to insert "and is not permitted by this section."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will state for the benefit of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and for the benefit of other Senators that there was considerable opposition manifested to this bill by a number of Senators who cooperated with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and we have finally agreed upon amendments which we think are satisfactory. The bill is satisfactory to the Department, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator let the bill go over until we have the next call of the calendar. I have had some correspondence about it and should like to check up on the effect of the amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator permit it to be called up tomorrow sometime? It has to go back to the House for consideration of the Senate amendments. Would the Senator be willing to have it passed and then, if he finds he desires reconsideration for any reason, I should be glad to agree to that.

Mr. BULKLEY. I should prefer that it go over until tomorrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, referring to Order of Business No. 718, being the bill (H. R. 6511) to amend the air mail laws and to authorize the extension of the Air Mail Service, which went over until tomorrow at the request of the Senator from Ohio, I ask unanimous consent that the bill as amended today may be printed in the RECORD, so that all Senators may have an opportunity to examine it and see that it is all right.

There being no objection, the bill, as amended, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following amendments are made to the act of June 12, 1934, as amended by the act of June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 933, 1243; 39 U. S. C. 469, Supp. VIII): Section 3 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for initial periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible or qualified under this act, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Comptroller General, who shall speedily determine the issue, and his decision shall be final: Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 33⅓ cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus one-tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile."

SEC. 2. Section 3 (c) is amended to read as follows:

"If, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant extensions of any route: Provided, That the aggregate mileage of all such extensions on any route in effect at one time shall not exceed 200 miles, and that the rate of pay for such extensions shall not be in excess of the rate fixed for the service thus extended."

SEC. 3. Section 3 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and as secondary routes. He shall designate as primary routes at least three transcontinental routes, with such termini as he may deem advisable, and, in addition thereto, such other routes as he may consider in the public interest, but no route less than 1,000 miles in length shall be designated as a primary route: Provided, That the present routes from Seattle to San Diego and from Boston via Newark (or New York City, as the case may be) to Miami, Fla., may be held and regarded as other than primary routes: Provided further, That the southern transcontinental route from Boston via New York (or Newark, as the case may be) and Washington to Los Angeles, shall be designated as a primary route."

SEC. 4. Section 3 (f) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air mail routes or extend such routes in excess of an aggregate of 32,000 miles, and shall not pay for air mail transportation on such routes and extensions in excess of an annual aggregate of 45,000,000 airplane-miles. Subject to the foregoing, the Postmaster General shall prescribe the number and frequency of schedules, intermediate regular stops, and time of departure of all planes carrying air mail, with due regard for the volume of mail carried over each route and for connecting schedules, and he may under such regulations as he may prescribe authorize and notwithstanding any other provisions of this act compensate for a special schedule or an extra or emergency trip in addition to any regular schedule over air mail routes or portions thereof at the same mileage rate paid for regular schedules on the contract route or routes, or at a lesser rate if agreed to by the contractor and the Postmaster General, and he may utilize therefor any scheduled passenger or express flight of the contractor between the terminal points or over a portion of any route whenever the needs of the service may so require: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, upon application by an air mail contractor, authorize said contractor for his own convenience to transport air mail on any nonmail schedule or plane, with the understanding that the weights of mail so transported will be credited to regular mail schedules and no mileage compensation will be claimed therefor and the miles flown in such cases will not be computed in the annual aggregate of flown mileage authorized under this section."

SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 6 of such act of June 12, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. (a) The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed, after notice and hearing, to fix and determine by order, as soon as practicable and from time to time, the fair and reasonable rates of compensation within the limitations of this act for the transportation of air mail by airplane and the service connected therewith over each air mail route, and over each section thereof covered by a separate contract, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates of compensation, and to publish the same, which shall continue in force until changed by the said Commission after due notice and hearing, and so much of subsection (g) of section 3 of said act as is in conflict with this section is hereby repealed."

SEC. 6. Section 6 (e) of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows:

"In arriving at such determination the Commission shall disregard losses resulting, in the opinion of the Commission, from the unprofitable maintenance of nonmail schedules, in cases where the Commission may find that the gross receipts from such schedules fail to meet the additional operating expense occasioned thereby.

"In fixing and determining such rates, if it shall be contended or alleged by the holder of an air mail contract that the rate of compensation in force for the service involved is insufficient, the burden of establishing such insufficiency and the extent thereof shall be assumed by him. In no case shall the rates fixed and determined by the said Commission hereunder exceed the limits prescribed in section 3 (a) of this act."

SEC. 7. Section 6 (b) is amended to read as follows:

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed at least once in each calendar year from the date of the award of any contract to examine the books, accounts, contracts, and entire business records of the contracting company, to review the rates of compensation to be paid to the holder of such contract in order to be assured that no unreasonable profit is being derived or accruing therefrom and in order to fix just rates. In determining what may constitute an unreasonable profit the said Commission shall take into consideration the income derived from the operation of airplanes over the routes affected, and in addition to the requirements of section 4 hereof, shall take into consideration all forms of expenditures of said companies in order to ascertain whether or not the expenditures have been upon a fair and reasonable basis on the part of said company and whether or not the said company has paid more than a fair and reasonable market value for the purchase or rent of planes, engines, or any other types or kind, or class, or goods, or services, including spare parts of all kinds, and whether or not the air mail contracting company has purchased or rented any kind of goods, commodities, or services from any individuals who own stock in or are connected with the said contracting companies or has purchased such goods and services from any company or corporations in which any of the individuals employed by or owning stock in the air mail contracting company have any interest or from which such purchase or rents any of the employees or stockholders of air mail contracting company would be directly or indirectly benefited.

"Within 30 days after a decision has been reached by the Interstate Commerce Commission touching such profit a report of its results shall be made to the Postmaster General, to the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

SEC. 8. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 6 is amended to read as follows:

"Any contract (1) let, extended, or assigned pursuant to the provisions of this act, and in full force and effect on March 1, 1935, or (2) which may be let subsequent to such date pursuant to the provisions of this act and shall have been satisfactorily performed by the contractor during its full initial period, shall, from and after such date, or from and after the termination of its initial period, as the case may be, be continued in effect for an indefinite period, and compensation therefor, on or after March 1, 1935, during such period of indefinite continuance, shall be paid at the rate fixed by order of the Commission under this act, subject to such additional conditions and terms as the Commission may prescribe, upon recommendation of the Postmaster General, which shall be consistent with the requirements and limitations contained in section 1 of this act; but any contract so continued in effect may be terminated for cause by the Commission upon 60 days' notice, upon such hearing and notice thereof to interested parties as the Commission may determine to be reasonable; and may also be terminated, in whole or in part, by mutual agreement of the Postmaster General and the contractor.

SEC. 9. Section 7 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of, or thereafter to hold an air mail contract, (1) if, at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract, such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has) a member, officer, or director, or an employee performing general managerial duties, that is, an individual who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails: Provided, That whenever required by the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission the bidder shall submit an affidavit executed by the bidder, or by such of its officers, directors, or general managerial employees as the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission may designate, sworn to before an officer authorized and empowered to administer oaths, stating in such affidavit that the affiant has not entered nor proposed to enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails, nor made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person to bid or not to bid for any mail contract, or (2) if it pays any officer, director, or regular employee compensation in any form, whether as salary, bonus, commission, or otherwise, at a rate exceeding $17,500 per year for full time: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any such officer, director, or regular employee to draw a salary of more than $17,500 per year from any air mail contractor, or a salary from any other company if such salary from any company makes his total compensation more than $17,500 per year."

SEC. 10. Section 13 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. It shall be a condition upon the holding of any air mail contract that the rate of compensation and the working conditions and relations for all pilots and other employees of the holder of such contract shall conform to decisions heretofore or hereafter made by the National Labor Board, or its successor in authority, notwithstanding any limitation as to the period of its effectiveness included in any such decision heretofore rendered. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of any such employees by collective bargaining to obtain higher rates of compensation or more favorable working conditions and relations."

SEC. 11. Section 15, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. After June 30, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts for carrying air mail on a primary route shall be awarded or hold any contract for carrying air mail on any other primary route, nor on more than three additional routes other than primary routes. In case one person holds several contracts covering different sections of one air mail route as designated by the Postmaster General, such several contracts shall be counted as one contract for the purpose of the preceding sentence. It shall be unlawful for air mail contractors, competing in parallel routes, to merge or to enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership. After June 30, 1935, no air mail contractor shall be allowed to maintain passenger or express service off the line of his air mail route which in any way competes with passenger or express service available upon another air mail route, except that off-line competitive service which has been regularly maintained prior to July 1, 1935, and such seasonal schedules as may have been regularly maintained prior to July 1, 1935, may be continued if restricted to the number of schedules and to the stops scheduled and in effect during such period or season: Provided, however, That if the Interstate Commerce Commission, on petition of any contractor interested or on its own initiative after due notice to the Postmaster General and all parties in interest and a hearing thereon, shall be of the opinion that the public interest so requires, it may by order require the suspension or the decrease or may permit an increase in the frequency of such schedules and after such hearing it may permit an air mail contractor to maintain passenger or express service off the line of his air mail route, whether it competes with passenger or express service available upon another air mail route or not.'

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized to hear any complaint filed by the Postmaster General or any interested air mail contractor setting forth that the general transport business or earnings upon an air mail route are being adversely affected by any off-line flights or extra schedules not provided for in this section, nor authorized by the Postmaster General, of another air mail contractor or for any alleged unfair practice by another air mail contractor. Upon the filing of such complaint the Commission shall give personal notice to the person complained of, inquire fully into the subject matter of the allegations; and if the Commission shall find such competition or practice, or any part thereof, to be unfair, or that such competitive service, in whole or in part, is not reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity and is not permitted by this section, then the Commission may enter an order requiring such air mail contractor to discontinue or restrict such competition or practice in accordance with the findings and order of the Commission, and the compensation of such air mail contractor shall be withheld while it continues to violate such order."

PRACTICE BEFORE DEPARTMENTS BY NAVAL AND RESERVE CORPS OFFICERS

The bill (S. 1607) to amend section 109 of the Criminal Code so as to except officers of the Naval and Marine Corps

Reserve not on active duty from certain of its provisions was announced as next in order.

Mr. NYE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, may I make an explanation before the bill is passed over?

Mr. NYE. Very well.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The substance of the proposed legislation is that naval and marine officers who are not on active duty shall not be subject to the criminal statutes which prohibit them from practicing before the Government departments. The question arose, and there was a decision that Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers not on active duty had no right or authority to practice before the departments on account of the general statute, which provides that officers may not prosecute claims before Government departments. The object of the bill is to suspend that feature of the statute insofar as it applies to Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers not on the active list.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that the law now applies only to Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers, but does not apply to Reserve officers of the Army.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is correct.

Mr. McGILL. The bill would place Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers on exactly the same basis as are Reserve officers of the Army.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, it seems to me that the gentleman who rendered the decision did not know what the law was or he would not have made the ruling which he did. Two wrongs do not make a right. The bar should never have been let down with reference to Reserve officers of the Army.

Before the committee investigating the munitions industry we discovered that Reserve officers—in one case a Reserve officer of the Army—were actually contracting with the War Department for the sale of various commodities of war. In the particular case it happened to be poison gases. They were not only doing that but they were sending out catalogs to foreign countries trying to sell poison gases to them and volunteering to go to foreign countries to establish poison-gas factories and to train foreign armies and navies in the use of poison gases, and signing themselves, for instance, "Colonel, Reserve, United States Army." The catalogues contained pictures of the president of the company, the vice president of the company, and other leading officials of the company, all in the uniform of the Reserve Corps.

I say not only that Reserve officers ought not to be permitted to practice before the departments, either of the Army or the Navy, but they should not be permitted to contract with Government departments. Instead of making the regulations more lenient, we should make them more stringent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

Mr. NYE. Yes; let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2590) for the relief of James E. McDonald was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEWIS WORTHY AND DENNIS O. PENN

The bill (S. 1980) for the relief of Lewis Worthy and Dennis O. Penn was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, to Lewis Worthy, private (1599113), $211.96, and Dennis O. Penn, private (1599044), $213.97, being amount of salary deducted on account of general court-martial sentences June 1918: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

NAVAL WARRANT OFFICERS' RETIRED PAY

The bill (S. 2460) to amend the act of June 6, 1924, entitled "An act to amend in certain particulars the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes", was announced as next in order.

Mr. NYE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, may I make a brief explanation before the bill goes over? The purport of the bill is that an enlisted man who has been serving in the Navy upon retirement may have a warrant officer's retirement pay. Under the law he can leave the Navy, enlist in the Army, and go through that formality and be retired as a warrant officer as specified in the bill. The bill is to relieve the man who is retiring from the necessity of the perfunctory act of enlisting in the Army and being retired as a warrant officer. He can enlist and retire as a warrant officer through the Army in that way. The bill is merely to do an act of justice for the men and remove all the trouble and necessity for that procedure under the present law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

FOREIGN DECORATIONS FOR NAVAL AND MARINE CORPS OFFICERS

The bill (S. 1975) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, diplomas, decorations, and photographs as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NYE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to offer a perfecting amendment, an amendment containing the names of officers and enlisted men of the Army who are in the same position as the officers of the Navy and Marine Corps mentioned in the bill, and to have the amendment printed in the RECORD and pending?

Mr. NYE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the amendment proposed by Mr. SHEPPARD was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

That the following-named officers and enlisted men of the United States Army are hereby authorized to accept such medals, orders, diplomas, decorations, and photographs as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] the bill will be passed over.

ALLOWANCES FOR ENLISTED MEN'S QUARTERS AND SUBSISTENCE

The bill (S. 1976) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes", approved April 15, 1926, so as to equalize the allowances for quarters and subsistence of enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. NYE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is his objection to the bill?

Mr. NYE. I have not had an opportunity to give the bill the consideration which I desire to give it. I have already called attention to some amendments which should be offered before this bill and others following it on the calendar are approved. I am not prepared at the moment to offer the amendments.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The bill has been pending on the calendar since May 24, just 1 month today. I respectfully ask the Senator if he thinks it would not be proper for him to state his objections? I think he should state what his objections are to the bill. It is not sufficient merely to say "I object to the bill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The Senate is proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider unobjected bills of the calendar. The Senator from North Dakota has objected, and the bill will be passed over on his objection.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2257) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide additional pay for personnel of the United States Navy assigned to duty on submarines and to diving duty", to include officers assigned to duty at submarine training tanks and diving units, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT FOR INCITING DISOBEDIENCE IN MILITARY FORCES

The bill (S. 2253) to make better provision for the government of the military and naval forces of the United States by the suppression of attempts to incite the members thereof to disobedience was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. This is a short bill. The War Department and the Navy Department both favor it. They have asked that the bill be introduced and passed.

The bill simply provides that it shall be unlawful to circularize among the enlisted personnel of the Army and the Navy matter which tells them not to obey their officers. A number of pamphlets are in my office—I am sorry they are not here—which have been sent around the fleet. The pamphlets say that the men should not obey their officers; that they are all brothers; and call attention to several instances where troops in other countries have mutinied against their officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have read some of those pamphlets, and to my mind they are very, very bad. This bill ought by all means to be passed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is the Senator able to tell me any reason why these regulations should be applied to the Army and Navy and not to the C. C. C. camps? For instance, I have in my possession a paper published at Maryville, in the State of Missouri, by one of the C. C. C. camps under the editorship of the commanding officer of the camp, a Lieutenant Taylor, which is devoted almost exclusively to a laudation of Mr. Lenin and very fulsome praise of the Soviet institutions.

Mr. KING. He ought to be court-martialed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have seen the pamphlet to which the Senator refers, and I should be very glad to support such a bill affecting the C. C. C. camps.

Mr. McKELLAR. So should I.

Mr. CLARK. However, I certainly am not going to object to the pending bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. This bill came here at the instance of the War Department and the Navy Department. It simply forbids and imposes a penalty for the act of circularizing information which incites or advises men in the Army or Navy not to obey their officers. It is a short bill, and I hope it will be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever advises, counsels, urges, or solicits any member of the military or naval forces of the United States, including the reserves thereof, to disobey the laws or regulations governing such military or naval forces, or whoever publishes or distributes any book, pamphlet, paper, print, article, letter, or other writing which advises, counsels, urges, or solicits any member of such military or naval force of the United States to disobey the laws or regulations governing such military or naval forces, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 2. Any book, pamphlet, paper, print, article, letter, or other writing of the character described in section 1 of this act may be taken from any house or other place in which it may be found, or from any person in whose possession it may be, under a search warrant issued pursuant to the provisions of title XI of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 228; U. S. C., title 18, ch. 18).

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2582) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG, Mr. CLARK (and other Senators). Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS FOR NEEDY BLIND PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (H. R. 5711) to provide pensions for needy blind persons of the District of Columbia and authorizing appropriations therefor was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. F. LUEDERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1084) for the relief of W. F. Lueders, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after "$5,595", to strike out "as compensation" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. F. Lueders, of San Antonio, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,595 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for permanent injuries received and expenses incurred by reason of having been struck by a United States Army ambulance while riding in his own car in the city of San Antonio, Tex., on the 12th day of May 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contarary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. W. M'PETERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1735) for the relief of the estate of W. W. McPeters, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$2,500", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of W. W. McPeters, late of Madison County, N. C., the sum of $2,500, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for the death of such W. W. McPeters, who was fatally injured through the negligence of employees of the Civil Works Administration while said employees were engaged in the construction of a road in Madison County, N. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1152) relating to the carriage of goods by sea was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) for designation of a street to be known as "Missouri Avenue" was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 916) to carry into effect the decision of the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in French spoliation was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GRADING AND CLASSIFICATION OF CLERKS IN FOREIGN SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 6504) to amend an act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America and providing compensation therefor" was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BLANCHE L. GRAY

The bill (S. 2818) for the relief of Blanche L. Gray was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Blanche L. Gray, wife of Paul Judson Gray, late third Secretary, Department of State, the sum of $3,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4901) to authorize appropriation to pay the annual share of the United States as an adhering member of the International Council of Scientific Unions and associated unions was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6673) providing for an annual appropriation to meet the share of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee on Aerial Legal Experts and for participation in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and the commissions established by that committee was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA

The bill (H. R. 7909) to amend the act creating a United States Court for China and prescribing the title thereof, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this subject matter is under consideration by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, which is giving it special attention. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether this bill ought not to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Perhaps it should be. It involves the same subject matter, though not the identical bill.

Mr. KING. I shall not make the request, but it seems to me the bill ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HATCH subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to House bill 7909, to amend the act creating a United States Court for China and prescribing the title thereof. A similar bill—in fact, an identical one—is now pending before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that House bill 7909 be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will recur to House bill 7909; and the question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 182) to provide for membership of the United States in the Pan American Institute of Geography and History; and to authorize the President to extend an invitation for the next general assembly of the institute to meet in the United States in 1935, and to provide an appropriation for expenses thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

RECONSTRUCTION OF ROADS AND BRIDGES IN FLOOD AREAS

The bill (S. 2551) to make immediately available the unexpended balances of certain appropriations for the construction or reconstruction of roads and bridges in the flood areas of Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Kentucky, and Alabama, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LONG subsequently said: Mr. President, I objected to Senate bill 2551, not understanding its purpose. I have no objection to the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to revert to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That the unexpended balances of the road and bridge flood relief appropriations for the State of Alabama contained in the First Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1930, for the State of Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Missouri contained in the act approved February 28, 1929 (45 Stat. 1381), and for the State of Kentucky contained in the act approved May 16, 1928 (45 Stat. 570), shall be and remain available until June 30, 1936, and may be expended for the purposes for which appropriated without being matched by like sums from State funds and without regard to any restrictions or limitations contained in the acts making or authorizing such appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2583) establishing certain commodity divisions in the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. LONG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ANNUAL LEAVE OF AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES STATIONED ABROAD

The bill (S. 810) equalizing annual leave of employees of the Department of Agriculture stationed outside the continental limits of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, a measure similar to this has twice passed the Senate. This bill merely provides that persons representing the Department of Agriculture in various places such as Panama, Puerto Rico, Alaska, and Hawaii shall have equal annual leave. In one place the employees have 30 days' leave per year, and the leave accumulates. In Panama, for example, the employees have 15 days' leave. It takes a week to come from there to this country and a week to return and by that time their vacation has expired. The Senate has twice passed a similar bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That employees of the Department of Agriculture assigned to permanent duty outside the continental limits of the United States, including those in Alaska, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leave of absence not to exceed 30 days in any 1 year, which leave may, in exceptional and meritorious cases where an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed 30 days additional in any 1 year; and, if any such employees shall elect to postpone the taking of any or all of the annual leave to which he may be entitled hereunder, he may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, subject to the interests of the public service, be allowed to take at one time unused annual leave which may have accumulated within not to exceed 4 years, and be paid at the rate prevailing at the time the leave is taken.

SEC. 2. All acts or parts of acts in conflict with the foregoing are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2689) for the relief of the city of New York was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1389) to amend section 7, title I, of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

APPEALS FROM DISTRICT PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

The bill (H. R. 3462) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913", and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall be glad to make a brief explanation of this bill if the Senator desires it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Maryland, let me say that at a recent meeting a number of the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia stated they understood that this bill, after it had been considered by the subcommittee, should be considered by the full committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct about that, except that he probably has forgotten that when he turned over the bill to the subcommittee he gave us one particular section to reconcile, and said that if we could reconcile it we were authorized to report the bill. On behalf of the committee and both sides of the controversy we finally agreed on the amendment which has been reported, and the committee felt bound to report the bill to the Senate; but it had no idea of going over the head of the full committee in doing so.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that representatives of the District of Columbia came before the committee and said that the differences had not been reconciled, and that they were not in agreement with the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure the gentleman who told the Senator that has misinformed him, because the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] sat with me on the subcommittee, and we sat one whole afternoon; and finally, when we worked out this amendment, both sides accepted it. It was accepted on behalf of the District of Columbia by Mr. Prettyman and Mr. Roberts, and accepted on behalf of the utilities by someone else. I have forgotten who represented them. I have no objection to the bill going over, however, if the Senator desires.

Mr. KING. That was my understanding; but Mr. Roberts came before the committee the other day and stated that he did not agree to what was done.

Mr. TYDINGS. The amendment which Mr. Roberts desired, the subcommittee never would have reported, and there would have been no use in holding a hearing, because Mr. Roberts wished to have a case go up to the court of appeals so that it could be decided only one way, no matter what the court of appeals found the record to be, and the subcommittee did not feel that that was fair.

Mr. KING. In the light of the objection made by Mr. Roberts, I feel constrained to ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the hour of 5 o'clock has arrived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the call of the calendar will be suspended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the next time the calendar is called for the consideration of unobjected bills we shall begin with the next order following the one acted upon at this call.

Mr. LONG. Is not that irregular?

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. LONG. The reason for my inquiry is that I am interested in some bills that were passed over this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. LONG. I object to that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object. There are a great many bills on the calendar. As the Senator knows, they run to many hundreds of numbers beyond the measure we have just reached, and on several previous calls of the calendar we have begun at the beginning, we have gotten about this far through the calendar, when the call has had to be suspended, and there has been no opportunity for the consideration of bills further down the calendar.

Mr. LONG. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that at the next call of the calendar the clerk shall begin the call of Calendar No. 839, the next bill on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think that is a very fair request, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that involves, I presume, the understanding that we are to consider unobjected bills on the calendar?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I said unobjected bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, in compliance with the order made earlier in the day.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BYRD, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of John Galleher to be State director, National Emergency Council, for Virginia.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alice L. Woolman to be postmaster at Coweta, Okla.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that this nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William E. Emick to be postmaster at Temple City, Calif.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that this nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters in Illinois.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that all the other nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 25, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 24 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

POSTMASTERS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 24, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for all the comforting and loving ministries of life, for the promise of each day, for the happiness of home, for friends whom we trust, whose presence is freshness and a sweet pulse of peace. We are most grateful for the revelation of Thy supreme sacrifice which woos us from our selfishness. At Thy command the mightiest powers of earth rise and fall; yet to Thee no falling tear is missed. O Holy Presence, keep aglow the lamps of devotion on the altars of our hearts. We commend unto Thee our President, our Speaker, and the Congress. Help us all to go forward to the tasks of the day in faith, hope, and the spirit of brotherly love; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 21, 1935, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7652. An act to authorize the furnishing of steam from the central heating plant to the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5917. An act to provide for the appointment of 2 additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, 1 additional judge for the circuit court, ninth judicial circuit, and an additional district judge for the eastern district of Virginia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. KING, Mr. MCADOO, and Mr. BORAH to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Texas Centennial Exposition and celebrations to be held in the State of Texas during the years 1935 and 1936, and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate therein, and for other purposes.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, and I think under the circumstances probably I will have to object, I would like to know what the program is for tomorrow and the succeeding 2 or 3 days?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that probably the merchant-marine bill will come up tomorrow under a rule.

Mr. SNELL. And that will take 2 days or such a matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot state.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If we bring in a rule for the consideration of the merchant-marine bill and take it up tomorrow, we hope that we will finish it tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. And what do you expect to follow that?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think we have in mind the public-utility holding bill or the T. V. A.

Mr. SNELL. The public-utility holding bill has not been reported yet, and I think we ought to have a reasonable notice before that is taken up.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the business before the House today is the District of Columbia matters, and it will probably not take more than 2 hours. It seems to me that gentlemen who desire to make extra speeches might get in this afternoon rather than interfere with business tomorrow. We have some time on our hands this afternoon, and I do not feel that they should interfere with important business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SNELL. In view of the statement made by the Chairman of the Rules Committee the other day, I object.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I shall have to object.

Mr. DIES. May I have 1 minute?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas for 1 minute?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, my beloved friend and distinguished colleague, Hon. O. H. CROSS, has formally announced that he will not be a candidate for reelection and that he intends to retire from public life. This announcement came as a surprise and keen disappointment to his many thousands of devoted and admiring friends throughout the country. At the conclusion of his present term he will have served in Congress 8 years. There is no Member of this distinguished body more highly esteemed or more universally loved than Mr. CROSS. By his kind and gentle ways, his tolerant understanding of the frailties of others, his rugged and honest character, and his keen sense of humor he has endeared himself to everyone of his associates, and his retirement will not only be a distinct loss to his associates in Congress but also to his district and the Nation. Few men have reached his period in life with so many achievements to their credit as our beloved friend. Not only was he successful in private life and in his pursuit of the legal profession but he has the unique distinction of never having been defeated for any public office to which he aspired. This is a tribute to his sterling qualities.

Mr. CROSS is essentially a self-made man. He began the practice of law without any money and he went through the trying experiences which confront every young lawyer who is compelled to rely upon his own resources. I shall always remember the story which he told me of his first experience as a practicing attorney. His first fee was $5, which was paid in advance. After he had accepted the employment and his client had left, he went to the grocery store and bought several loaves of bread and a pound of butter, returned to his office, and, behind locked doors, proceeded to place himself on the outside of the bread and butter. Many young men would have given up in despair under the same circumstances, but with perseverance, honesty, and close application to work our friend climbed the ladder of success.

In recognition of his splendid mind he was elevated to the important Committee on Banking and Currency. As a member of that committee he has devoted himself diligently to the problems of finance and currency until he is now regarded as one of the outstanding authorities in this country on the subject of money and finance. Few men have ever mastered this intricate subject so thoroughly as our friend. Ever since his election to Congress he has been intensely interested in this subject. I recall that he was one of the first Members of the House to advocate the remonetization of silver. He was responsible for getting many interested in the subject and, in fact, taught me much of the little knowledge that I have on the silver question. He introduced the first bill in either branch requiring the purchase of silver and the issuance of certificates to pay for it. While he did not serve on the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee and could not, therefore, be the author of the bill, his original bill was used by all other Members and formed the background of the silver movement in the House which finally culminated in the passage of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, of which I had the honor to be the author. I know of no Member of this House who has contributed more to the understanding of this complicated subject than he. Believing that the money question was of transcendent importance and that it was the major factor in producing the depression, he never ceased to exert himself in season and out of season in an effort to impress upon the Membership of the House and Senate the necessity of solving it in the interest of the people. Many of the proposals which he advocated at a time when they were little understood and, in fact, unpopular have been written upon the statute books. Many other proposals which he has advanced in the committee and on the floor will eventually be enacted into law.

It has been my pleasure to have served with him for 5 years, and during all that time I have never known a man more devoted to the welfare of the common man than he. Unlike many men of substantial means, he has been a consistent progressive in the field of legislation. He has at all times been independent and fearless in the advocacy of measures that were designed to do the greatest good to the greatest number. I have known of instance after instance where my friend CROSS voted against his own financial interest because he thought it was right and for the best interest of the plain people.

His genial and happy disposition and his tolerant understanding of the frailties of others has made him one of the most popular Members that ever served in this body. In the cloakroom, Members like to gather around him and bask under the sunlight of his cheerful smile. While advanced in years, he has the viewpoint of youth, and the younger Members enjoy his association as well as those of his own age. The philosophers of old have said that the highest achievement which any man can reach is the mastery of self. Many men have been able to conquer kingdoms; few to conquer themselves. The highest tribute which I can pay to our beloved friend is to say that he has conquered himself. I have never known a man so temperate in all of his habits as Mr. CROSS. The great philosopher Aristotle preached the doctrine of the happy medium. CROSS is a disciple of that doctrine. He is not given to extremes. Believing that all extremes are probably wrong, my friend CROSS can usually be found in the middle between the extremes. Coming from the ranks of the common people, he has never lost that understanding of their needs and that appreciation of their sturdy qualities which distinguishes a great man from a little one.

Some people measure success by the money that a man has accumulated and the fortunes amassed. Some there are who define success in terms of military fame or literary genius. In terms of material accomplishments, my friend CROSS can certainly be classified as a successful man. But many of us believe that there are higher standards of success than this, and it is in terms of real success that we take pleasure in pronouncing CROSS a successful man. It can certainly be said of him that he has achieved success because he lived well, laughed often, and loved much; that he gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; that he looked for the best in others and always gave the best that he had; that he always appreciated life's values and never failed to express it; that he made it a rule not to prejudge others lest he condemn himself. It is because he deeply and unselfishly loves his fellow man that his fellow man loves him.

It is to be deeply regretted that such a man should retire from public service, for which he is so well adapted and qualified. During these uncertain and perilous times men like CROSS are more needed than ever before. Many of us are still in the hope that his people will persuade him to continue his wonderful work in the Halls of Congress. But we can well understand the motives which actuate his retirement. He has certainly earned such retirement by his splendid services.

Congress will not be the same when he is gone. During the trying times through which we have all gone, CROSS has been a guiding light to many of us, and a source of inspiration and encouragement. And as he goes back to private life to enjoy the fruits of a well-spent life, he will carry with him the richest reward which any man may receive on this earth—the consciousness of duties well done, and the esteem, the love, and gratitude of his fellow Members.

While, like many of us, he will not leave behind him a portrait or sculpture in the Rotunda of the Capitol, nevertheless the memory of his kindly ways and constructive service will be enshrined in our hearts, and upon the tablets of our memory his name will be carved as one who served well and faithfully and who loved his fellow man.

And I bespeak the sentiments of my colleagues of both parties when I wish for him that peace of mind which passes all understanding. May the evening of his life be spent in the midst of his loving family and his grateful friends, for whom he has worked so unselfishly and so successfully.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a letter of tribute and appreciation from some of the leading constituents and friends of Mr. CROSS.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. How long is it?

Mr. DIES. It is not very long.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BELTON, TEX., June 20, 1935.

Hon. O. H. CROSS,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE CROSS: We have just learned that it is not your purpose to be a candidate for reelection to Congress in 1936. We know that we will miss you and the splendid service and fine cooperation which you have always rendered so willingly for 8 long years. We realize that you have been working under a great strain and tension, brought about by the unusual chaotic condition of our economic affairs which has been honeycombed with dissatisfaction, communism, etc., on every hand, resulting in a spectacle the like of which we have never witnessed before! We know, though, that during the nerve-racking stress and strain of it all you have been true to your convictions, courageous and fearless in the discharge of your duties, and fulfilling your promises to the people who honored you with this important trust. Honesty and sincerity of purpose has actuated you in every movement.

Your illustrious record in Congress speaks for itself and there is nothing that we could say which would raise the high standard of statesmanship which you have already established for yourself in the sacred halls of Congress! Your public and private life has been clean, wholesome, and uplifting, ever pulsating with a warm and kindly interest in your friends, and ever willing to listen to those who needed your helpful guidance, advice, and assistance. Your service in Congress has been an inspiration to us and we are convinced that it will, indeed, be difficult to find a man who can take the torch which you soon will pass to your successor and hold it with the same firm and steady grip which has characterized your service at Washington!

Your efficient service, embracing as it did personal and detailed attention to every letter and inquiry of any importance with the promptness and dispatch of an efficient manager of a modern successful business, your attention to the varied and perplexing problems which we have brought to you from time to time, have all been appreciated more than we can tell you; and it is but natural that you have endeared yourself to us; and it is but a natural course of events that your name has been inscribed for all time to come upon our "tablets of love and memory."

We know that you have devoted all your time, thought, talents, and energies in advocating and encouraging the highest and noblest principles of life and aiding in the enactment of just and righteous laws that will aid in making America a better place in which to live. You have not practiced hypocrisy in your politics; you have not played the part of a demagogue; you have been a real statesman in the true sense of the word, dependable, "faithful as a bridge of stars"—true as steel. We know, too, that you have especially enjoyed the friendship and comradeship of your colleagues in Congress. You will miss these pleasant associations. And while you will miss these pleasant and refreshing contacts, we know, yet when you come back to your own Elevent District, back to Waco, back to Belton, and the other towns in your district, you will come back to friends and loved ones who have known you much longer than your associates in the Capital City; and you will be welcomed back in your own home district by hearts that are just as loving and just as faithful as ever welcomed a statesman home. Yes; you will miss your Washington friends, but remember:

There is no friend like an old friend
Who has shared our morning days;
No greeting like his welcome,
No homage like his praise.
Fame is a scentless sunflower
With gaudy crown of gold,
But friendship is a breathing rose
With scents in every fold.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS—CONTRIBUTIONS OF STATES

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I object.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I do this to call the attention of the House to the Russell amendment that was adopted to the security bill in the Senate. The House tried several times during the consideration of the security bill to place an amendment on the bill whereby the States could receive Federal aid for pensioners without contribution for a period of time. The Senate amendment allows the $15 a month to be paid for 2 years in those States that are unable to meet the financial requirements. I think the House would be justified in keeping this Russell amendment in the security bill, and if the conferees refuse to accept the amendment, I think it is the duty of the House to vote down the conference report and ask the House conferees to recede from their objections to the Senate amendments.

To further call the attention of the House to the value of this amendment, I have addressed the following letter to my colleagues.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 24, 1935.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: The following amendment offered by Senator RUSSELL was inserted in the social security bill in the Senate:

"Provided, That in order to assist the aged of the several States who have no State system of old-age pensions until an opportunity is afforded the several States to provide for a State plan, including financial participation by the States, and notwithstanding any other provision of this title, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State for each quarter until July 1, 1937, to be used exclusively as old-age assistance, in lieu of the amount payable under the provisions of clause (1) of this subsection, an amount sufficient to afford old-age assistance to each individual within the State who at the time of such expenditure is 65 years of age or older, who is declared by such public-welfare agency of the State as may be designated by the Governor thereof, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Social Security Board, to be entitled to receive the same: Provided further, That no person who is an inmate of a public institution shall receive such old-age assistance, nor shall any individual receive an amount in excess of $15 per month."

I am informed that a majority of the House conferees, Congressmen DOUGHTON, HILL, CULLEN, TREADWAY, and BACHARACH, are opposed to retaining this amendment.

The retention of the Russell amendment is the only thing that will make the social security bill function in many States, until such time as the States can qualify. I earnestly hope that you will support the Russell amendment by contacting the House conferees either personally or by mail, to induce them to retain this amendment. If this amendment is taken out in conference, I hope a sufficient number of House Members will vote against the acceptance of the conference report and demand that the Russell amendment be put back into the bill.

Sincerely yours,

SURPLUS COMMODITIES PURCHASED

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution of the Florida Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include Florida Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 20. It urges the Federal relief organization to purchase from Florida its proportional part of fish, same to be distributed to relief clients; this contention is just and proper, the resolution follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 20

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Florida in session assembled (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas under $6,000,000 worth of commodities have been shipped into the State during the last year, principally packing-house products from Chicago and other Midwestern areas, and distributed by officials in charge of rehabilitation of relief classes; and

Whereas the fishermen of the State of Florida had been overlooked, and have been unable to dispose of any of their products to any of the above-mentioned agencies: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the senate and house concurring, respectfully and earnestly request the President of the United States to direct the Federal agencies purchasing commodities for distribution to relief clients within this State and other southeastern parts, a proportionate part of the fish production within this State.

Be it resolved, That a copy of this resolution under the great seal of the State of Florida be forwarded to the President of the United States, Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and a copy to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Florida.

Approved June 4, 1935.

Filed in office secretary of state June 5, 1935.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes upon the subject of the department racketeers and Treasury raiders in the city of Washington.

Mr. BLANTON. Make it 1 minute.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I cannot tell about the racketeers in 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California to address the House for 5 minutes?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROPOSED RENT COMMISSION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a very important bill vitally affecting the people residing in the District of Columbia is scheduled to come before the House this afternoon. I hope Members will stay here and help us keep it off the statute books. I refer to the bill proposing a new rent commission.

We who were here during the war remember the old rent commission, which did not do a scintilla of good, which did not reduce the rents, but raised rents, and cost a lot of money. It took us years to get it off the statute books and to stop expense. It amounted to nothing in the world but placing an army of job seekers on salaries, and they performed no service of any value. It put the Government in the boarding-house business.

We should stop this rent commission bill which is coming up today. We are going to adjourn before very long and go home. In a short time we will be gone from here and our secretaries will be gone from here and thousands of people will be going out of Washington and going to their homes and rents will come down in Washington automatically.

And before we come back in January, if Washington landlords again attempt to hold us up, we will arrange to get quarters over in nearby Virginia or Maryland. We already know too much about rent commissions. We want to stop this bill, that puts another burden on the people here in Washington, and will accomplish nothing worth while, and all of us know that it is unconstitutional. There is no World War on now to create the necessary emergency.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 2276) to authorize participation by the United States in the Interparliamentary Union, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2276) to authorize participation by the United States in the Interparliamentary Union, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

S. D. McREYNOLDS,
SOL BLOOM,
Managers on the part of the House.

KEY PITTMAN,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
WM. E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2276) to authorize participation by the United States in the Interparliamentary Union, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to such amendment:

The House amendment provided that all appointments to the Union Conference shall be made by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. The House recedes.

S. D. McREYNOLDS,
SOL BLOOM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear what the Clerk read, but I suppose the amendment from which the House recedes is that amendment providing that appointments to the union conference shall be made by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes. We followed the usual custom of letting the President of the local union make the appointments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

THE ASSAULT UPON THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech I delivered last Saturday at Worcester, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech which I delivered last Saturday at Worcester, Mass.:

Some years ago, in Independence Hall at Philadelphia, I first saw the room in which on July 4, 1776, John Hancock affixed his signature to the Declaration of Independence in letters so large that King George would be able to read it without putting on his spectacles, and in which 11 years later the representatives of 13 jealous and suspicious States argued and labored for nearly 4 months "to form a more perfect union." I was invited to sit for a moment in the chair which Washington occupied while he presided over the Constitutional Convention and to sign my name in a visitors' register placed on the table upon which he must have pounded again and again with his gavel when spirits ran high and debate became acrimonious. My attention was called to a design painted on the upper part of the chair—a half-disc of the sun, with extended rays. It was to that symbol Benjamin Franklin pointed when, after the final draft of the Constitution had been accepted, he rose and said, "I have often and often, in the course of these sessions and in the vicissitudes of my hopes and fears as to their issue, looked at that [sun] behind the President without being able to tell whether it was rising or setting, but now at length I have the happiness to know that it is a rising and not a setting sun."

I feel that it is appropriate on this midsummer day, when we are gathered in conformity with an ancient custom which goes back to the time when our pagan ancestors met on each recurring solstice to rejoice in the return of the sun, to consider again the meaning of the symbol which 148 years ago was the object of Franklin's thought and solicitude. Is the sun of ordered liberty still rising in the American sky?

The American Constitution is today the oldest written constitution in the world. It has served as the model for many other constitutions since adopted. It has been copied both in Europe and in the Americas. At the time of its adoption it was unique; it was based on a new conception of the relationship existing between those who govern and those who are governed.

The framers of the older constitutions had proceeded on the theory that the ultimate power resides in the Government, and that the people have only such rights and privileges as the Government, through the Constitution, is willing to grant or forced to yield.

The men who sat in Philadelphia in 1787 had an entirely different idea. They drew their inspiration from the revolutionary doctrine enunciated in the Declaration of Independence that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Sovereignty, they held, resides in the people, governmental power originates in the people, and a government therefore can have and exercise only such powers as the people yield. Thus, while other constitutions had been grants from the government to the people, ours was a grant from the people to the Government. Consequently, the Government established by the Constitution was one of limited powers.

It should be noted also that the men who framed the Constitution sat in the Convention as representatives of their respective States, and that the Constitution which they wrote had to be adopted by the States as such before it could become effective. Those States were independent; they were in effect nations, and they had governments which, like the Federal Government that was being set up, were clothed only with such powers as the people had given.

We find therefore that after the Constitution of the United States was adopted this situation existed: First, all powers except those which the people had delegated remained in the people; second, those powers which the people had given to the States remained in the States unless and until surrendered to the Federal Government; and, third, the Federal Government had only such powers as had been surrendered to it by the States or delegated to it by the people. The Federal Government was one of definitely limited and specifically enumerated powers. It is important to remember that it was not a national government, but a Federal system of government that the founding fathers established.

In order to safeguard the liberties of the people, the framers of the Constitution set up a system of checks and balances. They distributed the powers of government among three separate departments—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. To Congress, and to Congress alone, they gave the power to pass laws. To the President, and to the President alone, they gave the authority to enforce laws. To the courts, and to the courts alone, they gave the responsibility to interpret and apply laws in cases in which the rights of litigants were in question.

There was a reason for this sharp demarcation between legislative, executive, and judicial functions. The framers of the Constitution knew history. They knew that at one time the king's will was law; they knew that he not only legislated, but in many instances heard and decided cases. They knew that the struggle for liberty had in the main been one to transfer the power to make laws from the king to the representatives of the people, and the power to interpret and apply laws from the king to an independent judiciary. The framers of the Constitution were determined to preserve the gains the people had won by hundreds of years of struggle, and therefore they were careful to enumerate the separate powers of the three departments of the Government.

Furthermore, recognizing that the tyranny of the many may be just as oppressive as the despotism of the few, the fathers wrote into the Constitution a bill of rights. They fixed boundaries beyond which the people themselves could not go in transgressing upon the freedom of the individual.

In his "Republic" Plato had declared that the "chief object in the construction of the state is the greatest happiness of the whole and not that of any part." While the authors of the American Constitution also recognized the importance of promoting the "general welfare", they were wiser than Plato in that they knew that the "greatest happiness of the whole" is best served when every man who is a part of the whole is secure in the possession of certain rights and liberties which a capricious temporary majority cannot take away.

The ideal society is one which recognizes that it exists for men and not men for it; which gives to every person freedom and opportunity to achieve to the full measure of his capacity, and which seeks in the development of the individual character the fulfillment of its highest purpose.

The men who built this Nation did not, like some of their decadent sons, inveigh against "rugged individualism." On the contrary, they gloried in it. They followed no cult of mediocrity, they sought no dead leveling of society. They did not waste their time dreaming of an economic order in which every man should have the same amount of income, live in the same kind of house, wear the same kind of clothes, own the same number of acres, and maintain the same bank balance as every other man. They recognized that nature, which never gives to any two trees the same foliage or even to any two blades of grass the same structure and form, does not invest any two men with the same capacity. They knew that some, by reason of greater foresight, more talents, and better self-control inevitably outstrip their fellows. When the founding fathers said that "all men are created equal", they did not refer to equality of ability or wealth or position, but to equality of right and opportunity.

So today, if we follow the fathers and heed the Constitution which they wrote, we shall seek the answer to our social questions, not in a dead leveling of society, but in the removal of artificial handicaps and the withdrawal of special privileges; we shall find the solution of our economic problem, not in tearing down our neighbor's house, but in building one of our own. There is enough sporting blood in the average American to make him willing to take his chance if he is given a fair field where there are no favors.

Our ideal of America was well expressed by James A. Garfield when he said that "while European society is stratified like the rocks in the earth, ours is stratified like the ocean, where from the sternest deeps any drop may rise to glisten on the highest wave that rolls." Such a society we can have under the Constitution, without confiscation, without regimentation, and without destroying our social and economic order.

Thus far, in developing my subject, I have sought to show that the Constitution adopted by the fathers set up a Governmental system in which all powers not granted to the Government were reserved to the people; in which the States were as essential and important as the Nation; in which the powers of government were divided among three departments, none of which might encroach on either of the other two; and in which the individual had rights which no Government, State or Federal, could take away.

Is that system adequate for today, or should it be either scrapped or so modified as to alter its framework substantially?

This is not a political meeting, and I shall respect the proprieties of the occasion by not making a political speech, admitting that adherence to that pledge will somewhat cramp my style.

Personally, I am not ready to concede that there is any present economic or social problem that cannot be solved without fundamentally changing the Constitution. I say "fundamentally", for I freely admit that amendments may properly be adopted from time to time in the future, as they have been in the past, to meet situations due to changing conditions. The very fact that the Constitution prescribes the manner in which it may be amended shows that it was intended that it would be amended. But what I would especially stress is that while we may find it necessary to make occasional adjustments, we should approach with caution all proposals to abridge individual liberty or to alter the essential framework of the Federal system.

Recently there was introduced in the House of Representatives an amazing resolution. It proposed a constitutional amendment providing that "the Congress shall have power to make all laws which in its judgment shall be necessary to provide for the general welfare of the people."

I prefer to believe, as charity should prompt us to do, that the author of that resolution did not realize the full import of the language which he used: "The Congress shall have power to make all laws which in its judgment shall be necessary to provide for the general welfare of the people."

If that amendment were adopted, Congress could pass any law, howsoever it conflicted with provisions of the Constitution, that in the opinion of a majority of those temporarily sitting in the Senate and the House of Representatives would be for the general welfare.

A mere statute, enacted by representatives of the people, might supersede the fundamental law adopted by the people themselves. Accordingly an act of Congress would have greater validity than the Constitution. The net effect, of course, would be that we would have no Constitution.

Every provision of the Bill of Rights would be subject to abrogation. If Congress decided that it was for the welfare of the people to suspend the right of free speech, it could suspend that right. If Congress decided that it was for the welfare of the people to outlaw newspapers whose editorial policy was in conflict with the policy of the party in power, it could destroy the freedom of the press. If a majority of the Members of Congress held the view that has been officially accepted in one part of the world, that "religion is the opium of the masses", they could give effect to that view by prohibiting the free exercise of religion. If they believed that communism is preferable to individual ownership of property, they could confiscate any farm, any factory, and even any home in America.

Under such a provision Congress could usurp every power of the States; it could tear down State boundaries and destroy the Federal system. It could change the tenure and the manner of the election of its own Members. It could divest the courts of their jurisdiction. By the two-thirds vote required to override a veto, it could pass a law depriving the President of his right of veto. It could strip him of his power, or if it wished, make him a dictator. The adoption of the proposed amendment would make it possible for Congress to do in the United States everything that Mussolini has done in Italy, or Hitler in Germany.

If you think I have found in the language a meaning that is not there, let me read it again: "The Congress shall have power to make all laws that in its judgment shall be necessary to provide for the general welfare of the people."

A second resolution now pending in Congress calls for a constitutional amendment providing that "no court of the United States, or of any State, shall declare unconstitutional or void any law enacted by the Congress of the United States. All laws of the United States shall remain in full force and effect throughout the United States until repealed by the Congress of the United States, or until vetoed or repudiated by the action of the legislatures of three-fourths of the States. The tenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed."

What is the tenth amendment which the author of this resolution would repeal? "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

If the tenth amendment were repealed the States would have no rights which the Congress would be bound to respect. The Federal Government, instead of being one of limited powers would become one of absolute power. The States if it suited the whim of a congressional majority, might be made merely geographical units, existing for the sole purpose of electing Congressmen. Such an amendment would not only repeal the last of the 10 articles of the bill of rights, but would place in Congress the power to nullify the other nine. Against the tyranny of any law the citizen could not assert any constitutional right, for no court would have jurisdiction to hear a case in which the constitutionality of any act of Congress was challenged.

It is difficult to believe that even the stress of economic necessity, serious as it is, would ever induce the people even to consider a proposal designed to destroy so completely the American form of Government.

Of late it has become a popular pastime among those who have been frustrated in their effort to reach Utopia by a legislative detour to challenge the right of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. Even the President of the United States, at a press conference that has already become historic, in an unguarded moment gave utterance to some opinions which he may have occasion to regret.

The right and duty of the Supreme Court to consider the validity of the laws it is called upon to interpret and apply arise out of the very nature of our constitutional system. We have two kinds of law, constitutional and statutory, the one springing from the people themselves, the other from their legislative representatives. The Constitution is, in effect, a power of attorney given by the principal, the American people, to the agent, the Congress of the United States. The acts of an agent, if within the terms of the power, are binding upon his principal; if not within the power, they have no validity. We have a Constitution which is the supreme law of the land, and statutes which are law only insofar as they do not conflict with the supreme law.

A and B are engaged in litigation. A asserts his right under an act of Congress; B asserts his under a provision of the Constitution, with which the statute is in conflict. The case comes to the Supreme Court for a final decision. Shall the Court decide in favor of A, who relies on a mere statute, or in favor of B, who rests his cause on the supreme law of the land? If the Court decides in favor of B it invalidates the statute and sustains the Constitution; if it decides in favor of A it sustains the statute and invalidates the Constitution. When faced with the dilemma of having to invalidate either the statute or the Constitution, what should the court do? To ask the question is to answer it.

There are those who, while chafing under judicial decisions they don't like, do not care to go so far as to deny the Supreme Court the power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional, but demand that the Constitution be so amended that a two-thirds vote would be necessary for a judicial veto. Pointing to occasional 5-to-4 decisions, they decry the fact that it is possible for "one old man" to nullify the action of a majority of both the House and the Senate, and of the President as well. The argument is so plausible that it wins many supporters, but it is wholly specious.

It is important to remember that the issues upon which courts are asked to pass are not moot questions, but questions involving the rights of litigants. If the Constitution were so changed that it would require a 6-to-3 instead of a 5-to-4 decision to invalidate an act of Congress, the rights of litigants who challenge a statute would be impaired. Thus, in the hypothetical case I have cited, B, who rests his claim on the Constitution, would have to convince 6 of the 9 judges that he was right; A, who relies on the statute, would have to win only 4 to his side. In other words, A might win the case although 5 of the 9 judges thought he was wrong. Surely this would be not only a repudiation of the generally accepted principle of the majority rule, but a gross denial of justice.

There is nothing undemocratic in the procedure under which a majority of one may invalidate an act of Congress. One vote frequently decides the fate of a bill, or of an amendment thereto, in the House and the Senate; and a bill passed by both Houses is often killed by one man, the President of the United States. Those who argue that a two-thirds vote should be required to invalidate an act might with equal consistency demand that it should require a two-thirds vote in both Houses of the Congress to pass it.

Whenever it is thought desirable to amend the Constitution, let those who ask for an amendment submit their proposal in the manner provided in the Constitution to the people from whom the Constitution itself issued. Let there be no amendment by indirection, whether through the device of unconstitutional legislation or by tampering with the composition of the Supreme Court.

As the almost precipitate adoption of the twenty-first amendment showed, it is not impossible or even difficult to make any change in the fundamental law that the people want made.

Ratification might conceivably be accomplished by a majority of one, either in the legislature or in a constitutional convention, in each of 36 States. Those States might be the smallest—those which in 1932 supplied in the aggregate only one-third of the total vote. In each of those States the majority members of the legislature or convention might conceivably be elected by a bare majority, or even by a mere plurality, of the electors. Therefore, inasmuch as those voters who constituted a bare majority in one-half of the legislative districts in States casting one-third of the Nation's vote might decide the issue, it is at least theoretically possible for a little more than one-twelfth of the voters in the United States to change its Constitution.

While it is readily admitted that it is quite improbable that 40,000,000 votes would ever be so distributed that three and one-third million would bring about a change in the fundamental law of the land, the figures I have presented show that organizing the electorate toward that end is not an insuperable task.

Men who are influential in the Nation are at the present time advocating a change in the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Although such a change would not have the sweeping consequences of the proposals I have heretofore enumerated, it would, in view of the preponderance of the Nation's economic interest, hold possibilities for disturbing the balance between the State and national jurisdictions that should suggest caution. Any general shifting of responsibility in relation to intrastate commerce from the State capitals to Washington might lead to consequences that would be regretted.

The submission of the child labor amendment now pending represents the right procedure.

If authority is sought for the enactment of a Federal minimum-wage law, or for the enforcement of codes of fair competition, let each proposal be separately stated in restrictive terms, so that the people may know definitely the extent of the powers they are asked to delegate to Congress.

Then, whatever the decision, whether wise or unwise, we shall all abide by the result, recognizing that this is a country in which the will of the people as expressed in the Constitution is the supreme law of the land.

Some there are who have declared that the "horse and buggy" Constitution adopted in 1787 is outmoded and that we should exchange it for a 1935 model. Those who offer the suggestion and thereby inferentially offer themselves for the role of Constitution maker cannot claim the merit of modesty.

They are bold men who would undertake to write a new basic law to take the place of the one framed by that galaxy of statesmen that by the grace of God or by an unusual fortuity was assembled at Philadelphia 148 years ago this summer.

I am free to confess that no such group of men could be recruited from the House, I question whether it could be assembled from the Senate, and I doubt whether it could be constituted even from Felix Frankfurter's class of precocious sophomores. For one, I would not be willing to exchange the Constitution of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and James Madison for any brain child of Donald Richberg, Rexford Tugwell, and Hugh Johnson.

It is said that on the night before his departure for the Far East of his career of conquest, Alexander of Macedon had an interview with his tutor, Aristotle, and that the great Athenian said to his pupil: "You are about to embark upon a great enterprise that will take you into many lands and amongst many peoples, some already celebrated in arts and in arms, some savage and unknown. This last counsel I give you, that whithersoever your victories lead you, do not forget that you are a Greek."

America needs the advice of Aristotle today. Whatever the adventures we undertake, the goals we seek to reach, we have an inheritance to safeguard and to transmit—a system of ordered liberty in which statutes must yield to the Constitution, in which the people are governed by law and not by men, and in which human rights are deemed to be sacred and unalienable.

We who live today are trustees for the future of America. In our responsibility we must not fail.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of District business today I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on the subject of the Tennessee Valley Authority, which was dealt with exhaustively by Republicans last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I object.

RULES COMMITTEE—LEAVE UNTIL MIDNIGHT TO FILE CERTAIN REPORTS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight to file reports on various rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ISSUANCE OF BONDS, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8270), to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Since the distinguished leader on the Republican side is objecting to all requests for time on this side, I believe it is ill-advised to pass important legislation by unanimous consent at this time. Therefore, I object.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, in order that the Republicans may not be deprived of this wonderful speech I intended to make, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 20, this House was addressed by Hon. DONALD H. MCLEAN, of New Jersey, my colleague, and a fellow member of the Military Affairs Committee. He spoke at length on the subject of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and now I rise to answer the statements that he made that day.

Let me take up the various statements of Mr. MCLEAN, one by one:

First of all, Mr. MCLEAN says that the T. V. A. had no authority to build other than the Norris Dam. The truth of the matter is that its creative act gives the T. V. A. the broad power to construct dams, reservoirs, power houses, power structures, transmission lines, navigation projects, and incidental works in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and to unite the various power installations into one or more systems by transmission lines, and so on. Strangely enough, though Cove Creek Dam is mentioned somewhere in the statute, Norris Dam, which Mr. McLEAN cites, is not mentioned anywhere in it by that name, yet the general power to build dams is unmistakably there. Therefore, the T. V. A. cannot be criticized for building dams.

A great hue and cry is made that Congress needs a report before the work goes ahead. Yet we all know that the T. V. A. has made an annual report. Besides, the President in May 1934 sent up a message transmitting a report on the progress of the work being done there (Doc. 365). This in addition to repeated testimony by the T. V. A. directors before the Military Affairs and Appropriations Committees.

Mr. McLEAN also says that a bond issue of $50,000,000 was to be used as working capital. One of the things that he and the bitter opponents of the T. V. A. oppose is the spending of money for power and the furnishing of power for the public. As a matter of fact, the T. V. A. was launched with an initial appropriation of $50,000,000. But the statute provision for a bond issue not exceeding that amount restricted its use wholly or in part for the generation or transmission of electric power, and so on. Therefore, the general activities were not covered by this bond issue. The T. V. A. has not issued any bonds. As far as the bond feature of the act is concerned, it is a case of the T. V. A. being damned if it does and damned if it does not.

Mr. McLEAN asserts that the T. V. A. organized the Electric Home and Farm Authority. This, of course, is not correct, at least from a technical viewpoint, although the E. H. F. A. was supposed to—and did—help the T. V. A., not to mention manufacturers, dealers, and users of electric appliances, and that means private utilities as well.

As a matter of fact, the Electric Home and Farm Authority has worked out to the benefit of the people of the United States. It does not operate wholly within the Tennessee Valley, but in some cases, operates in portions of Georgia and Mississippi, not within the geographical limits of the valley.

Because the Electric Home and Farm Authority has so far principally boomed the Tennessee Valley is due to the fact that the Tennessee Valley is the only part of the United States that now has the advantage of the T. V. A. Low-cost appliances and "yardstick" electric rates go hand in hand. However, the whole problem of rural electrification will be carried out soon and, as we know, that general subject will be dealt with in a national way. Even if the Electric Home and Farm Authority were a subsidiary of the T. V. A.—which it is not—what of it? I see nothing wrong in it, and if there happens to be another corporation which is doing something for the benefit of the people, so much the better. The T. V. A. is cooperating with the Rural Electrification Authority, of course, and with the power companies, as I presume will be done in the other parts of the United States in connection with rural electrification. On the whole, rural electrification and appliances for farms and homes are so important that no technicality should keep us from having the benefits of this happy combination.

Complaint is made that the C. C. C. men are used in soil-erosion work in the Tennessee Valley. What of it? The C. C. C. men are supposed to be used where they can benefit their country, and if they can benefit their country in Tennessee, or Mississippi, or any other State, can they not be used there the same as they are used in New York, or in the State of New Jersey? There is no reason why they should not be used where they are necessary.

Also, enemies of T. V. A. say it has given no plan to Congress. When I first came to Congress, they were talking about the Tennessee Valley and were holding hearings before the Military Affairs Committee. Day after day, week after week, and month after month we have been hearing plans of the Tennessee Valley Authority until I, for one, am convinced that the T. V. A. is the busiest new-deal agency by a "dam site." I do not know how they could give any more plans than they have. I have before me numerous pamphlets and information releases; also, a particular report with illustrations furnished the Military Affairs Committee, and, I believe, to the Appropriations Committee, and I can hardly see how they can make any fuller or more explicit reports.

Then Mr. McLEAN states that, inasmuch as he has not gotten all the information he needs, he must go to other places to get his facts. So he goes ahead and reads Fortune Magazine and various other magazines to find out what the Tennessee Valley Authority is going to do, when there is no indication that they are doing all the things they are written up as doing. For example, he lists several dams to cost something like $85,000,000, which he lists as immediate expenditures of the T. V. A., although such dams are still only on paper in future planning for the valley. It is true that the T. V. A. has considered a Hiwassee Dam, a French Broad Dam, and an Aurora Dam, and these dams may someday be built, but they are certainly not in the current T. V. A. expenditures.

Then, in this same speech, the T. V. A. is charged with ignoring the matter of national defense, not to mention the Engineer Corps of the Army. Let us talk about this thing in a sensible way. It is true that the T. V. A. started out as a national-defense proposition, because of the "white elephant" nitrate plants wished off on it. Then, if we were to conjure with words, we might say that its big contribution to national defense is to defend the soil of our country; I mean in such things as soil erosion, to prevent dust storms, and to keep our rivers from running away with the soil. It is national defense to improve navigation; it is national defense to keep our rivers from overflowing; and it is national defense to have good rivers properly harnessed, high-power transmission lines in network array for emergency service, nitrate plants ready to make munitions, and manganese and other natural resources ready to be drafted for war purposes. But, brushing aside the technicalities, the truth of the matter is that the Tennessee Valley project is not only one where we spend it on national defense—that is to say, to go to war with or to fight with—but it is one that has peace-time contributions to the public welfare.

The T. V. A. has gone far beyond its original purposes, I must admit, and I hope that it will go still further beyond, and that we will give it the legislative power to do so. If we can save farms from being washed away, why not do it? If the saving of farms is not included in the national defense, should we not save them for our economic defense? My idea is that we should go ahead and do everything we can for the benefit of our country, no matter whether the doing be classed as national defense or regional renovizing.

Mr. McLEAN praises the Army engineers and then he complains that the Wheeler Dam is being built without authority. I cannot understand how these engineers could start to build there a navigation lock, now completed, if Wheeler Dam is in violation of the law. The War Department will operate all locks along the T. V. A. navigation dams, just as it does now at Muscle Shoals, because it retains jurisdiction over all navigable streams. Incidentally, the Corps of Engineers is designing the Pickwick Landing Dam, and the T. V. A. had the cooperation of the Reclamation Bureau in designing the Norris Dam.

Much fuss has been made over the fancied lack of cooperation by T. V. A. with other Government agencies. If this were so, the Authority could not work out its many problems in the manner it is now doing. Most of its activities find precedence in the old-line Federal departments. For example, its forestation, soil-erosion, and flood-control programs are long-familiar pursuits of the Interior and Agriculture Departments. Moreover, methods being developed in the Tennessee Basin tend to produce a large-scale proved pattern which can be applied to the national picture as a whole. I do not have to remind my colleagues that recurring floods and dust storms are the bitter lessons of national neglect. In this phase alone the T. V. A. should not be too bitter a pill for doctor-hating interests to swallow.

Mr. McLEAN seems to resent deeply that the T. V. A. has not sold any fertilizer. He did not explain, however, that the experimental plant at Muscle Shoals has, under T. V. A. operation, turned out thousands of tons of a much-needed phosphate fertilizer. Nor did he say further that, through the cooperation of State and local agriculture agents, this fertilizer is being shipped to more than 500 farms, from Virginia to Mississippi, for practical demonstration.

To be perfectly frank, the Tennessee Valley Authority does not know exactly what their fertilizer policy will be in the future. What is wrong with that? They are utilizing every resource they can of the rivers and of the lands there, and if there does not happen to be a war where they can use nitrate there is no reason why they should not thoughtfully and carefully work out a policy in the matter of fertilizer. But fertilizer is a strong subject; let us not get too deep in that.

Mr. McLEAN cites the T. V. A. made town of Norris as costing $3,500,000 and gets "statisticritical"—there is a coined word for you—making comparisons with that and other places over the United States where dams have been built and where it has been necessary to have construction camps. In this he has given you the correct amount. He, however, wholly neglects to break down this cost to include a construction camp, two public parks, a forest preserve, a demonstration farm—and the famous cows which I may bring up later in the argument—a school, roads, and lands needed for erosion control—some 2,800 acres all told. I have not all the facts before me, but in addition to this I happen to know that the difference over the original T. V. A. estimates was due to costs of materials and labor being increased by the late lamented N. R. A.—recently slain, mostly by our dear friends, the Republicans.

He mentions likewise that Norris Dam completed would only need 20 or 30 men to operate, but wholly evades the point that Norristown is intended to be a permanent settlement where there will be certain small manufacturers, or big ones for all I know, the development of home industries and home crafts, and so on, to carry it on. There is no reason why a village of that size should not be maintained in almost any fertile and cheap-power center of the United States.

Further, Mr. McLEAN implies that the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives is a poor investment—that Uncle Sam has received poor returns on the $300,000 loaned this locally incorporated group by the F. E. R. A. Well, maybe, in a material way this is true, yet if bringing self-help to some counties where as much as 70 percent of the people were on relief is a poor dividend, I will have to try to tune in again for better tips by that post-depression financial sage of the radio, the "Old Counselor" of Halsey, Stuart & Co. Personally, I think providing people facilities to can what they would ordinarily waste in season and buy back in cans out of season is not an illogical—or an uncanny—phase of the valley's effort to get the people to help themselves.

Last but not least, much ado has been made over the so-called "report" by Comptroller General McCarl on alleged irregularities in T. V. A. accounts and what not. To begin with, this is not a report but is a preliminary bill of exceptions filed by the Comptroller General with the T. V. A. with the understanding that they will get together and try to iron out their differences. The newspapers played the story up big, but the biggest story as I see it, is how certain enemies of the T. V. A. in Congress got hold of it in the first place. However, I do know how this group got it out. No copy of the letter was sent to Congress. It is only by hearsay that I know that the letter covered 400 single-spaced typewritten pages of accounting details. When I further hear that two full pages are devoted to the disappearance and recovery of two typewriters from the Washington T. V. A. office, I do not want to make further inquiry because by so doing I may embarrass some of my colleagues on the Hill who have also misplaced a typewriter or two of late.

The whole incident boils down to the case of an exceptional McCarl believing that the T. V. A. should not be excepted from bureaucratic redtape. Maybe the T. V. A. should be just another Federal bureau, but if we believe the T. V. A., its construction jobs—in which it believes it is setting a criterion in economy and dispatch—would have been seriously crippled by the delays of routine thumbing at McCarl's office. Besides, the details really involve engineering judgment as well as accounting practices. And the stew made over non-low-bid awards! Yet, after all the records are examined, it is found that 95 percent went to the low bidders anyway, and the remainder involved safety and responsibility factors in which the T. V. A. refused to take a chance.

But the point I want to drive home is that the T. V. A. is not supposed to be under the Comptroller General's rule of thumb. It was purposely set up otherwise. This policy was emphasized by the President in his message to Congress proposing the establishment of the T. V. A., and the conference committee of the House again stressed this provision in reporting the bill for its final passage. As the President so ably briefed it, the T. V. A. is "a corporation clothed with limited powers of government, but possessed of the flexibility and initiative of private enterprise."

And that, gentlemen, is one reason why it has been able to set the pace it has.

Even the press is beginning to realize that the McCarl report is not what the T. V. A. enemies tried to puff it up to be. In this connection, I ask permission to introduce three editorials on the subject, one from the Baltimore Evening Sun, which originally assailed T. V. A. on the basis of McCarl's exceptions; another from the Engineering News-Record, a McGraw-Hill publication which speaks for the profession; and the third from the Knoxville News-Sentinel, of the Scripps-Howard group:

[From the Evening Sun, Baltimore, Wednesday, May 22, 1935]

AN ANSWER COMES

Last week Senator AUSTIN offered 26 pages of itemized charges against the management of the T. V. A., claiming these to be excerpts from a much larger report on the management of the T. V. A., which had been made by Comptroller General McCarl. There is not space to go into the charges in detail. Sufficient to say that in general they charged dishonesty and inefficiency in the handling of funds and gross mismanagement. In suggesting at the time that the charges should be met and answered, we did no more than to reflect the opinions of most honest people.

Well, the charges have not been answered in detail. Nevertheless, at the T. V. A. hearing yesterday they received an answer which will be sufficient for most people. We quote from the account of the hearing:

"Mr. McCarl, for whom a hurry call was sent out * * * proceeded to disown not only the Cassidy digest (the one offered by Senator AUSTIN) but also the audit report on which it was based.

"'I don't want to discuss the audit report', he told the committee, 'because to me it isn't official and it is not before you.'

"Chairman MCSWAIN told the committee yesterday that Mr. McCarl looked upon the audit report as only 'a bill of exceptions' and believed the T. V. A. directors would be able to explain satisfactorily all the exceptions it raised. * * * Mr. McCarl concurred in this view."

Asked whether he had found any evidence of fraud, Mr. McCarl replied:

"I want to say 'no.' This is a serious thing. You're dealing with a public trust. This is all premature. * * * I certainly have found no fraud."

This is a blanket denial that he had uncovered fraud, made by the man who has been cast unwittingly in the role of chief witness for those who oppose the operation of the T. V. A. Therefore, it is essential that we give as prominent space to the answer as to the original charges.

[From the Engineering News-Record, June 6, 1935]

PROPER ANSWER

Reports of the audit of T. V. A. operations that were presented before the Military Affairs Committee of the House last week by Comptroller General McCarl gave an unbelievable and, as the sequel proved, a scandalously misleading impression that the T. V. A.'s operations lack integrity and efficiency. It is therefore gratifying to learn that Arthur E. Morgan, Chairman of the Authority, answered the Comptroller General's charges point by point and thoroughly. One of the basic charges was that the wartime riot of expenditure for Wilson Dam, the Muscle Shoals nitrate plants, and associated properties was falsely written down on the T. V. A.'s books. This is an old canard. It would have been easy for the Comptroller General to verify the fact that the book value represents sober, present-day, usable value. computed from the recorded construction quantities and actual present-day unit costs; yet, forgetting the responsible character of his office, he put forward figures implying that the T. V. A. had juggled its books to change an investment of more than $130,000,000 to less than half that value. Engineers are interested also in the exceptions taken by the audit to purchases of construction equipment, where in many instances a bid other than the low bid was found to be best—quite within the law and within good engineering practice, but apparently not to the Comptroller General's taste. If governmental accounting rules stand in the way of considering quality of product and range of performance in comparing bids, then it is time that the rules were modernized.

[From the Knoxville News-Sentinel, Sunday, June 2, 1935]

ACCUSING THE T. V. A.

Among other things, Comptroller General McCarl accused the T. V. A. of letting of contracts without competitive bidding, reimbursement of traveling expenses of prospective employees, allowance of overtime to annual employees, allowance of charge for personally-owned motor vehicles without prior authorization, payment of pay rolls without administrative approval.

When President Roosevelt conceived the T. V. A., he said that it would "have the power of the Government and the initiative of a private corporation."

Because it has tried to realize the President's ideal, it has not had as much respect for redtape as the average Government bureau, and, therefore, it has demonstrated an efficiency which has won it success.

The T. V. A. has bought on a merit basis, if it has not always gone through the formality of advertising for bids. When it has wanted to interview a man possibly suited to a particular job, it has paid his expenses on the trip, just as a private business does; that's the way to get competent men, and the T. V. A. has gotten them.

Its submanagers, knowing that their superiors wanted them to get results quickly, didn't always bother their superiors, who they knew had confidence in them, by asking advance approval of everything they wanted to do; again this is the custom of efficient private corporations.

The essential thing is that T. V. A. should get its officials and employees on a merit, rather than a political, basis and that its policies should be sound. This has been true. Given that fundamental basis, T. V. A. should not be bound with unnecessary regulations.

Enemies of T. V. A. will want its hands tied with redtape; its friends will not.

Mr. McCarl's accusations only prove the soundness of T. V. A.'s practices. Here is a case where Government in business has proved businesslike.

We suggest that the watchdog of the Treasury bark up another tree.

Mr. Speaker, I have answered some of the things that have been said, and I hope in a respectful way—at least as respectfully as those who have said them. There is a tremendous amount of propaganda coming before this House and over the Nation to thwart the Tennessee Valley Authority and to defeat the utility holding company bill. I am not now speaking on the holding-company bill, but on the Tennessee Valley Authority.

We read in the anti-new-deal newspapers that it is socialism; we read that it is this and it is that; we read that it is everything in the world. But whatever they call it, let me tell what it is: The purpose of the Tennessee Valley Authority, according to its present possibilities—and this is my opinion, not the interpretation of a law nor the interpretation of some formula that was made during the war time so we could win the war—is that the Tennessee Valley Authority is the greatest social program of this administration or any other administration in the history of the United States. Personally, I believe that it comes nearer meeting our economic questions and our economic problems than any other undertaking of the American people.

How in the world is a private company going to enter into a field and have soil-erosion work? Does it protect the public investment in its dams? If you will look into the hearings you will see where I asked the representatives of the Aluminum Co. of America, who desire to be wholly excluded from this act, what would they do in reference to soil erosion. Of course, they had to answer that they would do nothing whatever. How much reforestation is the Aluminum Co. of America going to do? How much is any private corporation going to do? Of course, none.

Anyone who knows anything at all knows that the only way that this can be accomplished is through governmental enterprise. If we are to save our farms and keep our country from being washed away, we must have a national program, as of course it cannot be done either by private interests or private business, or by treaties of several different States, due to the fact that they would never make a treaty. Moreover, how are we going to preserve our forests? How are we going to make these forests so that we will have lumber in the future? How are we going to conserve our land? How are we going to make it so that they too do not wash away? In all these questions—in soil erosion, in reforestation, and conservation problems of all kinds—comes consideration of the fertility of the land, the ability to produce, the ability to bring forth corn and oats and other things, and if we do not do this our country will be so sterile that we cannot grow anything on it.

Now we will get to the subject of navigation, and when you are on navigation you are on flood control. And the only way you can have flood control and navigation is as a public proposition. You can navigate in the wide-open ocean, the Pacific, or the Gulf of Mexico, or the Atlantic, but you cannot navigate up and down rivers unless you have certain artificial works. These transcend State lines. They are big projects and cannot be done by private industry and, therefore, this navigation must be done by the Government. And in doing this we keep our land from being blown and washed away.

So now we get down to the most controversial subject, the fact that we are using money in order to get money back. It is a crime for the Government to spend money economically and make a good investment. It is all right for the power companies to make investments where they gouge the people out of their money, create a superstructure of holding companies to milk the investor, with salaries from each one of them to "gyp" the general public; but whenever the Government goes out and makes a sound investment, as they are making in the Tennessee Valley, where they will build power plants and sell power cheaper, pay better wages, and then get a return on the money, this, of course, aggravates and absolutely angers the Power Trust because they do not want the people to know that the Government can produce cheaper electricity than the Power Trust can and pay better wages and give better service. It is all in our philosophy of government. It is all an economic policy; an economic policy which the Democratic Party must face.

In speaking of such a great program as this, the enemies of this bill, and the conservation program of the Government, make long speeches about the T. V. A. cows—the foolishness of buying good cows to improve the breed down in those six or seven States. All I can say is, that when such a great, substantial work is considered, which will literally raise the standards of millions of people, that talking about cows is gnat snapping, fly slapping, and flea catching. Let us look at it as a big problem.

We were elected to serve the people. We were not elected for the purpose of getting profits for the power companies. Moreover, the country cannot stand it any longer.

T. V. A. ACTIVITIES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS TO DATE

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Tennessee Valley Authority program is a particularly complicated one—due to its multiple and dovetailing phases—I have asked for, and have received from the Washington office of the Authority, a comprehensive word picture of T. V. A. activities to date, which, for the information of my colleagues and the public at large, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD:

In its 2 years of existence the Tennessee Valley development has recorded a progress that is commanding world attention. Yet it is a national job in particular. For, as President Roosevelt told the valley people on the occasion of his November 1934 visit to that area of activity, what is going on here is "an example which will be a benefit not only to yourselves but to the whole 130,000,000 Americans in every part of the land."

OUTSIDE BENEFITS

Preliminary benefits of this development to other areas are already manifest.

At least half of the $45,000,000 spent for materials to date has been spread outside of the valley—profiting business in 35 States, from New England to the Pacific coast. A considerable portion of T. V. A.'s total pay-roll disbursement of $17,000,000 has likewise found its way into national circulation.

By employing 15,000 persons locally the Authority is indirectly relieving unemployment in outside industrial centers which formerly drew many valley people unable to eke a livelihood at home. Every individual employed by T. V. A. means income and subsistence for three or more other persons.

Approximately 10,000 T. V. A. employees are engaged in construction and associated work. Norris and Wheeler Dams are now three-quarters and one-half completed, respectively, and a beginning has been made on Pickwick Landing Dam.

Meanwhile Wilson Dam is being operated for the immediate convenience of thousands of households and places of business in three States—Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee—which appreciate the advantages of cheap power. In addition to acquired facilities, about 200 miles of rural transmission lines have been erected and more are projected. More than 300 municipalities—from Oklahoma to Florida—have inquired into the possibilities of T. V. A. service.

At Muscle Shoals Nitrate Plant No. 2 a demonstration plant has gone into experimental production looking to new and better types of fertilizer materials which may ultimately be a direct gain to every farmer in the country. At the same time the Government is assured of a national-defense asset maintained in stand-by condition.

GENERAL

The Tennessee Valley Authority Act was approved May 18, 1933. The three directors of the T. V. A. held their first meeting June 14, 1933, at which time they constituted its sole personnel. Today a definite start has been made in the development and control of the Tennessee River and its tributaries for navigation, flood control, utilization of surplus power, and other purposes.

DAMS

Besides operating Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals and building Norris, Wheeler, and Pickwick Landing Dams, the Authority is conducting surveys looking to the full utilization of the Tennessee River's unified Federal hydroelectric development.

Construction of the Norris Dam (named for Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS) began October 3, 1933. The Wheeler Dam was authorized by President Roosevelt October 13, 1933. The Pickwick Landing Dam was authorized November 21, 1934.

The Norris Dam will cost about $34,000,000, and the Wheeler Dam, without power installation, about $20,000,000. The Norris Dam is on the Clinch River some 25 miles northwest of Knoxville, Tenn., and about 80 miles above the point where the Clinch River joins the Tennessee. The Wheeler barrier is on the Tennessee River, in Alabama, about 15½ miles upstream from the Wilson Dam. The Pickwick Landing Dam, to cost $22,000,000, will rise near Shiloh Battlefield, in Tennessee, about 10 miles north of the Mississippi-Alabama State line. It will require about 3 years to build Pickwick Dam. Norris and Wheeler Dams will be completed in 1936.

These dams will not only help to regulate the flow of water on the upper Tennessee, in the interests of navigation and flood control both, but will serve also to provide additional power when needed.

POWER

In order to find an outlet for this present and potential horsepower, the T. V. A. is embarked on an elaborate electrification program. It has adopted power policies and established rate schedules as a "yardstick" for both public and private operation and has drafted exemplary rules and regulations governing the marketing of its power.

It has purchased or otherwise acquired private lines in certain areas in Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee to take care of the present power output of Wilson Dam. Purchase of approximately $3,000,000 of property from the Alabama Power Co., Mississippi Power Co., and Tennessee Electric Power Co., in January 1934 gave T. V. A. immediate urban and rural markets in that area. On June 1, 1934, the T. V. A., on payment of $850,700, acquired properties of the Mississippi Power Co. in certain counties in northern Mississippi.

In early February 1934 the T. V. A. began serving its first municipal customer—Tupelo, Miss. Today it is serving a total of 36 municipalities as well as rural homes in 14 counties in Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee.

Northeastern Mississippi is the center of T. V. A.'s rural electrification program—the first Federal venture of this nature. Here interested farmers have formed cooperatives to take advantage of T. V. A. power and rates. In one instance farmers in the county of Alcorn, Miss., are collaborating with the residents of the city of Corinth (that State) in making electric rate reductions average approximately 40 percent locally through a cooperative known as the "Alcorn County Electric Power Association."

Fourteen communities of northern Alabama, having attempted, without success, to purchase existing distribution facilities of the Alabama Power Co. in July 1934, formally signified willingness to join in a plan whereby T. V. A. would buy these plants and for a time operate them, pending amortization by the municipalities involved. These communities are: Florence, Sheffield, Tuscumbia, Courtland, Decatur, Falkville, Hartselle, Moulton, Red Bay, Russellville, Town Creek, Cherokee, Leighton, and Austinville. Due to legal and other obstructions which threatened to delay indefinitely the acquisition of the existing properties, the Authority, on December 14, 1934, withdrew its request that the Tri-Cities (Florence, Sheffield, and Tuscumbia) longer defer their original plans to build. But a Federal court restraining order has prevented them from so doing.

After negotiations extending over a period of several months, an agreement was reached in July 1934 between the T. V. A. and the National Power & Light Co. whereby the latter's electric property in eastern Tennessee (Tennessee Public Service Co.) was to be acquired, under certain conditions, by the T. V. A. for $6,000,000, with the idea of ultimately turning the properties over to the various municipalities involved for public operation. This is in line with the Authority's policy to avoid duplication of existing power systems wherever possible. Involved in this deal were Knoxville and 26 other communities. The agreement was approved by the power company stockholders, and by the Knoxville City Council, but litigation caused the deadline for the transaction to expire November 1, 1934, without the same being consummated.

Knoxville, Chattanooga, and Memphis are among the 27 municipalities which have voted on municipal ownership looking toward the use of T. V. A. power. Only five have registered in the negative.

APPLIANCES

In late May 1934 Tupelo saw the initial valley demonstration and sale of low-cost electrical appliances intended to go hand-in-hand with low rates in furthering the use of electricity. This phase of activity is under the Electric Home and Farm Authority. Created by Executive order, the E. H. F. A., with the cooperation of some 40 leading manufacturers of electrical appliances, plus 3 private power companies and 300 independent dealers, is making inexpensive electric ranges, refrigerators, water heaters, and farm pumps (other items to follow) available on long-term credit to the many persons—particularly rural—who, up to the present time, have been unable to afford such labor-saving devices. Prices are 25 to 35 percent lower. Many of these appliances have been placed on the national market, but for the time being E. H. F. A. financing is confined to low-power-rate areas, affecting 375,000 home users of electricity in parts of Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee. (The E. H. F. A. neither manufactures nor sells appliances.)

SOIL EROSION

The building of dams would be transitory gestures unless coupled with reforestation and other steps to check destructive soil erosion in the contributing basins. The effective storage capacity of dams is prematurely affected by the washing of silt into the reservoirs. This filling-in process, as far as some sections of the Tennessee Valley are concerned, goes on at the rate of as much as 1 percent a year. The T. V. A. land program aims to protect the public investment in its dams, which will play such an important role toward controlling flood waters and adding to the navigation and power possibilities of the river system.

Terracing demonstrations in Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee have made many farmers erosion conscious and have led to the local initiation of cooperatives to promote soil recovery and conservation. Some 13,000 acres have been terraced to date. Such efforts offer an economical method of halting the Tennessee River and its tributaries from "running away with the soil" to the detriment of navigation and efficiency of dams.

Cooperating in the general program are 6,400 C. C. C. boys who have constructed 200,000 brush, log, bag, or stone dams, and have placed matting on 5,000,000 square yards of eroded lands. The latter method has been found less costly and equally efficient, besides requiring one-third the time Tree nurseries have been established and millions of trees planted, including the blight-resistant Asiatic chestnut, to replace the doomed American variety. Also, a start has been made in cultivation of tree crops.

FERTILIZER

In line with land rehabilitation the T. V. A. is specifically authorized to develop new and better types of fertilizer materials. This it is doing, besides formulating better plans for fertilizer distribution In November 1934 a pilot plant at Muscle Shoals went into experimental production of a phosphate product, a substance sorely needed by the soil. Some 20,000 tons of this material has since been made and is now being distributed to more than 500 valley farmers for demonstration work in cooperation with State and local agricultural agents. The objective is to develop processes that will cheapen plant food and increase its application by the farmers of the Nation, to whom dust storms and floods have become a very vital menace.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

A primary responsibility of the Authority is in relation to national defense. Its creative act specifies that nitrate plant no. 2 at Muscle Shoals shall be kept in stand-by condition in event of an emergency. This is being done. Experiments now being made there in connection with phosphate fertilizer will contribute substantially to the national-defense program. Studies also are being made for the development of deposits of manganese, another material valuable in war. The valley is rich in mineral resources of especial military use. It is near the center of population and within short haul of many industrial centers.

NAVIGATION

With the completion of Pickwick Landing Dam, a 7-foot channel will have been created from the mouth of the Tennessee River at Paducah, Ky., to Guntersville, Ala., a distance of 358 miles. Approximately 157 miles of this water highway, from Pickwick Landing Dam to Guntersville, will have a 9-foot channel. The ultimate objective is a 9-foot channel from the Ohio River to Knoxville, Tenn., a river route of 652 miles. These long-needed navigation facilities that will be instrumental in opening the rich mineral and other natural resources of the valley to the mutual advantage of residents and an outside world.

FLOOD CONTROL

Closely allied with navigation and power development is flood control. The energy of Wilson Dam, for example, depends upon water fluctuation. At the present time low water may mean a decrease to one-seventh of its rated energy. The Norris Dam will tend to correct this by releasing water in dry season and storing it at other times. In doing so it will help reduce the flood menace in the Tennessee Valley, which now does $2,000,000 damage yearly. An integrated system of dams, such as planned by the T. V. A., will, in addition to opening new sources of power when needed, have indirect bearing on the flood hazard on the Mississippi River as well.

TRAINING

Because jobs on the dams go to the local jobless, the Authority employs more workmen than would otherwise be needed. These men, mostly from regions where agriculture yields meager returns, are employed half time with opportunity to benefit themselves by the training—also educational—courses provided for their spare time. They learn how to carry on useful occupations when they return to their homes. Such instruction not only results in more efficient work on the dams but, at the end of the construction period, will provide skilled workers for neighborhoods which heretofore have had none.

NORRIS TOWN

The T. V. A. built town of Norris, near the dam of the same name, comprises a distinctive and practical community. Here are housed families of workers on the dam or allied projects. The 350 dwellings are electrically equipped—more than one-third of them include electric heat—and represent stone, frame, or cinder-block construction. Rents range from $12.50 to $45 a month, with the lower brackets predominating. There is a school and cooperative store. Within the town confines are parks and a forest preserve, also community gardens, a demonstration farm, training center, and the construction camp proper. The latter is planned to fit into the industrial life of the community after the dam is completed.

There is a much smaller community at Wheeler Dam, and another small town is being built at Pickwick Landing Dam. The Muscle Shoals properties include three residential groups built prior to T. V. A. occupation.

COOPERATIVES

On January 24, 1934, there was incorporated in Knox County, Tenn., the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, which is interested in sponsoring cooperatives for the benefit of the valley people. It was allocated $300,000 by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration with which to begin operations. To date it has launched about a dozen cooperatives affecting some 8,000 families. Some of these activities are in mountain communities where as many as 70 percent of the people were on relief. The projects embrace fruit, berry, and vegetable canning; seed-potato cultivation, flour grinding, dairying, and handicraft textiles.

These and other activities in the Tennessee Valley afford visual evidence of a multiphased regional development which gives promise of not only returning national dividends on the war-time $127,000,000 investment at Muscle Shoals but, at the same time, points the way toward America's "planned future." For, as President Roosevelt says, "If we are successful here we can march on, step by step, in a like development of other great natural territorial units within our borders."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION—COMMERCIAL AIRPORT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some time on this matter.

Mrs. NORTON. I do not think there is anyone on this side who has requested time or who objects to the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] is in charge of the time on the other side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, with Mr. THOMASON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to preface my remarks upon the pending legislation by saying that personally I believe the time has come in America when we, as Members of Congress, should cease to vote huge appropriations of billions of dollars for warships and obsolete fighting equipment at the expense of the aviation of this Nation. We should encourage commercial aviation as a second line of our defense in this Republic. I bring this to the attention of the membership at this time simply to state that America must not lag behind in its appropriations for defense from the air, in view of the huge appropriations which we seem determined to continue to make.

That brings me to a discussion of the aviation needs of the Capital City of this land. Your subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia conducted hearings over a period of weeks upon the Gravelly Point airport measure. This committee heard a great many witnesses who came before it, speaking in favor of the Gravelly Point air site, the Washington-Hoover Airport as it now exists, and a great many other sites for airports in the District of Columbia and adjacent territory. Out of those hearings there came a belief on the part of the committee that what was advisable at this time was for the Congress of the United States to enact legislation which would bring the airport situation to the attention of the people of the District of Columbia in a way that definite action might be taken at this session of the Congress.

At this point permit me to say that the committee had no definite idea as to any particular site. I am certain that the members of the subcommittee and the District Committee today do not come here in connection with this legislation in favor of or against any certain airport site which was to be considered.

I should like at this time to turn to page 50 of the hearings on the airport bill and read a few sentences which were expressed by Rex Martin, the Assistant Director of the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce. I asked Mr. Martin this question:

Before you leave the stand, going back to your tour of Europe in the last few months, I would like for you to state for the committee how far, in your opinion, we lag behind, here at the National Capital, in comparison with other capitals of the world, from the standpoint of aviation facilities.

Mr. Martin replied:

It would be like comparing a chicken yard with a Texas range in size, mostly. While Tempelhof and Le Bourget are not extraordinary, they are bigger. They have no airport at The Hague, in Holland. They have a very fine one at Amsterdam, a very good one at Rotterdam, and the airport at Brussels is superior in every way.

Think of it! The airport of little Belgium is superior in every way to ours. He said further:

The airport at Croydon, England, is superior by far. The one that they are presently using at Rio de Janeiro is, I think, better, though it is not well located. The new one that they have there will be extraordinary. The airport in Rome is better. The one in Venice is not better.

Then he goes on to say:

Any number of cities of Europe have better facilities than we have—Munich and Stuttgart; even the little town of Friedrichshafen has a better airport.

Then Mr. Nichols, a member of the subcommittee, asked Mr. Martin:

There are many cities in the United States that have airports superior to Washington's, are there not?

And he said:

Quite a number.

Now, that is the testimony given by Mr. Martin, Assistant Director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, as shown by the hearings.

I now come to the testimony, very briefly, of Edward V. Rickenbacker, who is one of the leading aviation authorities of this Nation. This is what he said upon the stand, speaking of the present facilities at Washington:

It is without doubt one of the most hazardous airports in this country for the number of schedules coming in and out with the type of equipment that is being used, and I think it is truly remarkable that there has not been a serious accident. In fact, it is one of my worries 24 hours of the day every day. It is almost expected all the time. I would not be surprised at any time to hear of a very fatal collision. It would not be news to me.

I bring these two opinions to you from high authority about the need of an airport with adequate facilities for the District of Columbia now. We believe that in this pending legislation we have presented a way whereby we shall not have one group arguing for a certain airport and another group arguing for another site, but that we shall create a commission to choose a site for the establishment and development of a commercial airport for the District of Columbia.

This commission is to consist of seven members, as follows: First, the Director of Aeronautics of the Department of Commerce, Mr. Vidal; the Second Assistant Postmaster General, in this case Mr. Branch; a Member of the House of Representatives, who shall be the chairman, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House; a United States Senator, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; an appointee of the air transport companies serving the city of Washington, and let us remember in this connection that there are nine schedules running in and out of Washington every day and that the number is going to be increased in the very near future; one member from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be selected by the Board; and Amelia Earhart Putnam, internationally known aviatrix. Some one may ask why we have selected a woman to act on this commission. I may say, because I see the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] and the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] in the Chamber at the present time, that we believe that women have taken their place not only in some avenues of endeavor, but in practically all the avenues of worthwhile endeavor in America today, so we felt that this woman should be given an opportunity of serving the District of Columbia and the Nation as well.

The members of this commission will receive no salary but provision is made to reimburse them for actual expenses incurred in the discharge of official duties. This commission is to be empowered and instructed to make a survey of the best possible sites in the District of Columbia, keeping in mind always the large amount of testimony from various commissions which have investigated this question over a period perhaps of the last 10 or 12 years. It is further provided that the action of a majority of the members of the commission shall constitute the action of the commission. After a site has been selected the duties of the commission automatically cease. Within 30 days after the first commission has concluded its service by selecting a site, there is to be appointed a second commission, to be known as the "Washington Airport Commission", to provide for the actual administration of the site which has been chosen.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The President of the United States, by and with the consent of the United States Senate, is hereby authorized and directed to create a commission to establish and operate this public airport for the city of Washington and the District of Columbia.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma, a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. NICHOLS. I think the gentleman omitted one phase of the proceedings, and that is that the second commission, appointed by the President of the United States, will have as its duty the acquisition of the site recommended by the first commission. In other words, the first commission does not acquire a site; it simply selects the site. It is the President's commission, appointed for a term of years, which acquires and purchases the site, and administers it after its acquisition.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma; he is entirely correct. I may say further in this connection that the committee which is to select the site, of course, takes into consideration the prime factors, that is the time of completion, the cost of the enterprise, the safety of the field, and its proximity to the city of Washington.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Is this airport to be used by private air transportation companies?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is to be for the use of commercial enterprise; every type of air transportation.

Mr. COLDEN. Why should the District of Columbia and the Federal Government furnish an airport for the use of commercial companies? Is it done in any other city?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. As a matter of fact, airports are furnished in nearly every instance by the cities, towns, or municipalities in which they are located, and in no case do the transport companies build them. The cost of maintaining the airports, however, is taken care of out of revenues derived from charges on transport companies for the use of the field, rentals, and hangar space. Over a period of years they even show a profit.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman. Does that answer the inquiry of the gentleman from California?

Mr. COLDEN. I should like to say to the gentleman that at one time I was a member of the City Council of Los Angeles. We were inveigled into buying an airport on the theory that it would be self-supporting; but it proved to be a failure.

Mr. NICHOLS. That might be true.

Mr. RANDOLPH. How long ago was that?

Mr. COLDEN. That was in 1928 or 1929. It has proved to be a disappointment and a costly item to the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The acquisition of an airport should be looked at also from the standpoint of national defense should it not?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes. We feel that not only are we serving the District of Columbia but also the Nation's Capital when we provide ample airport facilities.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Which could be used for the protection of the National Capitol if necessary.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is right. I thank the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLDEN. If the gentleman will yield further, I should like to add in this respect that the Los Angeles Airport has been a failure. Private companies refused to use it and built their own airport, which they maintain themselves.

Mr. RANDOLPH. There has been, of course, a rapid development of aviation within the period since the city of Los Angeles had its experience. Even in my little city in West Virginia we have a municipal airport. This is true, of course, in all the largest cities of the United States.

To continue with the make-up of this commission: The members are to be selected by the President, three in number. The first commissioners are to be appointed for a term of 2 years, 4 years, and 6 years, respectively, the President having the right, of course, to designate the chairman of the commission.

The said commission, or a majority of them, shall have the power to elect a manager for the airport hereinafter to be acquired and all officers and agents thereof and to make needful rules and regulations, subject to the laws and to the rules of the Department of Commerce regarding aviation.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman state to the Members of the House the necessity for these two commissions?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman that the District Committee members felt they wanted a commission simply to act from the standpoint of the selection of a site, with no entangling alliances connected therewith. This commission would receive, as I previously stated, no salary, and would act only until the selection of the site had been made.

Mr. LUCAS. Following that, under section 4 it is stated within 30 days after the selection of the site by the first commission there shall be a second commission appointed, to be known as the "Washington Airport Commission." There is delegated to the President of the United States authority to create and select this commission. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he believes the second commission would be involved in any entangling alliances in connection with the selection of this airport?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; I do not mean that. The first commission, if and when set up, would only function until the actual site was picked; then that commission's power would automatically cease.

There may be a question in the minds of the Members as to the necessity for these two commissions, but we believe there should be a permanent commission functioning in Washington, D. C., for the control and regulation of airport facilities. Section 8 of the legislation provides that a sum not to exceed $2,500,000 shall be made available for the purchase of the land and improvements.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this airport bill, and I stand here this morning in the peculiar position of being opposed to a bill which bears my name. If the Members will look at the bill as now presented to the House, they will find that the committee struck out everything after the enacting clause and inserted an entirely new bill.

In this new bill the committee erects a double-headed monster in the form of two commissions to decide, first, where the airport shall be built, and then the other to build and operate the airport. May I say at the outset that I favor a proper, safe airport for the District of Columbia. I have been interested in this matter for several sessions of Congress. It has been investigated by, I would say, at least six committees of the Congress as to where the airport should be placed. The agency in Washington that knows more about where an airport ought to be built than the individual Members of Congress, who can give this matter but little time, is the National Capitol Park and Planning Commission, which has been set up for the purpose of determining just this sort of question.

There are only two sites that have ever been given serious consideration. One is what is known as the "Gravelly Point" site, which is under water. It has to be filled in. This site is favored by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and a large number of other agencies, the names of which I shall give you presently. They have constantly and repeatedly urged the adoption of this site. The other site is the Washington-Hoover Airport, the existing airport across the Fourteenth Street or Highway Bridge. Ultimately, when an airport is selected for the District of Columbia, I believe it will be one of these two sites. The committee reports against the Gravelly Point site. I think this Congress should prohibit by proper amendment to this bill the selection of the Washington-Hoover site, and I will tell the Members why. Every time an effort is made to erect an airport in the District of Columbia, a gentleman by the name of Soloman appears and monopolizes the time of the committee. Mr. Soloman is an officer of the Washington-Hoover Airport Co. The Washington-Hoover Airport was sold under deed of trust some years ago for something like $600,000. The airport company state that they had a lot of money in the project prior to that time, which brought their total cost up to $1,600,000. This may be entirely true, and I do not question the statement, because I do not know. However, when it was put under the hammer and knocked down at public auction, it brought six-hundred-and-some-odd thousand dollars. Whenever a question is raised about purchasing the site from this company, the white elephant they have on their hands, the price mentioned is anywhere from $1,600,000 on up.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. Yet the plot of ground over there is not big enough to land a good apple cart on?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have not got to that feature as yet.

If we set up an unofficial commission with the power to buy this property, and they will have this power under the present bill unless a limitation is put therein, there is the possibility—and I may say the strong probability—that the present Washington-Hoover Airport will be selected and we will be buying that land for $17,400 per acre.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would the gentleman favor eliminating both Gravelly Point and the Washington-Hoover Airport?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If the committee will agree to such an amendment, I will conclude my argument immediately and withdraw my opposition to the bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Personally I believe that neither of the places mentioned are suitable for an airport.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Understand that the subcommittee is not favoring the Washington-Hoover Airport. They are giving full power to the commission to make the selection. My fear is not of the subcommittee. My fear is of this unofficial commission that is going to be set up to spend two and a half million dollars of our money. If we are going to spend two and a half million dollars, let us investigate the matter and make our own selection and say where the airport should be located.

I now want to tell you about the size of the Washington-Hoover Airport. The previous hearings on the Washington-Hoover Airport show that it is not large enough, and that it is unsafe and cannot be made safe unless it is enlarged and unless it takes in a part of the Arlington Experimental Farm.

This bill contains a provision making it mandatory upon any department of the Government to turn over to them any part of their land which may be needed to make a sufficiently large airport at this point. If they select the Washington-Hoover Airport they have got to have a large slice out of the Arlington Experimental Farm.

Now, let us see what the Department of Agriculture says about this. Here is a letter written to the committee during a former hearing by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hyde. When they wrote to him and asked whether the Arlington Experimental Farm could spare a portion of its land in order to make this a competent airport, he replied:

> As there is no other portion of Arlington Farm suitable in topography and soil character for much of this type of this experimental work, its abandonment for that purpose on short notice would irreparably damage the plant research programs of the Bureau of Plant Industry and seriously interfere with related work of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils.

Then, in conclusion, he states:

> If Congress should authorize the transfer of this 50-acre portion of Arlington Farm for other uses, the question of relocation and the provision of funds necessary to accomplish this would be immediately precipitated and even if authority and funds for relocation were available, several years would be required for the physical transfer to a new site without serious loss to the public of results of experimental work now under way.
> In view of the existing situation, this Department could not look with favor on the transfer of the land in question.

It is absolutely essential that they should have a portion of Arlington Experimental Farm in order to build an adequate airport on this property for which it is proposed to pay $17,400 an acre.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. EAGLE. In the event that 50 acres of the Arlington plat be added to the present little patch there, would not the great concrete highway which runs through there disrupt and interrupt the traffic?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No; the heaviest route in the United States, which is U. S. No. 1, runs right along beside the present airport and is a constant menace and will always be a constant menace to those who travel by plane, as well as those who travel otherwise; then the Military Road bisects the field, and traffic lights are maintained to warn of approaching planes.

Mr. EAGLE. I may say to the gentleman that I so completely share his view that in flying up from Texas this week-end I declined to leave at a time that would put our ship down here after dark, because I knew it would be unusually dangerous.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The committee in its report did recommend that Military Road be closed immediately, did it not?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am not speaking of Military Road. There is one road just to the side of it and one road that runs right through the middle of it. They will have to close Military Road, which is the road used to get to the Experimental Farm, in order to establish an airport there that will be safe under any conditions.

Now, what I want the committee to do, when we reach the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule, is to put in an amendment that will change the personnel of this commission. I would also like you to put in an amendment that will cut out the clause which would permit this unofficial commission to take away from the Department of Agriculture a part of the Arlington Experimental Farm, far more important to the people of this country than the matter of whether they ever have an airport in the city of Washington or not. I should also like for the committee to put into the bill an amendment limiting this commission to $1,000,000 for the purchase of the land for this airport. You know you can go out here and get plenty of land for an airport for $1,000,000. If you limit it to $1,000,000, then you cut out this Washington-Hoover Airport Co. that is trying to sell its property to the Government for $17,400 an acre.

May I say on behalf of Arlington County, where this property is situated, that I have a resolution which I should like to put in the RECORD, from the county board of that county, which is the governing board of the county, in which they petition the Congress not to permit the Government to purchase this airport and deprive them of a very large chunk of taxes which they get every year from this property. I think the committee will feel that this local community, where this project is being placed, ought to be entitled to some consideration, particularly when you realize that it is a drain upon their taxes of $7,500 per year if you take this property out of taxation by selling it to the Government.

I now want to call attention further, if I have the time, to a matter with respect to the Gravelly Point site, and I am not making an argument for Gravelly Point. As I said in reply to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], if this committee will agree to an amendment excluding both the Gravelly Point site and the Washington-Hoover Airport site from this bill, I will withdraw my objection to it this minute, but I do not believe the committee is going to pass a bill which leaves it in the power of an unofficial commission to permit this Washington-Hoover Airport Co. to sell their white elephant to the United States Congress for $17,400 an acre.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. As I understand, if this bill passes, they will not have to come back to Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No; if this bill passes, this unofficial commission selects the site and their say is final. The only thing left for commission no. 2 to do is to build the airport and operate it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the gentleman give the Members of the House any basic or fundamental reason why two commissions should be set up here to negotiate this matter?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I cannot. I am violently opposed to that and I hope the committee will not adopt the amendment reported by the committee when it is offered to the House.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the selection of a proper site for an air mail terminus. I can recollect very vividly when we initiated the first transcontinental air line that we had great difficulty in setting up landing fields from the Atlantic to the Pacific. At that time the Government sent out high-pressure salesmen to interest parties in the selection and establishment of air fields, and for many years afterward complaints were made that the Government either refused to land on the field or that the company or individual that set up the field was anxious to dispose of it to the Government. This advance selection of airport sites has not always proved advantageous in view of later developments.

If we decide to abandon the present facilities for an airport 20 miles away, we might have a white elephant on our hands 5 years from now, due to the ever-changing transportation service.

The present field is certainly a hazardous one. It is so regarded by the experts of every country. It is particularly hazardous for ships flying into the field, and should be changed and changed at once.

I have no objection to the bill or the details of the bill before us, but I really believe that the proper procedure for Congress to follow would be to establish an airport where it is now located.

From all opinion it is the best located airport of any city in the United States, and I have flown into a number of them. It is the best location because it is just across the river from the city. It is near the post office and within 5 minutes of the business center.

These airplanes carry passengers, express, and mail, and if there is delay in the transportation and delivery after the plane has landed that must be taken into consideration.

The Washington-Hoover Airport is the most convenient location, and its improvement can be brought about without much delay by eliminating the Military Road running through the center, eliminating the temporary bathing beach and filling up the adjacent lagoon, and turning over to the airport a portion of the Government's experimental farm land.

A. C. C. camp could go into the Washington-Hoover Airport and put it in condition within 60 days for flying under maximum safeguards.

Mr. McFARLANE. Can we not change the name of that airport?

Mr. MEAD. Call it the "new deal" airport. [Laughter.] If we select a site 10, 15, or 20 miles away, we will have to put up with this hazardous situation until the construction of the other airport is completed. If we improve the present airport, we will have the best located airport in the United States and one that is free from hazards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, we have an excellent site, and we will not have to worry about the price because, as I understand it, the commission created by the terms of this legislation has the authority to condemn the land.

I want to make this one closing observation. The size is ideal; it can be improved, and it affords an opportunity for Washington to have a real airport. We talk about airports in other cities and in other countries; it must be remembered that this is only one of three or four airports that we have in the city of Washington. We have the Army airport, the marine airport, one or two private airports, but the Washington-Hoover Airport improved, as I have suggested, will make a splendid airport, unequaled in many respects by that of any other city in the United States, because of its being so close to the very heart of the city of Washington.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman believe that as long as we have this name attached to this airport, there is going to continue to be a hazard. Its name ought to be changed, and I suggest that this committee change the name of the airport and relieve us from that hazard.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would it make much difference in getting to and from an airport if it took 2 or 3 minutes longer, provided you have better landing facilities?

Mr. MEAD. Two or three minutes would be all right, but I understand the other sites are more than 2 or 3 minutes further away.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We investigated sites here and there was a difference of only 2 or 3 minutes in locating a site that was cheaper and more reasonable.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Permit me to suggest that some 48 sites have been presented to various committees for consideration.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I took this matter up with a number of the men who fly into the airport, who use the airport, and this is what they say: If the Military Road were taken out and part of the experimental farm turned over by the Federal Government to the airport, so that they could clear the ground and move the hangars back, it would be a very excellent field and would probably cost only one-quarter of the maximum included in this bill. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this bill has gone off on the wrong premise. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has injected into this a proposition that would lead you to believe that this is a consideration for the location of a site, as between Gravelly Point and the Washington-Hoover Airport. That is strictly and entirely not the situation. The merits of the two sites are simply two things that will enter into the consideration of this first-named commission. They will consider every site, and the testimony in the hearings shows that there are some 45 in close proximity to the District of Columbia available for airports for the District of Columbia. The gentleman rather impugns the motive of somebody. Let us see what this commission is; let us see if there is any danger from this commission. Who are they? No. 1 is the Director of Aeronautics of the Department of Commerce. Where is the man who is going to rise and say that he has some selfish interest as between one and another airport? He will be a member of the commission. No. 2 is the Assistant Postmaster General. He is in charge of air mail. Who is the man or woman in this House who will say that he has a selfish interest in the selection of a site for an airport? He is to be a member of the commission. No. 3 is a Member of the House of Representatives, who shall be chairman, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House. Where is the man who is going to say that he has a selfish motive in the selection of this site, which can be selected from all the world—a Member of your own body, to be picked by the Speaker? No. 4 is a United States Senator, who is appointed by the President of the Senate. Is he going to be a "fixed" member of this commission?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will anybody have time to explain to the committee members why it is that the Government is buying and why it is that the District of Columbia is not buying this airport?

Mr. NICHOLS. I shall answer that, but let me finish with this first. The fifth member of the commission is to be an appointee of the air-transport companies serving the city of Washington. Who is more interested in an adequate airport, one which will be located properly, one which will furnish every facility for landing, than the companies who pay for the support and upkeep in rental of this airport?

Do you think they are going to be swayed as between a location in Virginia and one in Maryland, or do you think they are going to protect their business interest, whose interests are identical with the interests to be served by this airport? Another member of the commission is a member of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Who is going to impugn his motives? Where is the man that is going to say that he is a "fixed" member of the commission? Then there is Amelia Earhart Putnam. Certainly she knows how to fly an airplane and she has been in and out of airports. Who is there among the Membership who will assert that she will be a "fixed" member for the selection of an airport?

Let us go on. There will be two more, one a member of the Park and Planning Commission of the District of Columbia. This will be offered as a committee amendment and I trust it will be adopted. A member of the Park and Planning Commission of the District of Columbia. Is he going to be a fixed member of the commission, in favor of some particular site?

Another, a member of the board of trade, who represents the business interests of the District of Columbia. Will he go on the commission, fixed against one site or another? If it is possible to select a fairer commission, a fairer cross-cut of the representatives who are interested in this important matter, I do not know how it can be done. The only interest of the subcommittee in the consideration of this bill was to select a commission of which no one could be suspicious after they had selected a site.

In answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] as to why it was necessary to create two commissions, permit me to say it is necessary to create two commissions so that there will be obviated every chance of someone suggesting graft or frame-up. The first commission is a nonsalaried commission. It selects the site. We do not leave it in their hands to purchase the site and spend the money. We take it out of their consideration. They are discharged. They are no longer in the picture. Then we ask the President of the United States to appoint a commission of three who shall serve for a term of years at a per diem and expenses, not only to purchase a site but to operate and maintain the site. If any Member can think of a fairer plan, let him suggest it.

The gentleman from California asked, "Why should the Government pay anything on this airport?" The Government should pay its proportionate part of the construction and maintenance of this airport principally because it will receive equal benefits from it with the District of Columbia. A further reason why the Government should pay part of it is that this airport will be located in the Capital of the United States, a Capital that is rapidly becoming the Capital of the world, and in this Capital City of this Nation there should be an airport second to none in the entire world.

The Government does not land its air mail down on the Government landing field. You can take a bucket of water and stick an airplane down in that flat across from Gravelly Point. The Government is not going to lose any money. They put up the money, and then after 10 years the District of Columbia pays them back 50 percent of the money with 3-percent interest. Then the District of Columbia and the Government contribute equally, 50 percent each, to the maintenance of the airport. The Government and the District of Columbia share equally, 50 percent each, in the revenues that come from the airport. I know the gentleman from Texas, TOM BLANTON, is going to ask me if there is going to be any profit. I do not know whether there is going to be any profit or not.

Mr. BLANTON. There will not be any.

Mr. NICHOLS. Very well; probably not.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. In the gentleman's own home town there is an airport.

Mr. NICHOLS. No. I am a country boy. I live in a town of only 3,000 people.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Well, we have one and we support it ourselves and we paid for it. I cannot vote for this bill, because I do not see that the Government's contribution is necessary.

Mr. COLDEN. And the taxpayers pay the bill, too, if it is not self-supporting.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman says his city built an airport and paid the expense of it. I presume that somebody in that city thought they needed an airport. Because they needed it they took the money from the city and paid for it and built it, and they should have done so. Now, does Washington, with the ever-present problem of national defense looking her in the face——

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Oh, she has the Army and the Navy.

Mr. NICHOLS. I did not yield to the gentleman, but when it rains the Army and the Navy land their airplanes at the Washington-Hoover Airport today. The Army and Navy field is down in the flats. It is on made land. The water has never settled out of that land. It is still seepy and boggy. You can land an airplane and take a tub of water and stick it tight to the ground on the Army and Navy field. This airport should be located in a field that is high and dry and not in a spot of made land taken from the bottom of the river, as was the present site of the Army airport.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. McMILLAN. What would happen to Gravelly Point, if it was selected, on that score?

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not care to go into that, but the hearings are full of the testimony of experts on the subject. The testimony is that it will take from 1 to 40 years in the first place to complete it; that it will take from 1 to 5 years for it to settle and for the water to seep out of it. I have no interest in where the airport is. I do not care. But we sat for 3 weeks on this subcommittee listening to every available witness, and we have come here to you with a bill giving our best and mature judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] has expired.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 4 additional minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is just one real consideration in this bill, as I see it, and that is the question of whether or not the Congress thinks that the District of Columbia should have an adequate airport. No one who testified before our subcommittee even suggested that we had ample commercial landing facilities. No one who has ever landed either on the Washington or the Hoover field under present conditions, with Military Road splitting that field in two, will say that we have adequate landing facilities. Regardless of whether you like it or not, aviation is going forward. This country is rapidly becoming air-minded. The leading cities and communities in these United States are providing facilities with which they can take care of the march of progress, which is now being led by the rapid strides made in aviation.

The most rapid mail transportation today is carried on by means of airplanes. We should furnish the Post Office Department of this Government a place in the city of Washington where commercial ships can land the air mails. Private companies, if you please, have contracts from your Government and from my Government, to carry the mail. The Government does not provide them with landing facilities at the Army and Navy fields. The Government pays the private companies to carry the mail and it is up to the company to put the mail down at its own expense.

Visitors who come to the city of Washington on business, which they think should be expedited to the extent of their flying here, have the right to expect and know that they will be set down in an airplane in the city of Washington at a port where every care has been taken to protect their safety.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. It is the gentleman's opinion, then, that any airport constructed in the District of Columbia would serve not only the District of Columbia but also the Nation?

Mr. NICHOLS. Certainly, and it would serve every governmental department here.

I want to close with this statement. As I said before, this is a matter that has been before the House for at least two sessions; not this bill, but the question of an airport for Washington. This subcommittee sat for weeks and weeks and heard everybody whom we thought could throw any light on the subject. I sincerely hope the Committee of the Whole will pass this bill. No one has cried a great deal about expense. If you want to impugn the motives of this commission, all right; if you think there is a fairer commission that can be selected, let us try it; but if you want an airport for the city of Washington vote for this bill.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is only one feature of this bill to which I object, and that is the feature requiring the Government of the United States to pay half of the expenses of purchasing this field and of maintaining it, and for it to provide all of the money and then wait 10 years before half of it is paid back. We have two fields of our own here in the District of Columbia, two landing fields owned by the United States Government, bought by the United States Government, and maintained by the United States Government, one for the Army and one for the Navy, and we do not need any interest in this field. This is a District of Columbia city field, just like the city field we have at Abilene, Tex.—and we have one of the finest landing fields in the United States in my home city, a double A–1 field where planes land regularly every day, mail planes, Army planes, passenger planes, private planes, every kind of plane. It is an all-weather field. When the people in the district of my friend from South Carolina want a field they buy and build it. When our friends from New York want fields they build them, they pay for them, and they maintain them.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry not to yield, but I want to use my few minutes myself.

Mr. Chairman, why should our taxpayers back home put up the money for this municipal Washington field? Our distinguished friends on this committee are very generous with the American taxpayers' money. They take it all out of the Public Treasury. None of it is to be paid back for 10 years. For 10 years the people of the District get the benefit of it and then begin paying back so much a year for 4 years.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now; I am sorry I haven't the time. When the gentleman goes home I want him to tell his people back home that for 75 years they have been taxed not only for their own civic enterprises at home but they were taxed also to bear 50 percent of the cost of the local civic government here in Washington, respecting all the public improvements in Washington, until in late years we stopped it. During those years the people in the 48 States paid 50 percent of the water system, the light system, the school buildings, the playgrounds, the bridges—the million-dollar bridge out here on Connecticut Avenue and the $3,500,000 Key Bridge. They helped to pay for all these civic improvements here, embracing 1,200 parks in Washington used for the pleasure and benefit of the people of Washington. The people back home do not get any benefit of these things unless they make a trip to Washington and visit here for a few days. I am getting tired of seeing the taxpayers back home mulcted and almost ruined by overtaxation when they can hardly pay their own expenses, when they are already overburdened with taxes, when they have to pay all of their own civic expenses back home.

We should strike out the provision requiring the Government to pay any part of this expense. I am with our distinguished friend, the gentlewoman from New Jersey in providing Washington with an airport. She wants a nice airplane field here, and so do I; but I want to let the people of Washington pay for their own field.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. If the gentleman will help me get a bill through Congress giving the franchise to the people of Washington I will go along with him in some of his efforts.

Mr. BLANTON. Franchise for what?

Mrs. NORTON. A franchise to vote, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. What, against the Constitution! A bill was passed through Congress in 1871 giving the people of Washington the right to vote, but the Supreme Court held they did not have that right under the Constitution, and in 1874 Congress took it away again; but in the meantime they got into debt so far that it almost bankrupted the Nation to pay them out. We paid them out then but we provided also that if any official of the District of Columbia ever again should borrow another dollar he should be put in the penitentiary for a long term of years.

Why did Congress do that? They did it because they did not want this Nation's Capital to get into debt.

Mrs. NORTON. Does not the gentleman know that the Government has given 30 percent of the vast public-works fund as grants to the people throughout this country?

Mr. BLANTON. And the people of Washington have gotten their full proportion of all P. W. A. grants, and have already received their 30-percent donations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider the substitute committee amendment as an original bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentlewoman from New Jersey means to consider the committee substitute amendment as an original bill for the purpose of amendment. In other words that it shall be read by sections and amendments shall be in order at the end of each section?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. At the conclusion of the reading of this amendment, will it then be in order to vote upon the adoption of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will have to vote upon the committee substitute amendment.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That there is hereby created a commission to choose a site for the establishment and development of a commercial airport for the District of Columbia; said commission to consist of seven persons, as follows: The Director of Aeronautics of the Department of Commerce; the Second Assistant Postmaster General; a Member of the House of Representatives, who shall be chairman, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; a United States Senator, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; and an appointee of the air transport companies serving the city of Washington; one member from the Board of Commissioners for the District of Columbia, to be selected by said Board; and Amelia Earhart Putnam, internationally known aviatrix. Said commission shall receive no salary, but shall be reimbursed for actual expenses of travel incurred in the discharge of official duties herein prescribed."

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mrs. NORTON: On page 4, line 18, strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine."

On page 5, line 2, after the semicolon, strike out the word "and."

On page 5, line 3, after the word "aviatrix", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following language: "an appointee of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and an appointee of the Board of Trade of the District of Columbia."

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the latter amendment is offered in order to give the people of the District of Columbia greater representation on this commission and is the sole purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: On page 4, line 18, after the word "persons", strike out down to the period on line 3, page 5, and insert the following: "To be appointed by the President."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the difference between this amendment and the original bill is that instead of naming various and sundry individuals, officials, and others, as is done in the bill, the selection of the committee is left to the appointment of the President of the United States. That is all it does. It strikes out all of that part which says that so-and-so, Amelia Earhart, and somebody else shall be appointed to the commission, and directs the President of the United States to appoint the members of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments offered by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Said commission is hereby instructed and empowered to make a survey of possible and practical sites and to study testimony submitted in the various congressional hearings conducted on this subject. Said commission is further instructed and empowered to choose a site for the establishment and development of a commercial airport, taking into consideration as prime factors, the questions of time of completion, cost of the enterprise, safety, and the proximity to the community to be served.

SEC. 3. After a site has been selected by the said commission (and it is hereby ordered that the action of a majority of the members of the commission shall constitute the action of the commission), the duties and powers of the commission for the selection of said site shall end.

SEC. 4. Within 30 days after the selection of the site by the commission, which shall be known as the "Washington Airport Commission", as above provided for, the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the United States Senate, is hereby authorized and directed to create a commission to establish and operate a public airport at Washington, D. C., to consist of three persons, to be appointed by him, and the first commissioners so appointed shall hold office for the terms of 2 years, 4 years, and 6 years, respectively, and until their successors shall have been appointed and qualified, and thereafter every commissioner appointed to succeed said commissioners shall be appointed for the full term of 6 years, and the President shall designate which one of said commissioners shall be chairman. Any vacancy created by death, resignation, or dismissal, or otherwise, shall be filled for the period of such vacancy only, and all such appointments shall be confirmed by the Senate of the United States. Said commissioners shall receive no salary, but shall be reimbursed for actual expenses of travel incurred in the discharge of official duties, and shall reside within 10 miles of the Capital of the United States.

SEC. 5. Said Commission, or a majority of them, shall have power to elect a manager for the airport hereinafter to be acquired, and all other officers and agents thereof, and to make all needful rules and regulations, subject to the law and to conform to the rules of the Department of Commerce regarding aviation.

SEC. 6. The said Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to acquire the property selected by the Washington Airport Commission first provided for in this act, together with all rights, privileges, and easements incident to same, and if, after private negotiation, a satisfactory price therefor cannot be agreed upon, then the said Commission is hereby authorized and required to give notice that said property is needed for public purposes and that the same will be condemned, and accordingly the same shall be condemned, and the condemnation proceedings shall conform as nearly as may be to the proceedings authorized and set up in the act of Congress approved May 18, 1933, known as "An act to create the Tennessee Valley Authority", and said provisions of said act are hereby incorporated into and shall become a part of this act.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be misunderstood because of the remarks I made heretofore as being opposed to the District of Columbia getting an airport. I think I realize as fully as any member of the committee that the District of Columbia needs a commercial airport, but I have not been convinced after listening to the arguments made this morning that the United States Government should contribute the amount that it is proposed to contribute by this bill to the erection of this airport, the building of it and its continued maintenance throughout the years. This final commission is authorized to contribute for the Government one-half of the expense of the airport.

Mr. Chairman, it is no argument to tell me that because the city of Sacramento, which is the capital city of my State, desires an airport the State of California should build an airport in the city of Sacramento because that is the city of official business. It is no argument for national defense that this airport should be built or paid for in any way by the Government. The Government is intensely defended here in the city of Washington with its Marine airport, its Army airport, and its Navy airport. So far as that swamp land is concerned, the last time I flew to the city of Washington, the pilot refused to land in this commercial field, but did land at the Army or Navy field across the way.

Mr. Chairman, the United States Government is going to make a sufficient contribution to this airport that it should be selected at the commercial airport. There are a great many acres in this agricultural field that is spoken of, which the United States Government proposes to give. If such a plan is followed there are 14.25 acres available in the experimental farm. If the present airport is worth $16,000 per acre, multiply this 14.25 acres by $16,000 and this agricultural land is probably better than where the airport is at present situated. The area in Military Road amounts to 4.82 acres. The area in the lagoon amounts to 10.67 acres. The property between the lagoon and Military Road amounts to 8.10 acres. I have recited enough acreage here that on the basis of $10,000 an acre would amount to more than $500,000 as the contribution on the part of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, if the District of Columbia wants an airport, which it should have, the United States Government should not be made to contribute just because the Capitol is located here. There is no city from my experience and travels in the last few years during the depression that is so blessed by God as the city of Washington, D. C.; yet the folks here do not seem to know it. If they do not appreciate this fact, they better leave the District of Columbia and ride through the countryside and see the poverty and distress which exists in the country, and I am not speaking for ballyhoo purposes or for the newspapers at home when I make that statement.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this bill somebody, it seems to me, has received some advance information. I did not know that the commission, which this bill creates, was going to select the Washington-Hoover Field. I do not think anybody knows it and, of course, it is ridiculous to say that they do, but you continually hear this bill discussed with respect to the merits of the Washington-Hoover Airport. This is beside the question and is ridiculous. They talk about the expense to the Government in taking the Experimental Farm. There was no testimony before the subcommittee by anyone that they would take more than a small corner off of the Experimental Farm, and there was also testimony before the committee that regardless of what happened out there, the Government is now making plans to move the Experimental Farm entirely from its present location and establish it at another point.

As to whether or not Washington needs an airport for national defense, of course, Washington does not need one airport for national defense. I hope I never live to see the time when this country is engaged in war again, but if it is, and it happens that the war is brought to our shores, we will need plenty of airports for national defense purposes around the Nation's Capital. Neither 3 nor 4 nor 5 nor 6 nor 7 will be adequate. You certainly cannot concentrate your flying strength in time of war at one or two air bases. Certainly the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps bases that the gentleman has referred to, plus the present field, would not be ample for national defense purposes in time of an emergency. I say frankly to this Congress that I think before many years have gone by you will have under consideration in this House a proposition to dot several places around the Nation's Capital as auxiliary landing fields for defense purposes, as they do in nearly every other capital in the world for its adequate protection.

Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this bill, please do not be led off by the side arguments as between Gravelly Point and Washington-Hoover Field. They should not enter into the picture at all. One would think they were the only available sites in the country around the District of Columbia. Within a radius of 5 miles of the business district, the country is dotted with adequate sites on which could be placed a landing field that could be purchased right. You do not need to be scared about the $17,400 an acre that the gentleman from Virginia talked about. There are spots all around this city, and this commission not only is directed, but is ordered to consider every available site and, as I have said, unless you can impugn the motives of this commission, you have got to assume that they will consider all the sites.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is there adequate provision made to provide proper safeguards with respect to bidding and publicity in regard to all the sites submitted?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; there is not. They can select the site and then the other commission buys it. The first commission does not do anything but select the site, and the second commission buys it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the other nations of the world, many of which I have mentioned here today, through their capitals and their splendid airport facilities in practically every instance have contributed as governments to such airports at their national capitals, and here in Washington, D. C., we are face to face with the fact today that we need adequate airport facilities, and if there was ever a time when the Federal Government needed to shake hands with the District of Columbia in behalf of a project which is for the interest of both, it is now.

I may say that the Federal Government is helping cities throughout the country in the development of their airports by 30-percent grants in all the States of this Republic to assist such communities and cities in the development of proper aviation facilities.

It would be a wrong move for this House today to say to the country that this Nation has no part in the building of an adequate airport, with proper facilities, in the National Capital for the years that are ahead.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. In the event that the site selected by the Washington Airport Commission first provided for in this act includes in it land or property which now belongs to the Government of the United States, or any department thereof, the Commission appointed by the President is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to enter into negotiations with the department of Government having control over said property, for the acquisition, by lease or otherwise, of the property, so that it may be made available for use as an airport, as provided for in this act. Any department of Government which has under its control any property necessary to the successful completion of an airport, as provided for in this act, is hereby authorized and directed, after satisfactory negotiations have been made with the Commission, to release to said Commission as much of said property as is necessary for the successful completion of said airport.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 23, after the period, strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, the purpose of this amendment is to foreclose the Airport Commission from taking over other Government property, and I have particular reference to that portion of the Arlington Experimental Farm.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the language that I ask to have stricken out.

Any department of Government which has under its control any property necessary to the successful completion of an airport, as provided for in this act, is hereby authorized and directed, after satisfactory negotiations have been made with the Commission, to release to said Commission as much of said property as is necessary for the successful completion of said airport.

I think that is a very dangerous provision. It leaves the possibility there that this commission may say to the Arlington Experimental Farm that we need 50, 75, or 100 acres for an airport, and the language is such that that Department is directed, after negotiations, to turn it over to the Airport Commission.

I read a letter in the general debate on the bill from the Department of Agriculture in which they said that if they had to give up any part of the Experimental Farm adjacent to the airport that is being used for experimental purposes now it would work irreparable injury to the Agriculture Department and disrupt experiments that have been running over several years.

There are plenty of places without taking any part of that farm. Under this language, they could require also other departments of the Government to turn over land for the site of an airport.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Virginia has changed his position. You remember that when the original bill was introduced the gentleman from Virginia proposed to acquire as an airport what is known as "Gravelly Point." Within Gravelly Point is land owned by the Government of the United States. If you adopt the gentleman's amendment, it would make it impossible to use any ground that now belongs to the Government.

I will say frankly that one of the finest sites, in my judgment, I saw—in my personal opinion—was a place down on Anacostia Flats, where the whole ground belongs to the Government of the United States. Why not take land that belongs to the Government and use it for an airport and save the Government from the expense of purchasing more land?

Mr. McFARLANE. Then, why not locate it on the land that belongs to the Government and stop all this poppycock?

Mr. NICHOLS. I stated that that was my personal opinion. We had other members on the committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is time for us not to allow any small plat of ground to stand between us and the acquisition of land for an airport. I do not believe that you should adopt an amendment making it impossible to obtain any plat of ground that belongs to the Government or is held by any department of the Government. In addition to that, in nearly every site around here that is close to the District of Columbia you will find a sliver of Government land running into it, and you will have an airport commercially owned with Government land injected into it.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman made the statement there was a good deal of discussion that the Hoover Airport was in mind for purchase. Having section 7 in the bill, does not the gentleman feel that whoever prepared that section did have the Washington-Hoover Airport in mind?

Mr. NICHOLS. I expect I had as much to do with writing this bill as anybody. It was written by the subcommittee and it was not written by somebody and sent to us. We wrote the bill and we wrote the report. So far as I am concerned, I did not have the Hoover Airport in mind, but I did have in mind this: We saw a lot of tracts of land, some having Government land in them, and some of them are good, and we ought to fix it so that we could acquire those tracts even though some of them do belong to the Government.

Mr. MILLARD. Does the gentleman know who owns the Hoover Airport now?

Mr. NICHOLS. It is owned by a corporation; I forget the name.

Mr. MILLARD. There is nobody in the commission who has anything to do with it?

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I believe the Hoover Airport is owned by the Government, is it not?

Mr. NICHOLS. It is not.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. If this amendment is adopted, it takes the heart out of the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. It does not take the heart out of it. It simply forces you to trade with real-estate men instead of using some of the land belonging to the Government.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. It ought to be defeated.

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. Why would it not be well to except Government land where operations might be interfered with?

Mr. NICHOLS. I just stated to the gentleman that there was testimony before our subcommittee, if he is interested in protecting the Experimental Farm, that the Experimental Farm is going to be moved, and then that will be vacant land owned by the Government used for no purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay the purchase price of said land and for the necessary improvements thereon: Provided, That said sum of money shall not be in excess of $2,500,000. One-half of all sums expended from appropriations authorized shall be repaid to the United States, with interest at 3 percent per annum, from any funds in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia, in four equal installments, commencing 10 years after the expenditure of the money above provided for, and the said Commission shall keep strict account of all its accounts and doings, shall fix fair and uniform charges, fees, rentals, and prices for all services and privileges accorded to any person, firm, or corporation using said airport, and shall annually, in December, make report to the President of the United States, and said report shall be by the President transmitted to the Congress for its information.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: Page 8, line 7, after the word "Treasury", insert the words "to the credit of the District of Columbia", and in line 11, after the figures "$2,500,000", strike out the period, insert a colon, and strike out all of the balance of line 11 and all of lines 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and the words "provided for" in line 17.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment in no way interferes with the attempt on the part of the committee to furnish the District of Columbia with a proper airport. It does not change any of their provisions in the bill at all, except that instead of having the Government pay all the money and then waiting 10 years to eventually have a chance of getting half of it back, it provides that the District of Columbia shall do just like the people do back in Tennessee and West Virginia and Texas and Oklahoma—namely, pay for their own airport. What is wrong with that? Is there anything about the District of Columbia that makes its people here sacred, that we have to make them holy, as my friend from South Carolina, Mr. McMILLAN, suggests? Why give them everything on God's earth free?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The gentleman's amendment still leaves that portion of the bill permitting the Government to turn over land.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it leaves every provision in the bill, but provides that the District shall pay for its airport. Why should you not support this amendment? Are your people back home satisfied with the present system of taxation whereby they pay for everything at home and then pay a great big sum here on civic expenses?

Mr. McMILLAN. May I say to the Members of the House that the record shows that $300,000,000 have been expended by municipalities in this country for airports. I do not see why Washington should be excepted.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. And there are not going to be any returns from this airport. So far as the splendid airport that we have in my city is concerned, the taxpayers have to dig down and make up the deficit. My home people paid for it and pay all maintenance charges and are glad to do it. We want airplanes to stop there. We have regular daily airplane mail service there. Do you want to have the Government put up all this money? That is what the Government is doing under this bill. This Government is putting up every dollar of it, $2,500,000 and then it will wait 10 years and get a part of it back on the installment plan.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Do they do that in Graham?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; we had to pay for our own airport. Under the loan and grant of the P. W. A. money the Government grants only 30 percent and the people have to pay 70 percent. Yet here for the city of Washington, under this bill they will receive a 100-percent grant from the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. The District has had its share of the P. W. A. money. It got about $1,700,000 to put in a sewer system and it got a lot of money from the Government to build a splendid tuberculosis hospital, which is being done at the present time.

It has gotten its share of the relief money. This Government spent $11,000,000 here in Washington last year for relief, out of the Public Treasury, and it has not got a dollar of it back. It spent about $1,000,000 a month for relief. If you will check up on the P. W. A. fund and every other fund you will see that Washington has gotten its lion's share of it. It gets the lion's share of all the jobs in Washington. It has gotten many times as many jobs as Texas, a great commonwealth, 900 miles across east and west and 900 miles across north and south. Texas gets a mere hand-out on public jobs compared to Washington. If you will go around Washington you will see "P. W. A. Project No. So-and-so." Go right down the Avenue and look on the left and you will see "P. W. A. Project No. So-and-so." There are hundreds of thousands of dollars spent here in various parts of the city annually out of various bills, no part of which is paid by the District of Columbia. Are you not getting tired of it? What reason is there for it? They are not overtaxed. I will say to my good friend from Oklahoma, Mr. NICHOLS—and I think he is one of the most valuable young Members of this House—I am going to put in here what his people down in Oklahoma spend compared to what the people spend here in Washington for taxes. It is time to stop it. I hope you will vote for my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. There is also authorized to be appropriated annually, so much as may be necessary for the operation and maintenance of the airport, including compensation of employees, repairs and accessories, purchase or installation, and maintenance of supplies and materials. One-half of said appropriations to be charged to the District of Columbia; one-half of all moneys received from the operation of said airport shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts; and one-half credited to the treasury of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this section should go out of the bill because of the amendment we have just adopted. I offer an amendment to strike out section 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Beginning on page 9, line 1, strike out all of section 9.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet seeking recognition when the Chairman put the motion on the previous amendment. I wanted to be heard on the amendment, opposing the amendment, as a member of the committee. I was on my feet seeking recognition when the Chair put the question. I am not sure what the parliamentary procedure is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see the gentleman rise or hear him ask for recognition.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I also was seeking recognition at the same time, and I saw the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] on his feet and asking for recognition.

Mr. McFARLANE. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma to ask unanimous consent to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. But, Mr. Chairman, we have voted on that and determined it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, the gentleman from Texas will object to it, I expect, if I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman had risen to question the vote, I would not have objected.

Mr. NICHOLS. I was on my feet. I did rise.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean before the Chair announced the vote.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, regular order.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was adopted be reconsidered and that I be recognized in opposition to the amendment before it is voted upon again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. NICHOLS. May we again have the amendment reported?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Beginning on page 9, line 1, strike out all of section 9.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. It relates to how this money shall be paid back. We have already provided that the District shall pay it, so there is no use having this last section. It does not injure the bill at all.

Mr. NICHOLS. I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am sure the gentleman is in perfect good faith in his zeal to save money for the taxpayers of Texas and Oklahoma and the other States, but in this instance the gentleman is wrong. If you are going to force the District of Columbia to pay all the bill—and I do not think you can force them to do so, but if you can do so——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the first part of section 9 should be retained, so I withdraw the amendment; and then I will offer another.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that portion of section 9 beginning in line 5 on page 9 with the word "one-half" and the balance of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: On page 9, line 5, after the word "materials", beginning with the word "one-half", strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in writing.

Mr. BLANTON. This is not a technical amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask permission to put it in writing.

Mr. NICHOLS. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer the amendment.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] is recognized.

Mr. McFARLANE. Speaking to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], it would be foolish to refuse to adopt this amendment, in view of the fact that we have already adopted an amendment requiring the District of Columbia to pay for this airport, just as every other city in the United States pays for its airport if they have one.

If you dance you must pay the fiddler. We know that the District of Columbia is receiving more aid now per capita than any other city in the United States its size.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman explain whether or not this body by legislation can force the District of Columbia to spend money on an airport if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia do not want to spend the money?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; but it might stop this committee from bringing in this kind of legislation if we hang this kind of amendment on it.

Mr. NICHOLS. It will stop the District of Columbia from getting an airport.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is what we want to do, that is what I want to do. In other words, if the District of Columbia wants an airport let them get it the same way every other city gets an airport; let them buy it and pay for it.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. I am not expressing any opinion on this point but the gentleman's city, for instance, has the right to fix its own tax rate. The gentleman's city can borrow money and issue bonds, it has the benefit of inheritance taxes and income taxes, for most States have income tax laws. Not so with the District of Columbia, however, for this body, this Congress, controls the revenue of the District of Columbia absolutely. They are supine, they cannot do anything without our consent, yet we will not let them levy taxes although we hold them responsible for not doing things. What is the gentleman's comment on this situation?

Mr. McFARLANE. Answering the gentleman I will say that the bill which authorizes them to build the airport gives them full powers to build it if they see fit.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is the tax rate per $100 or per $1,000 paid on real property in the District of Columbia?

Mr. McFARLANE. I think it is a dollar and a quarter or a dollar and a half.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On the assessed valuation or on the actual valuation?

Mr. McFARLANE. It is supposed to be on actual valuation, although they reduce it about half.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Therefore it would be about $15 per $1,000. I pay $45 per $1,000 on actual valuation.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is true; and we all know that the tax rate here in the District is lower than the tax rate in any other city of comparable size in the United States. There is no argument about that, we know it is true.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman said the rate was $1.50 a thousand.

Mr. McFARLANE. No; it is $1.50 per hundred, $15 per thousand. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] whether or not I am correct?

Mr. BLANTON. It is $1.50 per hundred, or $15 per thousand, on far less than actual valuation, as compared with $45 per $1,000 the gentleman from Michigan pays there on full valuation.

By unanimous consent the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 9, line 5, after the word "materials", strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert the following:

"SEC. 9. There is also authorized to be appropriated annually from the revenues of the District of Columbia so much money as may be necessary for the operation and maintenance of the airport, including compensation of employees, repairs, and accessories, purchase or installation, and maintenance of supplies and materials."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, adopting the amendment leaves the bill exactly as it was except that instead of the people back home having to pay all this money which the bill originally provided, and then waiting 10 years to get half of it back, the District of Columbia pays for its own airport. This is the way it ought to be.

The provision my amendment seeks to strike out provided that one-half of the profit was to be paid the Government. Of course, we know there will be no profit, so it ought to be stricken out.

Now, let me say to my friend about taxes, that the tax rate here now is $1.50 a hundred not on full valuation, because if you will read the hearings on the last District appropriation bill you will see that the Commissioners testified that year before last they arbitrarily reduced the tax assessment here by $80,000,000 at one time, just arbitrarily reduced the assessed valuation by $80,000,000. You will see that last year they made another reduction in valuation of $50,000,000. So last year and the year before the District Commissioners reduced the assessed valuation $130,000,000, and still the tax rate is only $1.50 a hundred, or $15 a thousand. My friend from Michigan says the tax rate in his district is $45 a thousand. Do you know what the tax rate is in some of the large cities of Oklahoma, where our friend JACK NICHOLS lives? Down there some pay $6 on the hundred, or about $60 on the $1,000.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Does the gentleman know of any municipality in the country where the tax rate is so low?

Mr. BLANTON. There is not one so low as Washington. The people of the District of Columbia pay a lower rate of tax than prevails in any other city of comparable size in the United States.

Mr. MILLARD. Or of any size.

Mr. BLANTON. If you doubt that, check it up. I want to repeat what I said before: Ben Johnson, of Kentucky, a splendid man, who used to be chairman of this committee, once spent 12 months intensely investigating this tax rate in Washington. I will guarantee that every Member of Congress who will read his last report will be astounded at the hundreds of millions of dollars our Government has spent here benefiting Washington people.

We are leaving this bill just as the committee framed it, except as to who is to pay for it. Every provision they wanted in the bill is still there. We have not disturbed a provision except one, and that is we are keeping the Government from paying all of this money and getting half of it back some of these days.

We are letting the District do what we do back home; that is, pay for their own airport. Out in California, they have spent millions of dollars out there for airports, just like we have in Texas, and we have some of the finest in the world down there in Texas. At Forth Worth, Dallas, Abilene, El Paso, and San Antonio we have splendid airports. The Government has two here in Washington, one for the Army and one for the Navy. They say you can take a bucket of water and stick an airplane——

Mr. NICHOLS. I am talking about the Army airport down here.

Mr. BLANTON. We have an Army airport and a Navy airport.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is the one I was talking about sticking with a bucket of water.

Mr. BLANTON. We have an Army and a Navy airport. If they are not good enough we will build better ones. But when we pay for them, we want to own them.

Mr. BERLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if those who are opposing this bill, and who know that the airport will not be built unless Government funds are provided, have ever thought about this feature: That sometime today or tomorrow or some other time one of our colleagues may land in this field and a fatality occur? If such would happen we will be holding memorial service for those Members next year.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is not only a crying shame but an absolute disgrace to the Nation that Washington has not one of the model airports of the world. It is a tribute to the pilots who have been flying the commercial planes to Washington that there have not been tragedies so far. They are doing the best they can with the facilities available. But think of it, Washington of all cities, the finest, most beautiful capital in the world, has one of the worst airports in the country.

We know that the District of Columbia is not going to build an airport, at least not in its initial stage. It has to have help from the Federal Government. Right in the middle of the present airport, which is privately owned, you have a road, and a very much used road. The airport is not usable unless the planes cross that road. There is a stop and go sign there. Can you imagine an airplane stopping in the middle of the air because the sign is red? Not until we invent some air hooks with which to hang them onto the clouds can you do that. We have heard of a number of cases throughout the country of airplanes striking automobiles, killing the people in the automobiles and the plane. Washington is the heart of this country. Do we want that to happen here? Along with our other great transportation systems the air has become very important, and because of the nature of governmental affairs today, it becomes increasingly necessary for people to come to Washington by plane. We have a great increase in our air traffic, yet have provided no facilities. Talk about the Army and Navy field? May I say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that the present Army and Navy fields are two of the worst fields in the world.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman. But let us remedy them. But this bill will not remedy them.

Mr. MAAS. That is what we want to do, and we want to remedy the commercial field as well.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. We can raise the local tax rate here in Washington 10 cents and have more than enough money to buy and build the field. Just raise the tax rate from $1.50 to $1.60. I will go along with the gentleman then and help build the finest army field and the finest navy field in the world, because the gentleman says we need them, and I have confidence in the gentleman's judgment on such matters. He is one of our finest flyers, but he is not helping the situation by building a local city field here for the District with Government money, and which will charge the Government for every plane that lands on the field. He is not helping that situation.

Mr. MAAS. We have to have a commercial field. The District of Columbia is not going to build a field at the present time. We have not raised the tax rate, and I do not know that we would be justified in raising it. All I am pleading for is an airport.

Mr. BLANTON. The Commissioners may enter an order tomorrow increasing the tax rate 10 cents.

Mr. MAAS. But they have not done it.

Mr. BLANTON. An act of Congress is not necessary to do that.

Mr. MAAS. But in the meantime there is not a satisfactory airport here.

Mr. Chairman, if people are killed on that field it is our responsibility. The matter is in our hands; nobody else's. I shall hold this House responsible if any deaths result from our failure to provide an adequate field. The gentleman from Texas knows a great deal more than I do about the modus operandi; but I appeal to the House for a satisfactory airport. I do not care what the technicalities are, but I warn you that you are doing a great injustice to the country and to the people who have to come to Washington by air, if a decent airport is not provided.

The Washington-Hoover site offers a very fine opportunity, together with the agricultural farm, if Military Road is closed. Combining those three fields together would give us one of the finest airports in the country and one of the rare instances of having a field so close to the city, which is a big advantage to passengers.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I will go with my distinguished friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] before the Navy Committee or the Army Committee and help build one of the finest fields in the world for this Government, one for the Army and one for the Navy; but we are not getting anywhere with this kind of a bill. This is not a Government bill at all; it is simply a local city bill, but the Government is to pay for it.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I say to the gentleman from Texas that that will not help the commercial situation, and that is where the trouble lies.

Mr. MAAS. That is exactly the point I am making. We need a commercial airport for the city of Washington, entirely aside from the Army and Navy needs, which have no relationship to the commercial needs. I am concerned with the practical and not theoretical situation involved in getting an adequate airport for Washington immediately.

It is not the people of Washington who are so much concerned with the providing of an airport here. It is really a national problem. It is used mostly by people coming here on Government business. Since it is the Nation's Capital, and air transportation here is largely for the convenience of the Nation's citizens, the Federal Government should bear part of the expense.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will vote down this amendment, and I will tell you why. Of course, if the former amendment of the gentleman from Texas is to remain in the bill, this amendment, probably, should follow; but this can be taken care of even if we leave the language in the bill, because there will be a separate vote demanded on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] when we go back into the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is what we have done. If there are any among you who appreciate the trying necessity for an adequate airport at Washington and if you are friendly to the proposition that Washington should have an adequate airport, you have defeated your purpose by the adoption of the Blanton amendment, and I will tell you why: We cannot force the District of Columbia to spend any sum of money to build an airport. We can simply make provision for it, but we cannot force them, and if we leave this amendment in the bill, the District of Columbia will not build the airport, and the matter will stay where it is now, with two little plots of ground cut in two by Military Road, where Eddie Rickenbacker testified before our committee that every time an airplane sat down over that Military Road it endangered the lives of not only the passengers on the ship but the lives of pedestrians along the road.

If you put this provision back in the bill, TOM BLANTON need not be so exercised about the Government's spending 50 percent of the cost and the maintenance of this airport. This Government, under this administration, has gone up and down the length and breadth of the United States granting 30 percent here and 30 percent there to every little town of 3,500 people that would build an airport out of a little pasture field.

Why should the city of Washington be condemned? I have no fight to make for their taxation system. I do not think the citizens here pay enough taxes, but let us not wreak our vengeance out on this piece of legislation. If you leave this amendment in the bill, you will fix it so that the Capital of your Nation cannot have an adequate airport, although, as a nation, we boast of leading the march of progress of the nations of the world, and yet we have an air field out here that looks like a cracker box and is almost as hard to get into.

If you are interested in this bill, I may say the bill will do you no good unless you vote with the committee when we ask a separate vote on the adoption of the Blanton amendment.

I also hope you will kill the amendment now under consideration and then vote for the committee to take out the Blanton amendment when we get back into the House.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if Military Road that passes alongside of the present commercial airport is endangering the lives of some of our constituents who visit here in Washington, why is it that the committee cannot bring in a bill authorizing condemnation proceedings and condemn this road? I am willing to abandon this road and give it to the airport.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is the gentleman willing for me to answer that question?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. The road is absolutely under the control of the War Department and they have refused to close the road. There is now a resolution pending before our committee, which we are attempting to report out, to force the closing of the road and we are getting plenty of opposition from Virginia to the closing of this road.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I will vote for such a bill, and that is our duty.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. My amendment has nothing to do with Military Road. My amendment simply has to do with relieving the Government of paying all this money. If you pass my amendment, Military Road can still be taken care of under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. If the gentleman will leave me 1 minute of my time, let me say that the ninth section of this bill is more abhorrent to me than the donation of the money to build this airport. I would rather give $2,000,000 to build the airport than to have this recurring, annual expense which is more abhorrent to me than anything else.

Mr. NICHOLS. We have got to maintain it.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Let the District of Columbia maintain it.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if he has proposed this amendment as an economical measure in behalf of the Treasury?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it keeps the Government from paying $2,500,000 now and waiting 10 years to get half of it back. That is an economy, is it not?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, if economy is the issue, which prompts our concern over such a comparatively small item, it appears that it is a type of economy which "strains at gnats and swallows camels." I sat on the floor here a year ago when we harangued all the afternoon over a matter of $100,000 for the Chicago fair. A day or two after this we came in, closed our eyes, and, without debate and under a strict gag, voted $1,272,000,000 to hand over to the President, without restriction or designation as to how he might spend this huge amount.

In the last session we voted a substantial subsidy to the bankers of America through the enactment of the Federal Housing Act. Under this bill, which the Congress meekly enacted, bankers receive 9.72-percent interest for loans which they make on the renovation of homes, and on mortgage loans which they make, to be repaid over a period of 20 years, they further gouge the public up to as high as 13 percent.

In addition, we take John Taxpayer's money and guarantee the banker up to 20 percent of any loss incurred on these loans, notwithstanding the usurious rates which they are exacting. Not only are we doing this for the bankers but we are spending millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, employing thousands of individuals in the F. E. R. A. to canvass the homes of America asking the citizens to borrow money from the bankers for renovation or new construction at these extortionate rates. The Federal Housing ballyhoo has invaded every section of the country at great expense to the taxpayers. They have had 29 national radio hook-up ballyhoos in an endeavor to lead the people to the doors of the private bankers to borrow money, where the lowest interest rate is 9.72 percent. Instead of driving the money changers out of the temple, as we were promised by the President in his inaugural address, we are paying millions of the taxpayers' money to bring the distresed home owner to the threshold of the banker to be bled white. This is indeed a new deal for the banker. Never before did he have the Government cooperating with him in the exaction of usury.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. In a moment, if the gentleman will permit me to proceed. And after these people have borrowed this money, having 20 years to repay it, they will virtually pay for two or three houses while they actually own one. The Congress condones this and yet we quibble over a little matter of one and a half million dollars for a necessary airport which will contribute to commercial progress and which may be utilized also from the standpoint of defense!

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman tell us who was the father of Zebedee's children? That is just as apropos to the bill now before us, which is to relieve officials from giving bonds.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am not discussing ancient history but the inconsistency of our present situation and the utter absurdity, in the light of our past actions, of injecting the question of economy into the discussion of the pending bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. For a question.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to say that regardless of the talk here about the responsibility of the District of Columbia and the Federal Government being involved in the expenditure for an airport, we cannot get away from the proposition, that down in our hearts this will be a truly national utility.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I concur in the views of the gentleman. I want to emphasize further the fact that we are quibbling about small things which would be in the public interest and doing much for the financial group. In my opinion, we are not living up to our obligations as legislators. Speaking editorially this morning, the Washington Herald states:

> There was a time when Congress possessed the intelligence to meet great crises and, in proper cooperation with the other two coordinate branches of the Government, solve them in statesmanlike fashion.
> There was a time when the Congress was composed of self-respecting American citizens.
> That time has passed.
> The Congress of the United States has earned the contempt of the Nation.

I do not agree with the Herald wherein it is implied that Congress is not composed of self-respecting American citizens. This Seventy-fourth Congress, in my opinion, represents the finest and highest type of American citizenship and intelligence, but I must confess that thus far we have failed to exercise the intelligence which God has given us and we have not faced the issue courageously in the degree which I consider necessary in our present crisis.

As Representatives I believe that we are beginning to wake up to our responsibilities, and I do hope that the criticism which has been directed at our body by the Hearst newspapers may serve to spur us on to act according to the dictates of our own consciences and understanding, and to decide for ourselves the merit of the questions submitted to us by the synthetic economists and Wall Street agents who apparently hold the reins here in the various departments.

I am still hopeful that the Congress of the United States, giving heed to the principles expressed in the President's inaugural address, will do everything possible to drive the money changers out of the temple and to restore to the Congress the right which is vouchsafed to it in the Constitution "to coin money and regulate the value thereof", rather than to permit this function to be usurped by the private international banker.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. NORTON) there were 58 ayes and 37 noes.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport in the District of Columbia, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. What is the vote on, the Blanton amendment or the committee amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that there is only one amendment and that is the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is only one amendment and that is the committee amendment. The question is on the committee amendment as a substitute.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, what is the amendment we are voting on?

The SPEAKER. It is on the committee amendment as a substitute to the bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the substitute include the Blanton amendment?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And we cannot vote separately on the Blanton amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. There is but one amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects on the ground that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 316, nays 20, not voting 93, as follows:

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BUNKER HILL ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley on the anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address made by the Honorable James A. Farley before the Bunker Hill Council, No. 62, Knights of Columbus, at Charlestown, Mass., in celebration of the one hundred and sixtieth anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill, on Sunday evening, June 16, 1935.

I feel particularly honored that you in Boston have invited me—an outlander, so far as New England is concerned—to address you on this occasion. I have always believed that the anniversary we are celebrating commemorates about the most significant day in our whole history. Yes; I am not even excepting the Fourth of July, for, if I read history correctly, it is very doubtful if there would have been any Fourth of July for this country had it not been for the great happenings on Bunker Hill 160 years ago.

I suppose some of our accurate historians will complain that I do not say Breeds Hill. This is no time for controversy and it is Bunker Hill in every American mind. Tomorrow is Bunker Hill day, regardless of where the fiercest fighting raged when the medley of American soldiers hurled back the onslaught of the British veterans of Minden. The Yankees had neither a supreme commander, nor a national government. They fought under their State commanders, and while the book men are still figuring whether Massachusetts, Connecticut, or New Hampshire supplied the greatest leader, all the country cares about is that the combined effort of that day taught the world that a new Nation was being born.

Up to that time it was the popular impression through Europe that England was combating merely a frontier revolt by an unorganized group over which the British regulars would ride roughshod whenever they pleased. Bunker Hill conveyed to the world that a new principle, the principle of self-government, was being born, and that the whole population of the American Colonies was willing to fight, and if need be die, to establish independence. It took 7 years of hardship and struggle and bloodshed to convince Great Britain that she had lost her Colonies and even then the lesson was not complete, for 20 years later she tested American sentiment again, with the same result.

But why should I attempt to review the history to which you live next door, and of the details of which you are infinitely better informed, and of the importance of which no words of mine can add to your appreciation.

We in this country are not given much to worship at historical shrines, but Bunker Hill monument stands as the more familiar token of our national achievements than any other. Greater battles have been fought, more decisive determinations of important issues have been reached, higher monuments have been built; but from one end of the country to the other—in sentiment—your monument overtops all that have been raised to commemorate the achievements of our country.

Perhaps the example of those New Englanders that showed the world years ago the depth and courage and resource of America, performed a service as great or greater than the immediate encouragement of the Republic by leaving to their descendants, and to those who gathered about their descendants to form your great communities of today, a heritage of duty. Perhaps it was because of them that you have preserved this spirit, that you have ever since been in the forefront of every movement to resist tyranny and to correct the errors and abuses which new conditions brought in their train.

We, who are connected with the administration in Washington, will never forget that it was Massachusetts that blazed the way for New England's getting into the movement to rid this country of the domination of a group that held our people shackled. The group which, because of the blindness of their reactionism, helped us to drift into an abject depression—a group whose leadership, or lack of leadership, sunk the richest Nation in the world into a condition where the Government had to step in with doles to save millions of our people from actual starvation.

It was Massachusetts that revolted against religious intolerance and prohibition fanaticism when it stood forth and voted for liberalism in 1928. In 1932, New England, despite its tradition of conservative solidarity, followed the Bay State in demanding a new deal for America; followed the leader who is now in the White House, and has sustained him ever since. It has sustained him not because of any political strategy or trickery. It is because it recognized in him a determination to give this country prosperity and contentment if it were humanly possible to do this through acts of government. You New England men and women have been faithful to the old tradition. The courage of your ancestors at the birth of the Nation is still with you. Our country realizes that whenever the occasion arises for a patriotic decision it may be sure that you will be found steadfast in the faith. It is in your blood to be true to what your conscience tells you is right.

I am afraid that in my bringing together the memory of the clear-minded men who fought for a new thing 160 years ago and the equally clear-minded men and women of 1935 that I will be accused of injecting politics into a historic occasion. This is far from my purpose. Actually, politics has nothing to do with the efforts to combat depression, threatened starvation, and economic confusion. It would be a vain glorification of my own party to assume that Franklin Delano Roosevelt was put into the White House by Democrats alone, or that the measures he has taken and the results he has accomplished in getting our country out of the mire have been reached through the exclusive efforts of any partisan group. The only political aspect of it is because it suits the purposes and perhaps the necessities of certain men and aggregations of men to make it appear that recovery is anything but the concern of the whole people. The issue of today is bigger than the question of what party has title to Government offices.

I dare say there never was a time in our history when politics did not come into the picture of every important controversy. Even in the days when the British held Boston, and the American forces besieged them, there were those who thought the revolt of the Colonies was a mistake. Time has brought us to that state of tolerance where we may admit that even some of the Tories of those days may have been sincere in their opposition to breaking the ties with the mother country, but nobody will assume that their sincerity atoned for the sin against their country, once the Colonies had embarked on the great enterprise of freedom.

I cite this extreme example of tolerance to illustrate what is perhaps the finest of all our American characteristics, that in themselves are a consequence of the Revolution ushered in by the battle we are commemorating. Before that struggle the rivalry, amounting almost to enmity comparable to the jealousies of the old Balkan States in some instances, was a prevailing element among the Dominion States. Indeed, it was the thought that their divergent interests and conflicting views would make it impossible for them to take united action against England, and therefore Great Britain reasoned that the task of crushing them would not be difficult. On the contrary, the common cause brought the Colonies into accord—they forgot their prejudices, they sank their aversions, they left their mutual differences to future adjustment, and when the new country swung into general action, Yankee fishermen and tobacco plantation folks, eastern capitalists and western frontiersmen—in fact, people of every creed, from every section fought side by side. They had learned the great lesson that no class, no group has a monopoly of goodness, any more than that some other element of our population has a monopoly of evil.

Perhaps some of my hearers may be inclined to doubt this in political campaign periods, when the violence of partisanship spurs orators to make charges and accusations against the opposition so monstrous that if anyone took them seriously, he would stand aghast at so much villainy. If the opponents of my party believed what they say about us they would not speak to me on the street. And if we on our side arraigned the entire membership of the opposition in similar fashion treason would be the least of the crimes we would prosecute them for. In fact our political campaigns are a sort of truce of tolerance, but when it is over we settle down to our humdrum existence and find that we get along perfectly in every relation of life with each other.

Such a spirit is indeed a worth-while heritage from our struggle for independence, of which this sacred shaft commemorates the beginning. For civil war we have substituted our every 4 years' spasm, and so we have grown and prospered through a century and a half, and 30 or 40 administrations, with a minimum of strife and a maximum of orderly progress. We have not only furnished a pattern of Government that has been followed by nations all over the world, but by the example of our national system we have taught the world that wrongs may be righted and rulers may be changed without fury or civil war.

I realize that in this city have stood the greatest orators our Nation has produced, and each in turn has delivered his message of congratulation to his audience and reverence to the towering figures of our history. I cannot hope to approach the magnificence of their eloquence and I am humbly sensible of the compliment you pay me in listening to the words of a plain American citizen.

We have had many stresses in our national life, and we are but emerging from perhaps the most dangerous crisis of them all. It must be the hope of every one of us that our emergence from the dark situation will not be checked, either by those who would overturn the fabric of our economic welfare, with wild schemes of confiscation of wealth, or those whose crusted reactionism makes them hang back from every movement that seeks to have Government keep pace with progress.

The founding fathers of our country started us off with magnificent equipment for the Nation's long journey. They told us the road would be beset with dangers and pitfalls; they pointed the direction we must take to reach our goal—farther than that they could not go. They could give us no map nor chart for the future beyond the period of their own lives, for it does not lie with any human being to foretell what lies far ahead in an ever-changing world. Every generation must meet its own problems, and hew its own trail when it finds itself beyond the zone of sign-posts and known landmarks. In such times—and the present is such a time—unity of purpose and faith in our leaders is our only hope. There is no backward path in the eternal journey of civilization. The world in the past has at times sought safety in retreat, and has landed in chaos that endured for centuries. We must go on.

Let me close this brief recital of the thoughts of a simple citizen with words spoken by one whose voice will ever resound down the ages. More than a century ago, Daniel Webster at the laying of the cornerstone of Bunker Hill Monument told the whole story when he said:

"Our proper business is improvement. Let our age be the age of improvement. In a day of peace, let us advance the arts of peace and the works of peace. Let us develop the resources of the land, call forth its powers, build up its institutions, promote all its great interests, and see whether we also in our day and generation may not perform something worthy to be remembered. Let us cultivate a true spirit of union and harmony. In pursuing the great objects which our condition points out to us, let us act under a settled conviction and an habitual feeling that these 24 States are one country."

These 24 States he spoke of then are now 48 States; the country of which he spoke ended in the wilderness of what is now Ohio, but his thought is as true today as it was in 1825.

He concluded with these words, which constitutes a perfect code for all Americans:

"Let our object be, our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country. And, by the blessing of God, may that country itself become a vast and splendid monument, not of oppression and terror, but of wisdom, of peace, and of liberty, upon which the world may gaze with admiration for ever!"

ALLOTMENT OF TRIBAL FUNDS OF COEUR D'ALENE INDIANS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the Indians of this country there are many problems arising out of the agreements that have been made with the Indians in treaties that have been ratified in the past. History reveals that the Indians of my State of Idaho have been peaceful and have faithfully kept the promises made in the execution of the treaties that have been made by the Government in dealing with their problems. That the Members of the House may have the views of a member of the Coeur d'Alene Tribe of Indians I insert herewith a copy of a letter from Philip Wildshoe, an allottee on the Coeur d'Alene Reservation.

DE SMET MISSION, IDAHO, May 16, 1935.

Hon. COMPTON J. WHITE,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I received the Union Calendar No. 61, H. R. 6223, Report No. 249, which you have mailed to me. I am very pleased to receive said bill.

I will explain to you truly, as I am strongly against the use of the Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money, money arising from surplus Coeur d'Alene Indian land sales or Coeur d'Alene Indian funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribe of Coeur d'Alene Indian wrongly expendituring on Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency administrations to no benefit, creating nothing.

Mr. WHITE, I will give you the clear history of the Government agent and other employees, which is in my knowledge by me, seeing with my own eyes and knew what was going on amongst the Government agent and other employees on the post, operating on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho.

Back in the year of 1897, the Coeur d'Alene Indians had no doctor, no medicine; because Coeur d'Alene Indians had no money at that time that would be held by the United States in trust for Coeur d'Alene Indians.

In the year 1909, when the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation was thrown open by action of Congress United States Government. Surplus Coeur d'Alene Indian land sold to homesteaders this accumulate some money Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money. First Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency was established build by Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money, was under guise as said agency was built by United States Government expenses; not true. Second, said Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency's administration's appointment of superfluous of employees, at extravagant expenditures on monthly salaries. Twenty-five-year period under these extravagant expenditures on Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency's superfluous employees created nothing; did not cause to advance the Coeur d'Alene Indians to prosperity; Coeur d'Alene Indians only go broke; going worse.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and superintendents, Department of the Interior, has to confiscate the prorata shares tribal money from old-aged Coeur d'Alene Indians, minor children, to pay the wasteful expenditures on Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency's administration. The evidence I have written to you before my two children's prorata share their tribal money taken away from them, $903.

All Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money is disappearing, wasted on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency administrations. Had Congress probed the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, superintendents, administration, constructing building at the Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency at De Smet Mission in Idaho under guise at United States Government expenses, money appropriated by Congress from the United States Treasury, which is not true, said construction of said buildings are at the expenses from Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money; had Congress probed these buildings, would see said buildings of no use, now abandoned, going into dilapidation. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, superintendent, Department of the Interior, are at present seeking new fields for more wastage from Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money or funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribe, Coeur d'Alene Indians.

The United States Government has no agreement or permanent agreement for expenditure of money out from its United States Treasury; none to Coeur d'Alene Indians.

Congressman COMPTON I. WHITE, consider under your authority the complaints I write you, the wastage of Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money. Introduce a bill in Congress to prohibit the Department of the Interior, Secretary of the Interior, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, superintendent, prohibit not to expenditure Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money or funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribe, Coeur d'Alene Indian, not to expenditure on Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency's administrations.

Ignore even if a few Coeur d'Alene Indians agree in the past to use Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal on Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency's administration's expenditures; it is without due contemplation.

When public money is appropriated and Coeur d'Alene Indian money is grabbed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, both public money and Coeur d'Alene Indian money are extravagantly expenditured to no results.

Probe the special appointed Government officer guised to suppress the intoxication liquors out from the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho, present Special Officer Tom Claggett, salary paid from Coeur d'Alene Indian tribal money, said special officer has not performed no officer's duty on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, said special officer is at Yakima, Wash., with his stool pigeons, or in the city of Spokane, Wash., with his stool pigeons. While on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation is lawless, beastly drunkenness going on amongst the Coeur d'Alene Indians in public. Several lives are lost caused by intoxication liquor.

Mr. Congressman WHITE, probe this intoxication-liquor situation. Twenty-five years period paying said special officer for what is not done. Intoxication liquor was never suppressed from Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation. Twenty-five years period said special officers clever scheme, special officers placing a mark on his own money gave his money to his drunkard Indian stool pigeon, instructing said Indian go to that white man, buy some intoxication liquor to make an arrest. Tnis is the special officers clever device to make an arrest. This act suppress nothing.

If you will introduce a bill in Congress to do away with this Government special officer.

The Coeur d'Alene Indians have no representation to bring the actual wrongs exisiting on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation to the attention of the proper authorities at Washington, D. C., that would probe into the wrong actions on the Supt. A. G. Wilson's administrations at his Moscow, Idaho office, headed by Commissioner of Indian Affairs, John Collier, Department of the Interior. The Congress of the United States Government of American, Senate and House of Representatives, appropriates millions and millions of dollars called "Indian appropriation," otherwise not appropriated, Congress should contemplate where that millions of dollars annually Congress' Indian appropriation goes to, is it to be expended into vapor, and Congress probe the total figures from Congress' original Indian appropriation to 1935, the grand total would be billions of dollars expended on Indians' name only. Congress probe what did that billions of dollars expended do for the Indians. The Coeur d'Alene Indians are Indians on their Indian Reservation. No portion is visible that would be apportioned for the Coeur d'Alene Indians from said annual Congress' Indian appropriations. In the Union Calendar, H. R. 6223, Report No. 249, which Congress had passed I studied it, the Coeur d'Alene Indians not mentioned Congress did not appropriate no money for the Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency's administration salary wasteful expenditures to no results.

Mr. Congressman WHITE: If some members from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and some members from the House of Representatives, members on Committee on Indian Affairs probe each individual Coeur d'Alene Indian home you would find it very poor. If you travel the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation slowly examine what every Indian have and his true condition you would find them very poor, you would find no trace of anything created to benefit the Coeur d'Alene Indian. You would see nothing only poverty.

Yes, indeed; the Coeur d'Alene Indian Agency's administrations and superintendents—Moscow, Idaho, office—are to many some duplicates.

Only United States Government Congress can stop these wasteful expenditures existing on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation.

The United States American citizens has a damned will against the Coeur d'Alene Indians because they think the Coeur d'Alene Indians are donated showered upon from public money, American citizen tax money what the Congress United States Government, Senate, and House of Representatives appropriates annually called Indian appropriation. In truth Coeur d'Alene Indians not getting it. All I have is land granted to Coeur d'Alene Indians in the year 1877. From when it was pure American United States Government, Senate, and House of Representatives.

Yours respectfully,

PHILIP WILDSHOE.

BLEEDING THE STATES TO DEATH

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THEIR EVENTUAL ANNIHILATION THROUGH FEDERAL USURPATION OF SOURCES OF REVENUE PECULIARLY BELONGING TO THE STATES

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I trust that my colleagues will bear with me for a few minutes while I rethresh old straw and talk about a matter in which I was very much interested and about which at one time I thought I knew something, namely, the subject of taxation. I recognize the fact that men much abler and better informed than I am have discussed this matter in your hearing, and I do not labor under the hallucination that I shall contribute anything new. However, my statements are made as a result of my own practical experience. As an attorney at law I specialized in the study of this matter, for years administered the corporate, general, and inheritance tax laws of the State of Vermont, and later as general counsel and tax attorney handled excise, income, and all other forms of taxation incident to the transaction of corporate business.

All this was some years ago, and I put it all behind me, and to be perfectly honest with you, I know I have forgotten—and am rather glad of it—many of the rules, regulations, and details which enmesh the general subject. Out of my experience, however, came the conviction, grown stronger through the years, that the Federal Government has no moral right and no business to enter the so-called "field of inheritance or Federal estate taxation."

What I have to say is inspired by the recommendations of the President that in addition to the present estate taxes there should be levied an inheritance succession and legacy tax, and the further recommendation that gift taxes should be imposed. Under the Constitution I suppose it is to be construed that the Federal Government has a legal right, under what is known as the "excise tax", and the power to levy the so-called "estate tax." I insist that there is no logical basis or justification, at least there is not the same logical basis or justification, for such imposition by the Federal Government of such tax, as exists and is inherent in the States themselves.

I have always been opposed to the usurpation of this source of revenue to the States by the Federal Government. The imposition of this tax and the right of the Federal Government to impose it on inheritances rests upon the theory, which probably is correct, in fact the only basis on which it may rest, that it is an excise tax—a tax which the Federal Government has the power to levy, but has no moral right so to do, since the Federal Government has no power over the law of descent and distribution. It is not based on any correct principle. It invades the domain more properly relegated to and reserved to the States. Since property passes by virtue of State laws, not by virtue of any Federal law, such revenue as may be derived from an inheritance tax, which is a tax on the right to inherit property, belongs primarily to the States. It is a foregone conclusion that the several States of this Union are gradually and insidiously being deprived of their rights and prerogatives.

It should not be forgotten that property derives its principal value from the protection it receives from the individual States and from the laws of the several States by which its acquisition, enjoyment, and transfer are made possible and are controlled.

This no man can truthfully deny. Those of you who are interested in conserving whatever rights the States still have left, in perserving the integrity and insuring the perpetuity of the States, constituting this Union, must be on your guard, must consider well what action you shall take. You should not forget that the theory of an excise tax is that it should be based upon a privilege granted by the Government. It has been held that the Federal estate tax is an excise tax and may be imposed; nevertheless, I call your attention to the fact that the privilege of transmitting property at the time of death is exclusively a right of the States, and that no privilege is granted by the Federal Government with or in respect thereto.

The Federal Government should not seek to accomplish social regulation by and through taxation.

The idea of a Federal estate tax was wrong in its inception; is still and always will be wrong. The old maxim that the remedy for wrongs is to forget them is inapplicable in this case for no question "is ever settled until it is settled right."

Although the Government may have the right under the Constitution to impose excise taxes, that alone does not justify the reckless exercise of the power to take from the States revenue which if left to them relieves to some extent, at least, the farmer, the small business man, the real-estate owner, and the average citizen of the State from the burden of already unbearable taxation.

The divine right of kings may have been the plea for feeble tyrants, but the divine right of government is the keystone of human progress and its foundation is found in local government. Without it government sinks into the exercise of police power and the "Nation becomes a degraded mob." The proposition to superimpose additional Federal estate, inheritance, succession, and gift taxes, means just one thing, and that is the further diminution of revenue for the States, and that heavier tax burdens must be borne by real estate and other tangible property now almost taxed out of existence. The States need every available source of revenue. To destroy values from which the States receive income is to force them to resort to higher taxes and to include the wage earner of limited income in the list of those whose income must be taxed. This law of action and reaction is immutable and incontrovertible. The end may be seen from the beginning.

It is interesting to observe that James Madison in seeking to allay the fears of the people who dreaded the possible aggression of a strong centralized Federal Government, and who apprehended the possibility of some such usurpation of the rights and prerogatives of the several States as is contemplated by the so-called "Federal estate tax", and those now recommended by the President, it is interesting to observe, I say, what James Madison says in no. XVI of the Federalist, viz:

> The Federal and State Governments are in fact but different agents and trustees of the people, constituted with different powers, and designed for different purposes. * * *
> But ambitious encroachments of the Federal Government, on the authority of the State governments, would not excite the opposition of a single State, or of a few States only. They would be signals of general alarm. Every government would espouse the common cause. A correspondence would be opened. Plans of resistance would be concerted. One spirit would animate and conduct the whole. The same combinations, in short, would result from an apprehension of the Federal, as was produced by the dread of a foreign yoke; and unless the projected innovations should be voluntarily renounced, the same appeal to trial by force would be made in one case as was made in the other. But what degree of madness could ever drive the Federal Government to such an extremity.
> That the people of the States should, for a sufficient period of time, elect an uninterrupted succession of men all ready to betray both; * * * that the governments and the peoples of the States should silently and patiently behold the gathering storm, and continue to supply the materials, until it should be prepared to burst upon their own heads, must appear to everyone more like the incoherent dreams of a delirious jealousy, or the misjudged exaggerations of a counterfeit zeal, than like the sober apprehensions of genuine patriotism. * * *
> Let us not insult the free and gallant citizens of America * * * with the supposition that they can ever reduce themselves to the necessity of making the experiment by a blind and tame submission to the long train of insidious measures which must precede and produce it. * * *

Patrick Henry, in voicing opposition to the adoption of the Federal Constitution in the Virginia convention, exclaimed:

> Where are the purse and sword of Virginia? They must go to Congress. What has become of your country? The Virginian government is but a name. (Elliott's Debates, III, pp. 366–410.)

Fear of excessive power in the proposed new Government excited wide-spread opposition to the adoption of the Constitution by the colonists. Justification for such fear was found in the long struggle of the people in the mother country to preserve their rights and liberties. The colonists, with knowledge of the contest between the Parliament and the Stuart kings which lasted nearly all of the seventeenth century, mistrusted usurpation of powers and centralization in government beyond all things else. Their kin across the seas had been participants in this almost interminable struggle. Furthermore, they had just concluded successfully the Revolutionary War, which was brought about by the exercise of centralized powers wielded from a great distance and from beyond the borders of the continent.

To them, all of the serious experiences of mankind, immediate and centuries old, seemed to justify the extraordinary reluctance with which they yielded to the necessity of forming the more perfect union which was proposed. But the necessity for the establishment of such new union with carefully guarded and more centralized powers than previously were thought necessary was apparent to the ablest and most far-seeing statesmen of those times. The Constitution framers, observing the dangers of excessive centralization of powers on one hand and anarchy arising from excessive localization of powers on the other hand, succeeded in writing into the Constitution that perfect balance of powers on which has rested the security of this governmental structure during the whole period of its existence.

Lord Bryce, with whose writings respecting our system of government there is none to compare, visualized our plan of government and tersely described it in the following language:

> Under the plan of the Constitution makers, an American, through a long life, may never be reminded of the Federal Government, except when he votes at a Presidential election, buys a package of tobacco bearing the Federal stamp, lodges a complaint against the post office and opens his trunk for a customhouse officer on a pier when he comes from a European tour. His direct taxes are paid to officials acting under State laws. The State, or local authority constituted by State statute, registers his birth, appoints his guardian, pays for his schooling, gives him a share in his father's estate, licenses him when he marries or enters a trade, divorces him, enters civil action against him, declares him a bankrupt, and hangs him for murder. The police that guards his home, the local boards which look after the poor, control the highways, impose water rates, manage schools—all these derive their powers from State laws. In comparison with such a number of functions, the Federal Government is but a department of foreign affairs.

But Lord Bryce would report a far different situation were he empowered to revisit us in our present day. He would find the very antithesis to obtain. He would find a scene similar to that visualized by another who warned us against that which he must have seen materializing.

In The Critical Period in American History, written by the historian John Fiske, may be found this language:

> If the day should ever arrive when the people from the different parts of our country should allow their local affairs to be administered by prefects sent from Washington, and when the self-government of the States shall have been so far lost as that of the Departments of France, or even so far as the counties of England, on that day the progressive political career of the American people will have come to an end, and the hopes that may have been built upon it for the future happiness and prosperity of mankind will be wrecked forever.

In the early days the proponents of the Constitution took the view that dangers of State encroachments upon Federal powers were greater than the danger of encroachments of the Federal Government upon the powers of the States. Few, if any, tendencies have been witnessed to indicate that there was justification for such fear. History shows that, where the greatest power in government is lodged, greater power is sought, and, except for the prudence and firmness of the people, which Hamilton saw was necessary to the maintenance of this Government, ancient rights, however firmly established, will be lost. There is nothing new in this observation. Human nature has not changed perceptibly in this respect. Power in government affairs begets more power. It has been so always. Vigilance remains as the price of liberty.

Why is it necessary to use the device of a Federal inheritance tax? The present situation, with two Federal estate taxes, is already almost intolerably complicated. Fiduciaries are at their wit's end to know how to close and distribute their estates, in view of the delays and litigation incident to the administration of the two present Federal estate taxes. If to this curious structure is added a Federal inheritance tax, confusion will become worse confounded. I do not understand why if the Government needs more money from this source, it does not either cut out the 80-percent credit provision now existing in the 1926 Federal Estate Tax Act or else increase the rates of the 1934 Federal estate tax. That seems the obvious and simple thing to do. If instead of that a Federal inheritance tax is added, administrative delays will increase very greatly and fiduciaries will be in an even worse hole than they now are. This is because an inheritance tax is much more complicated to administer than is an estate tax. Practically all questions relating to such an inheritance tax must be referred to the Bureau at Washington. Doubtless that Bureau can avail itself of the services of plenty of legally trained men, but such procedure will result, in my judgment, in almost intolerable centralization. I have observed the administration of the Federal estate tax from the outside for a good many years and, in my opinion, its chief difficulty is in bureaucracy and centralization. If this is to be increased it will result in an unwarrantable increase in the burdens laid upon fiduciaries and in an unwarrantable delay in the rights of heirs, devisees, and legatees. Surely such people have some rights left even though the Government proposes to take away most of the property that they inherit. Even though comparatively little be left to them after the imposition of death taxes, yet as to what little is left they are entitled to know certainly what it will be and to receive it as promptly as possible.

From the point of view of the burdens laid upon fiduciaries, heirs, legatees, and devisees and because I apprehend that the imposition of the proposed Federal inheritance tax will enormously complicate and delay matters. From the point of view of a State official administering a State inheritance tax a proposed Federal inheritance tax will diminish the revenue of the State unless the State chooses to enact rather unfair legislation denying the deductibility of Federal death taxes, whether estate or inheritance, from the gross estate subject to State inheritance tax.

Now, as to the validity of any Federal death tax, whether estate or inheritance. This is generally believed to have been conclusively settled in favor of validity by the decision of Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S. 41 (1900)). I am perhaps imprudent in venturing to doubt that decision and the soundness of the reasoning of the opinion. Chief Justice White wrote a 67-page opinion in which he discussed the matter of death taxation from every conceivable angle. When, however, he came to the main point, namely, whether the Federal Government had any power, under the Constitution, to levy any sort of a death tax, I venture to doubt the soundness of his reasoning. He seems to base his decision upon the fact that the Federal inheritance tax of 1797 was passed at a time when Congress was full of men who had participated in the formation of the National Government and of the Constitutional Convention which preceded it. His argument is that these men presumably knew what was within and what was without the power of Congress, and that if they enacted a Federal inheritance tax it must have been within the power of Congress; and that consequently it was not up to the Supreme Court, a century later, to doubt the validity of that action. (See p. 56 in vol. 178, U. S. Reports.)

It seems to me that this is a rather tenuous argument. At bottom it depends on the theory that the subject of inheritance or estate taxation is not the right or privilege granted by the sovereignty to transmit or inherit but is the transmission or receipt. This seems to me, with the greatest respect to Mr. Chief Justice White, a metaphysical distinction without any real difference. Indeed, I believe that it can be demonstrated to be wrong. It is universally admitted that it is the States and not the Federal Government which grant the right to inherit property from the estates of deceased persons. I think no one will doubt this proposition. If so, it is within the power of any State to defeat any Federal death tax as applied to its own citizens.

All that such State needs to do is to provide, by statute or by amendment to its own constitution, that thereafter the property of all decedents domiciled in such State shall escheat to the State; that such escheated property shall be taken in charge by State officers called "executors" or "administrators" and shall be administered by them and the debts and other expenses paid and the balance—less an amount varying from 1 to 10 percent, being equivalent to present State inheritance taxes—be distributed to the heirs, legatees, or devisees of the decedent. It seems to me fairly certain that the Federal Government could not levy any tax upon property escheating to a State; and if all the property of all decedents escheats to a State, the Federal Government cannot levy any death tax whatever.

If my line of reasoning is correct, it seems to me that any Federal death tax, whether estate or inheritance, has no solid foundation. A death tax is a privilege tax; and a sovereignty which does not afford the privilege cannot impose the tax.

When all is said and done, notwithstanding the legality of the course that has been pursued and is proposed, it is wrong. The Federal Government as such has no moral right to levy an inheritance tax, call it excise or otherwise, which indirectly puts an additional tax on the property of every citizen of each and all of the several States under the guise of redistributing wealth. If redistribution of wealth is to be accomplished by any such means, certainly let it be done firsthand by the States under whose law the wealth represented by the property is permitted to be transferred. I do not object to the proposition that great fortunes should be broken up, and at their devolution a generous share should be contributed to the State which has made possible the accumulation, and permits the devolution thereof, but I am not in favor of the plans advocated by President Roosevelt and Senator Long. The President's message has been characterized as a demagogic appeal designed to steal the thunder of share-the-wealth spellbinders, and is further evidence of the fact that he is still following the suggestions of the schizophrenic fringe of councilors who surround him, or with whom he has surrounded himself. It is time to stop further centralization of power in the Federal Government; time to stop these poorly disguised attempts by circumlocution to deprive the States of their lifeblood in violation of their reserved powers and rights; time as in the days of William Prynne and King Charles "to rescue the King from his evil councilors" and reestablish before it is everlastingly too late the sovereignty of the States.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that under the Constitution the Federal Government cannot through taxation, or otherwise, sap the sovereignty of the States. The history and the experience of other nations should teach us that only when normal prosperity, based upon confidence and credit, puts the stream of wealth into its natural activity and it is made free from governmental interference can all the people participate in its benefits, and that out of that economic law, and from that law alone, will come those measures which are the objectives sought to be attained under the President's proposed program.

On February 1, 1925, President Coolidge realized that the temper and spirit of Congress disclosed a disposition to sacrifice sound principles of taxation on the altar of expediency, or to enter upon a program of social legislation under the guise and use of the taxing power of the Government, and he said:

> I do not believe that the Government should seek social legislation in the guise of taxation. We should approach the question directly, where the arguments for and against the proposed legislation may be clearly presented and universally understood. If we are to adopt socialism it should be presented to the people of this country as socialism and not under the guise of a law to collect revenue. The people are quite able to determine for themselves the desirability of a particular public policy and do not ask to have such policies forced upon them by indirection.

I do insist, again, it is not the function of the Federal Government, through the instrumentality of an excise tax, to attempt to accomplish such social reform, since the right to transfer the property by inheritance is a State right and not one held or had by virtue of any Federal statute.

The suggestion that a super-Federal estate tax and the others enumerated should be imposed is a serious threat against the continued financial stability of the States. It affects the welfare of every single citizen. It concerns every Congressman who has at heart the welfare of those whom he undertakes to represent. It involves the continuation of and the very political life of every State in this Union, for it strikes at the very root, viz, the revenue-producing and yielding power of the State itself, for in the power to tax lies hidden that insidious, destructive, devastating power to destroy.

This, moreover, is not all that should give us pause as patriots, not partisans. The average citizen may not realize that he is paying or will pay his share of the proposed taxes, but the day of reckoning will soon be at hand. Nearly 40 cents of every dollar we earn is paid out in taxes of one kind or another. A continuation of this policy can but result in individual and even national financial ruin. When the people wake up and realize the facts, they will demand relief.

Further, and with respect to a collateral matter, may I suggest that we should not overlook the facts so forcibly brought to the attention of the people of New York by William C. Breed, chairman of the board of economic council of that State. Without attempting to quote him exactly, he said in substance:

The Government also is favoring the passage of many acts which require readjustment of capitalization, dissolutions, or other corporate action, without consideration of the burden such actions impose under the existing income-tax laws. For example, the proposed Public Utilities Act is designed to force holding companies out of business. If this law is passed, it necessarily means the dissolution or consolidation of many companies. On the other hand, we find certain sections of the income-tax law imposing heavy penalties as the result of dissolutions or consolidations. The public is so concerned with the provisions of the Public Utilities Act itself that it fails even to consider what would be the effect of the passage of such a law on the companies themselves under the provisions of existing tax laws.

It might also be mentioned that under another section of the income-tax law passed last year the dissolution of a corporation whose stock has been held by an individual for over 10 years will precipitate upon that individual a tax penalty of 100 percent of the profits arising from such dissolution, while if the same individual had sold his 10-year stock he would be taxed only 30 percent of the profit therefrom. * * *

This amendment of 1934 was undoubtedly passed to catch the profits retained in holding companies or private investment companies the dissolution of which the Government sought to effect, and yet we find that it has also penalized the stockholders for doing the very act which the Government would apparently like to have brought about. The effect of this provision on dissolutions undertaken for ordinary business reasons and not relating to private holding companies is exceedingly serious, and clearly this provision should be amended.

In studying the conflicting income-tax laws which have been passed, one comes to the conclusion that many of the evils of tax avoidance are in reality created by the very terms of the laws themselves. There is no doubt that our income-tax laws should be studied and broadly revised; there also is no doubt that they can be vastly improved, simplified, and made understandable to the average individual. The chief impediment to any revision of these tax laws, however, is the present-day idea behind all legislation, which is:

Tax everything on every possible theory, so that those who have will have nothing left.

It is certainly true that if this principle of government continues there will be nothing left, not even incentive. * * *

If the Government's present program continues, moreover, the United States bids fair to sink into the condition of Australia of 20 years ago—a great country without hope, a country without hope because of its attempt to socialize everything and everybody, forgetting that the happiness of the average citizen depends upon the business prosperity of the country itself.

But the game of trying to make 2 and 2 equal 6 is about played out, and the average citizen is awakening to the fact that experiments do not produce prosperity or recovery.

Excessive and abusive taxes have caused wide social disturbances and have led to great historical events.

President Coolidge in an address delivered at the National Conference on Inheritance and Estate Taxation in this city in 1925 said:

The position has been taken that the Federal Government should withdraw from the field of estate taxation. This view has much to commend it. The right to inherit property owes its existence, not to any Federal law, but to the laws of the States. Federal estate taxation, therefore, has not the natural excuse which is conceded to State inheritance taxation. The Federal Government being in the field, however, primarily with rates as excessive as those recently adopted, results in a very material decrease in the amount and value of the property upon which the States will have their inheritance tax. If the States are to suffer diminution in revenue from this source, they can make up their losses only by higher tax in other fields. Already the taxes levied by the States upon land are so high as to menace the prosperity of the farmer. For the sake of the revenue which the Federal Government receives from these sources the Federal Government should be careful to see that indirectly it is not taxing the very persons whom it most wishes to relieve.

The Honorable William H. Blodgett, former Commissioner of Taxes of the State of Connecticut, in addressing the National Council of State Legislatures in 1927, most forcibly stated the situation with respect to Federal estate taxation, and I desire in closing to leave with you for your consideration his analysis of the then existing situation, the same in principle as now obtains, only emphasized by the magnified threat against State rights inherent in the recommendations made. Hear him when he says:

The present Federal estate tax anomaly places the States in a strait-jacket. It is based on the doctrine that the citizen, in whichever State he lives, must pay taxes locally and for State purposes in accordance with the congressional will. The strait-jacket is a presumption of authority and works an injustice to every State in which the citizens have thoughtfully attended to public business. The device accomplishes by indirection that which could not be considered as possible by directly imposing on any State the obligation to enact any kind of tax laws. No one would stand for such direct action by the Congress; such a proposal would not be considered. By the indirection found in the Federal law the same purpose is accomplished. Prior to 1924 the determination of whether the State would or would not have death tax laws was regarded as a matter exclusively of its own concern. Since the passage of this law, while free to make such determination, each State is subjected to penalty for failure to make the determination in accordance with the Federal plan.

The States in the Constitutional Convention yielded the right to the Federal Government to impose taxes only in reliance upon the constitutional limitations as to apportionment and uniformity. It was intended that the Constitution should forbid discrimination by the levying of duties, imposts, or excises upon a particular subject in one State and a different duty, impost, or excise on the same subject in another State. The burden was to be uniform in all States.

The necessity for uniform death taxes is no greater than the necessity for imposing uniform personal income taxes or uniform corporation net-income taxes. No reason exists for uniformity in the several States with respect to such taxes. Indeed, uniformity in this regard is undesirable except as there may exist uniform sentiment in the States imposing such taxes and other uniform conditions too varied in character to be enumerated. If the strait-jacket principle is sound, other strait-jackets, possibly and probably less comfortably fitting, may be devised in course of time to fit other States which refuse to obey the congressional will. By application of Federal power of the purse, the discomfort of three States now may be slight in comparison with that which other States may feel in a decade or two.

If it were necessary for the Federal Government to establish such principle as underlies this tax, no good citizen would inveigh against it. Whether constitutional or unconstitutional, this law not only is in conflict with the spirit of the fundamental law but it destroys that equilibrium essential to the progressive political career of the American people. As the historian Fiske pointed out:

"The hopes that may have been built upon it (the Constitution of the United States) for the future happiness and prosperity of mankind will be wrecked forever."

A large majority of Americans feel as does President Frank, of the University of Wisconsin, as we watch the relentless encroachment of the state, in one European nation after another, upon private enterprise and political liberty, that we want more than ever to will to our sons an America in which a great economic leadership has made possible the preservation of the inspiring advantages of private enterprise and political liberty by boldly recasting its economic policies for the distribution of wealth in the light of its technical processes for the production of wealth.

After swallowing whole a program for the control of production he says:

The creation of scarcity, and the boosting of prices, which has always been the dream of reactionary economic leadership, a radical politics sets the stage for heavier and heavier taxation of the results of successful enterprise in order that Government may execute lavish public works, on the theory that this will effect the spread of buying power necessary to stabilize our economic order.

This, it seems to me, is missing the point. I do not suggest that industrial enterprise, incomes, and inheritances cannot stand heavier impacts of taxation. I insist only that we cannot build a great civilization by lavish expenditures on even the most desirable public works unless concurrently we solve the problem of clothing the bodies, feeding the stomachs, and freeing from fear the hearts of the masses in and through the Nation's business, industry, and agriculture. The place to solve the economic problem is at the source where policies respecting wages, hours, prices, and profits are formulated. It is no answer to permit an economic system to play havoc with the lives of millions and then step into the picture with stringent taxes to take care of these millions with the munificence of a political Santa Claus. In the end such procedure will wreck the system that must produce the wealth and sap the self-respect of the millions who learn to lean on the bounty of Government.

I direct your attention to the undeniable fact that never were those in favor of centralization of power in the Federal Government more active than in these very days. The lifeblood of the States is being insidiously sapped by leechlike governmental agencies whose number is legion. The eventful disintegration of the body politic and the loss of the identity of the several States is most seriously threatened.

But the States will not submit if they be but aroused to a realizing sense of what confronts them. The sentiment of the country has not been better expressed than by learned Senator GEORGE when he recently said:

The ultimate preservation of the Union depends upon the retention, unimpaired, of the dual system of government set up by the Constitution. The liberty of the citizen rests at last upon local self-government; upon local institutions administered by local authority responsive and responsible to local opinion. The decision of the Supreme Court does not call for amending the Constitution or for the surrender of the reserved powers of the States over the intimate personal business and social affairs of the people.

The decision of the Court calls for the full assumption by Congress of its constitutional responsibility in the consideration of legislative proposals. Nothing but disaster lies ahead if those who know well the political theories of history and are yet lacking in the vital sense of the realities of life are permitted to shatter the American system of government and to attempt to remold it in accordance with their desires. It is yet our hope that these theorists, many of whom have encamped in Washington, will have their day and pass away.

In a recent editorial the Constitution called attention to the warning of Daniel Webster of the dangers of tampering with the Constitution. He said in an address on the hundredth anniversary of Washington's birth:

"Other misfortunes may be borne or their effects overcome. If disastrous wars should sweep our commerce from the ocean, another generation may renew it; if it exhausts our Treasury, future industry may replenish it; if it desolates and lays waste our fields, still, under a new cultivation, they will grow green again and ripen to future harvests.

"But who shall reconstruct the fabric of demolished government; who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty; who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with State rights, individual security, and public prosperity? No; if these columns fall, they will be raised not again."

I agree fundamentally with those who contend that there should be a more equable distribution of wealth and that concentration of it in the hands of a few is to be deprecated; but I am opposed to attempts to redistribute it by imposing the Federal super estate and inheritance taxes in the manner proposed. If redistribution is to be effected in any such way or manner, it can and should be attempted and accomplished through and by the States along the lines I have suggested.

There can be no question that the extraordinary governmental expenditures which have now reached proportions for which there is no peace-time parallel in the history of this or any other country must be met by taxation. The manner in which it is done and the methods used, however, should not strike at the heart of the body politic. The spending program must be checked. Its continuation threatens the financial stability of the Government, so do also the plans and policies defined in the message of the President. Our form and system of government are imperiled, for in the sapping of the lifeblood of the several States lies the evident threat of their eventual annihilation.

The further growth of the hydra-headed centralization monster must be stopped, and now.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S TAX PROGRAM WHICH WOULD GRADUALLY REDISTRIBUTE THE WEALTH OF THE COUNTRY, AS WELL AS THE BURDENS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address which I delivered today on the President's tax program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address which I delivered today over a national radio broadcast.

My friends, on last Wednesday, June 19, President Roosevelt delivered to Congress one of the most important messages that has ever come from a Chief Executive of the United States, in which he advocated a policy that would not only tend to redistribute the wealth of this Nation, but it would also redistribute the burdens of government, through the taxing power.

That message constitutes one of the brightest rays of hope that has dawned for the overburdened taxpayers of America since the close of the Civil War.

He is not advocating a radical or a destructive policy, but a safe, sane, and constructive constitutional method of raising the necessary revenues to meet our obligations and to gradually redistribute the wealth of the Nation in such a way as to give the children of this and coming generations an opportunity in this world.

In recent years we have found ourselves in the midst of a paradoxical depression that is without a parallel in all history. We live in the richest country in all the world. With a gentle climate, a fertile soil, and an abundant rainfall, our lands produce every agricultural commodity necessary for the maintenance and comforts of mankind.

We produce more wheat, more corn, more hogs, more cotton, more dairy products, in fact, more of all agricultural as well as manufactured commodities of every kind than the American people can possibly use.

Our natural resources are unlimited. In fact, we have the world's reserve supplies of raw materials and they are well distributed throughout the length and breadth of the land.

The inventive genius of America has given us an ascendancy and a control over the forces of nature never before attained in all the history of the human race.

And yet, we have seen millions of our people hungry and other millions insufficiently clothed. We have seen bread lines stretching down the streets of our cities, while farmers were losing their homes, seeing them sold for debts or confiscated for taxes.

Practically every individual who owned a home, or tried to own a home, has been loaded with debts and burdened with taxes that he found himself unable to pay. Almost every county, municipality, school district, or road district, and practically every State in the Union, and even the Federal Government itself is burdened with debts and bonded obligations that it seems almost impossible to pay.

Yet, we scarcely owe a single dollar beyond the confines of the United States. On the other hand, foreign countries owe this Nation billions of dollars, and at the same time, they and their citizens owe private individuals and private enterprises in America billions of dollars more.

What is the trouble? Why all this financial distress in the richest land in all the world, practically the only country that does not owe any debts beyond its own borders?

It is maldistribution of wealth. We are cursed with a system of economic feudalism that has overawed, browbeaten, or controlled by insidious methods or continuous pressure, the forces of democracy and so dominated the legislative programs of this country during the last 60 years that it has concentrated the wealth of this Nation into the hands of a few families.

We are told that less than 10 percent of our population now own more than 90 percent of our wealth. They are pyramiding their fortunes and passing them on down from generation to generation, ever increasing them by the natural accretion of interest accumulations, while the rest of the 120,000,000 Americans are literally grinding their lives out to even meet the interest they have to pay.

They began by accumulating vast fortunes out of the Civil War. They accumulated more through a high protective tariff, which levied an annual tribute upon every human being in America. Through this method, they sapped the economic vitality of the agricultural States, using the powers of Government through Federal pension and political patronage to hold enough of those States in line to guarantee them supreme control.

While governments were instituted and developed among men primarily to keep the strong from oppressing the weak, the powers of this Government have been used in the past to help the strong oppress the weak.

More fortunes were accumulated, and therefore more wealth was concentrated through a manipulation of public utilities, overcapitalization, sale of watered stocks, and exorbitant service charges. They even manipulated the currency by expanding through the Federal Reserve System and contracting in the same way—raising prices for a period until people adjusted themselves to higher price levels, incurred debts, fixed their tax rates, and floated bonds for necessary improvements—then contracted that currency, drove down prices, and are now demanding that those debts be paid with high dollars, and on deflated commodity values.

The people have about reached the limit of their endurance. They know there is something wrong with our present system, and they are beginning to realize what it is. They are demanding, and they are going to continue to demand, that there be a redistribution of the wealth of this country, and that the burdens of taxation be placed where they belong.

The President has pointed the way.

This is a sane and orderly method of solving this question. We do not need any amendments to the Constitution to give Congress this power. Congress already has that power under the Constitution as it now stands.

If you will let me write the tax bills, I will balance the Budget, pay a reasonable old-age pension, pay off the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates, and pay off the national debt in 25 years. I would place the same burden of taxes on the rich and opulent, in proportion to their wealth, that we are now placing upon the poor, the man of moderate means.

Today, the man most heavily burdened with taxes is the farmer and the home owner and the small business man, whose entire profits and invariably the equity in whose property is taken to pay his taxes. The one element that has grown richer as a result of the World War has been the ones into whose hands the wealth of the Nation has been concentrated.

The reports of the Bureau of Internal Revenue show that in 1921 there were 21 individuals in the United States with incomes of a million dollars a year. In 1929, there were 513 individuals with incomes of a million dollars a year. Their number had multiplied 25 times, while the man of moderate means had gone down in the economic scale. The rich had grown richer by leaps and bounds, while the poor had grown poorer.

"Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay.
Princes and lords may flourish or may fade—
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd, can never be supplied."

But gentlemen who have always represented the predatory interests of the country in the House and Senate, and who now vociferously proclaim their desire to prevent the further issuance of tax-exempt securities, studiously refrain from advocating the real remedy, and that is the raising of inheritance taxes and making the ones who own tax-exempt securities now bear their part of the burdens of government.

Our inheritance taxes are ridiculous. They are infinitesimal compared with the taxes which the average American has to bear.

Just before the passage of the last tax bill, I secured copies of the inheritance-tax rates for both France and Great Britain, and compared them with the inheritance-tax rates in the United States.

Here is a sample of the comparison: If a man died in the United States and left $100,000, his estate would pay a tax of $1,500. In England, it would pay $9,000; and in France $36,997.78.

In this country, an estate of $300,000 would pay a tax of $19,500; in England it would pay $28,000; while in France it would pay $130,789.78. In this country an estate of $500,000 would pay a tax of $42,500; in England, $105,000; and in France, $234,373.78.

In this country, an estate of $1,000,000 would pay $117,500; in England, it would pay $270,000; and in France $504,373.78.

I have long advocated the French rates for this country.

Men talk about taxing the profits of the next war. I want to adequately tax the profits of the last war. Then there will not be any next war, at least in your day and mine.

The people of large fortunes, as a rule, are the ones who invest their money in tax-exempt securities. They are the ones who seek and find that storm cellar. They are the ones who made fortunes out of the war, coining their millions out of the blood and tears of the suffering men, women, and children of the world. They are the ones who made their millions out of the tariff, by levying tribute upon everything the average American buys, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the lining of the coffin in which old age is laid away.

They are the ones that we must reach if we ever expect to balance the Budget and meet the responsibilities of this Government and redistribute the wealth of the Nation so as to give the rising generation a chance in this world. Let's make American money serve the American people, instead of being used to buy titled husbands for rich heiresses of concentrated wealth.

This measure should be passed now, and I, for one, shall insist on Congress staying in session until it is put through. We ought not to think of adjourning until this measure becomes a law.

Then we can repeal some or all of our present nuisance taxes.

This will be Democracy's answer to socialism, communism, and all the other radical and dangerous influences to American institutions. It will assure equal opportunities to the children of the future, and, in the words of Abraham Lincoln, it will inspire us with renewed hope that "government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report for printing under the rule on the bill (H. R. 7160) to provide for research into the basic laws and principles relating to agriculture, and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work, and a more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges.

BONDS OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 7765, to amend (1) an act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; (2) an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia"; to regulate the giving of official bonds by officers and employees of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill H. R. 7765, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This bill seeks to relieve certain officials of the District of Columbia from giving official bonds. What officials does it embrace, I ask the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mrs. NORTON. The Commissioners of the District and surveyor and other officials.

Mr. BLANTON. What others?

Mrs. NORTON. The bill merely repeals the act which provided for the giving of bonds by certain District officials. There is no reason now why these officials should be required to give bonds, as they have nothing whatever to do with the funds of the District.

Mr. BLANTON. How many officials besides the Commissioners are relieved from giving official bonds?

Mrs. NORTON. About 30, and none of them has anything to do with the handling or disbursing of money. Therefore, they should not be required to give bond.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there is now in effect a wise law which has been in force since 1878 that these thirty-odd officials of the District should give bond. Why should we now repeal it? It is no disgrace for an honest official to give a bond.

Mrs. NORTON. Why should they be compelled to do so, since they are not acting in a fiduciary relationship?

Mr. BLANTON. Once in a while there is a dishonest official. This bill does away with the necessity for giving a bond and relieves them of that, when the law has required it continuously since 1878.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. They have nothing whatever to do with the spending of money, so why should they be compelled to give a bond?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, they handle business here running into millions of dollars on contracts. We have given them $41,000,000 for the next fiscal year beginning July 1, and they have control of every official who will spend it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentlewoman will not call this bill up at this time.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to the request limiting debate. We want some time to discuss this bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7765; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that debate be confined to 30 minutes, 15 minutes to be used by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] and 15 minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to debate a bill of this importance in 15 minutes if we had all the time of the opposition. This bill is too important to be rushed through the Congress.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman he may have all the time allotted to the opposition?

Mr. BLANTON. I should like to have 30 minutes of the time to yield some to my colleagues who are opposing this bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, that is irregular. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7765) to amend (1) an act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; (2) an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia"; to regulate the giving of official bonds by officers and employees of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with Mr. SCRUGHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved June 11, 1878 (20 Stat. 103, ch. 180), entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia" be, and the same hereby is, amended by repealing the provision "and shall, before entering upon the duties of the office, each give bond in the sum of $50,000, with surety as is required by existing law", and said section is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The said Commissioners are hereby authorized and empowered, any statute to the contrary notwithstanding, to determine which officers and employees of the District of Columbia shall hereafter be required to give, or renew, bond for the faithful discharge of their duties and to fix the penalty of any such bond.

SEC. 2. That section 1578, chapter LV, of the act approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1424), entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", is hereby amended so as to read:

"The surveyor shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before the Commissioners that he will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his office, which oath shall be deposited with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 3. That section 1592 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia is amended so as to read:

"The assistant surveyor shall take the same oath his principal is required to take, and may, during the continuance of his office, discharge and perform any of the official duties of his principal."

SEC. 4. That said Code of Law for the District of Columbia is further amended by repealing in its entirety section 1597 thereof.

SEC. 5. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] is recognized.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that this bill merely repeals the act of June 20, 1874. At that time the Commissioners of the District of Columbia did handle the funds of the District. Today they do not. It does not seem necessary to compel them to give a bond for $50,000 when they do not handle any funds. There are perhaps 30 people who come under the provisions of this act. None of the 30 people handle any money of the District.

The second paragraph of the first section is prompted by the belief that in a list of thirty-odd officers and employees who are now required to give bond there are perhaps more than a few whose duties do not reasonably require the giving of a bond or whose responsibilities do not justify a bond in the amount now required.

As I have said, the whole matter hinges on the law of 1874, and the present conditions in the District of Columbia are now changed and there is no necessity for putting those men to the trouble and expense of getting bonds, when they positively do not handle any funds in the District of Columbia.

I do not think there is any other salient fact concerned with the bill, and I do not think there is anything more to be said about it. It is simply a question of having the Commissioners and other officials go to the trouble and expense of procuring a bond when they do not handle any funds of the District, and they should not be required to do so. There is no justification for this requirement.

I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in 1878 the Congress wisely provided that the high officials of the District of Columbia should give a bond. That has been the law of the District since 1878. The District Commissioners and those officials handle just as much authority in money now as they did in 1878. There is no difference at all. Their responsibility has not changed one iota since 1878.

Is this doing away with official bonds something that Congress wants done? Is this something that the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia wants? Did this bill come from her? No. Did it come from her committee? No. Did it come from any committee of the Congress? No. I will show you where it came from. It came from the officers who are now required to give bonds. They are trying to get out from under. Why? No honest official should object to giving a bond. A bond it not for the protection of the official. It is for the protection of the people he serves. This bill does not come from the people whom those officers serve. It is not from the people of the District of Columbia. They are not asking that their officials be relieved from giving bonds. This bill comes from the officials themselves. I want to read what those officials say, and I read it from the committee report. This is what started this bill. It was prepared down in the District Building by the Commissioners. It was not prepared up here by any Congressional committee. They prepared this bill down in the District Building and they sent it up here to be passed. They prepared it only recently.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to read this first, and then I will yield.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment, yes; not now. I read from the report:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 24, 1935.

Hon. MARY T. NORTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MADAM: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith draft of a proposed bill to amend (1) an act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; (2) an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia"; to regulate the giving of official bonds by officers and employees of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—which repeals the laws requiring them to give bonds.

Now I yield to the lady from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not true the Commissioners send up nearly all the bills that come before the District Committee and before the Appropriations Committee as well?

Mr. BLANTON. No. It is true they send up many of the bills to the lady's legislative committee, but they do not send up any bills to the Committee on Appropriations. The estimates that come to the Committee on Appropriations are estimates that come from the President's Budget, and before they can get anything to our committee they must go to the President's Budget and submit their estimates and let the Director of the Budget pass upon them. Then, if they can get by the Budget Bureau, the estimates come to the Congressional Committee on Appropriations from the Budget.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman that it seems a pity that they do not send their recommendations to the committee of which the gentleman is a member, because if they did perhaps we would not have the disgraceful conditions we now have in the District with inadequate hospital facilities, inadequate schools, and everything else for which appropriations are necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Let us see whom the gentlewoman is criticizing. On the Committee on Appropriations are the following: Mr. BUCHANAN, of Texas; Mr. TAYLOR, of Colorado; Mr. OLIVER, of Alabama; Mr. SANDLIN, of Louisiana; Mr. CANNON, of Missouri; Mr. WOODRUM, of Virginia, Mr. ARNOLD, of Illinois; Mr. BOYLAN, of New York; Mr. PARKS, of Arkansas; Mr. LUDLOW, of Indiana, and many other good Democrats. Then, on the Republican side, she is criticizing one of the finest legislators in Washington, the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. TABER, one of the finest gentlemen I ever knew, a man of eminent legislative qualifications. [Applause.] He is the leader of the other side on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just one minute. My distinguished colleague from New Jersey is criticizing also our beloved friend the gentlewoman from California, who is a prominent member of the Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.] She exerts a wonderful influence over the Committee on Appropriations. We listen to her carefully when she has anything to say on that Committee on Appropriations. Whatever she wants done, she asks of us with a smile, and we grant her request almost even before she asks it.

Our distinguished friend from New Jersey is criticizing my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], one of the most conscientious men I have ever seen serve in Congress—a man who is sympathetic to every single thing that could appeal to humanitarian motives, who never turns down anything that ought not to be turned down.

Mrs. NORTON. I want to say to the gentleman that I thought he was the entire Appropriations Committee for the District of Columbia. From what we hear on the floor one would not know that anybody else was on the committee.

I want to state further that I am not criticizing the gentleman from New York nor any other member of that committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the distinguished lady will not cut that out of her remarks, because I deem it a great compliment.

Mrs. NORTON. I am not in the habit of taking my remarks out of the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the best campaign speech that ever was made for me.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman is welcome to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Coming from such a distinguished Democrat as the leader of the Democracy of New Jersey, I would not take the world for what my friend has said about my standing on that committee.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman is very welcome to what I have said if he can derive any satisfaction or consolation from it.

Mr. BLANTON. Getting back to this bill, my good friends on this committee should look more carefully, I am afraid, into some of these bills the Commissioners prepare and send up here to be O. K.'d. without due consideration.

Mrs. NORTON. Can the gentleman explain why the Surveyor of the District should be compelled to give a $20,000 bond, unless the gentleman likes these bonding companies in the District? That may be so, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know a single bonding company, and do not know any person representing any of them. My only interest is to see the people protected by proper bonds. In view of the fact that the gentlewoman from New Jersey, the chairman of the committee, has an hour's time, she can answer me after I get through. She might disturb my train of thought, because I must listen whenever she interrupts. I hope she will not interrupt me any further until I get through and then I will not take up so much time, and I think I have something of importance to tell my colleagues.

I am not here just to oppose a bill because it can be opposed. I do not oppose many of the bills this committee brings in here. Why, I sat here the other day and let them pass about 10 bills without opposing any of them. Whenever they have a good bill I never raise my voice against it but help them to pass it, but when the District Commissioners who, since 1878, by act of Congress have been required to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties to the 500,000 people living in Washington, whenever they try to get out from under that responsibility and try to repeal the law, and quit giving bonds, I must rise on this floor and raise my voice against it.

Now let us get the facts which nobody in this House denies. It has been the law since 1878 that these bonds should be given. If there is a Member here who denies that, I yield for the purpose. No one says a word in protest, so that is admitted to be a fact.

Mr. McFARLANE. Since 1874.

Mr. BLANTON. No; since 1878. The organic act of the District of Columbia which is in force right now and has been in force ever since 1878 was passed in 1878, and it required that these bonds be given. It has not been changed since that time. They have given bonds since 1878. It was in vogue when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and his splendid committee made its investigation of District affairs; and I take my hat off to him for the splendid work he did a few years ago.

Why should this bond requirement now be changed? Are these officers any better than the high officials of your States? Are they any better than the State officers in Baltimore, Md.? Every single one of those high officials of Maryland, whose capital is at Annapolis, but who spend most of their time in Baltimore City, have to give bonds.

They all give bonds. It is no reflection on them. It is simply for the protection of the people of Maryland.

Let us take the great Commonwealth of Virginia, whose capital is Richmond. Every single high official of the Commonwealth of Virginia gives an official bond. It is for faithful performance. It does not militate against their service but is simply for the interests of the people that they give the bond. My distinguished colleague from New Jersey says that because they do not actually handle with their own hands the $41,000,000 that we gave them for next year they should not give a bond.

Mr. Chairman, they make contracts involving hundreds of thousands of dollars. I sat at one time on a committee that investigated some of these contracts. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], who is now in the United States Senate was the chairman of the committee, and I sat with him on the committee that investigated affairs in the District of Columbia.

We found a former Commissioner who was in the hardware business making contracts involving thousands of dollars with his own firm. He was not giving out competitive bids to other people in the same business. When we brought him before us and confronted him with the situation, it was not long before he resigned his position. We found lots of that going on here in the District of Columbia. They are on the inside and control action on big Government contracts. This bond is for faithful performance and prevents them from doing things of that kind, things that smack of dishonesty.

May I say it has been the greatest safeguard for the people of Washington that this Congress has had control of the business affairs of the District of Columbia. It is this Congress that has kept the District honest. It is this Congress that has kept the District business affairs free of taint, free of fraud, and free of dishonor.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Does not the gentleman think that we should apply our time for effectively legislating for thousands and thousands of inhabitants of other cities where there is so much distress and allow the District of Columbia to legislate for itself? There is too much distress in the country, and we are worrying about one little city, when, as a matter of fact, we should be worrying about all of them.

Mr. BLANTON. When the gentleman from California has been here a few more years and has properly adapted himself to legislative duties, and has had a kind of perspective taking in the whole of the United States, he will not make a remark like that. That is the remark of a newcomer. It is the remark of somebody who is uninformed of Washington and the people of the District of Columbia. And I do not reflect on new Members. Some here are among our most valuable colleagues, and are some of the brightest, ablest men in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this 10-mile square, known as the "District of Columbia", known as "Washington, D. C.", is the Nation's seat of government. Back yonder when they framed the Constitution of the United States they put a provision in there, years before we moved to Washington, that there should be acquired and established in this vicinity a seat of government 10 miles square that should be absolutely controlled by the Congress of the United States. Do you know why they put that in the Constitution? It was because for years previous to that the legislators representing the country had been deviled and harassed to death. We had the Nation's Capital at Baltimore at one time. We had it at York, Pa., at one time. We had it in New York. We had it in Princeton, N. J. We had it at Annapolis. We had it in Philadelphia. But on June 15, 1800, the Capital was moved to our Government's own seat of affairs here in Washington, where we owned that seat of government and where the framers of the Constitution wisely provided that Congress should forever control the affairs of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman from California to take this home with him to think about this summer. When we moved the Capital down here, do you know that they did not dare to raise the prices on the Government of the United States? Did you know that all the lots here that the Government sold back to the people were sold for less than a total of $1,000,000? There are lots right here in Washington that when we moved here were not worth $50 and by reason of our plant here in Washington some are today worth $500,000. Did you know that?

Mr. Chairman, that is why the people of Washington cannot vote. It is because the framers of the Constitution wanted the absolute control of this 10-mile square, and therefore they put in the Constitution that the people who saw fit to live here could not vote. When we moved our Government here from Philadelphia on June 15, 1800—135 years ago—did you know that every person who lived in Washington then knew if he stayed here he could not vote? Did you know that every person who has moved here since did so with the knowledge that if he wanted to stay in Washington he could never vote? They stayed here and came here with a full knowledge of their rights, and they have seen fit to live here in the Nation's Capital and enjoy all of the benefits that we have given them during this 135 years, knowing that they could not vote. And there is a good logical reason why the good people of Washington do not want a vote here.

There never will be a vote in Washington, because it is against the Constitution, and the people of the United States are never going to change this provision of the Constitution. This is one 10-mile square that we are going to keep for the people of the United States. We are going to keep it free from domination of voters. It is our Nation's Capital; it is where the Congress sits; it is where the laws are passed; it is where the Government, through its Constitution, wisely provided a place that should be controlled absolutely by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much pleasure to the wonderful oration of my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], but I disagree with his view of this proposed legislation.

I can see no more reason why the District Commissioners should be bonded, or the surveyor of the District, than to bond Members of Congress. A District Commissioner does not collect or expend any money. The surveyor does not collect or disburse any money—not one penny—but it is necessary for the District to pay for bonds of $120,000 for these three officials. This is very nice business for the bonding companies, but it is not very good business for the District of Columbia or for the people here who are paying the cost of running the District government. There is not any reason why we should bond Members of Congress. We take an oath of office to uphold the Constitution and the laws of the country. The District Commissioners take an oath of office, as does the surveyor, and in view of the fact they handle no finances, why should we give this lucrative business to the bonding companies when there is no danger of the District Commissioner or the surveyor absconding with any money?

Mr. BLANTON. If I yield the gentleman 5 minutes of my time, will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. WOOD. Yes; just a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Missouri 5 minutes of my time.

Mr. WOOD. Just ask the question, I do not need any more time.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the surveyor, who does not handle any money, should be bribed by someoody to run a crooked line and someone is injured in the sum of thousands of dollars, his bond would cover malfeasance in office and would be a protection to the people injured against any such fraud or dishonesty.

Mr. WOOD. I beg to differ from the gentleman. The bond does not cover a mistake in a survey.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not say a mistake but fraud, and it covers malfeasance in office.

Mr. WOOD. The bond given by a Commissioner or by the surveyor refers to nothing except misappropriation of money.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman a lawyer?

Mr. WOOD. I know what these bonds cover.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman a copy of the bond there—he will see it covers malfeasance in office.

Mr. WOOD. I know these bonds do not protect either the District or the people from a mistake by the surveyor. There is a right of action at law.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman a lawyer?

Mr. WOOD. No; I am not.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman a copy of the bond there?

Mr. WOOD. I do not have to be a lawyer to know the general rules with respect to bonding companies. I think I know as much about bonding companies as the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I suspect the gentleman knows more about that than I do, although I am a lawyer.

Mr. WOOD. I decline to yield further. The gentleman has taken up about all of my time now.

There is not anything further I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, but I can see no reason why the District Commissioners should be bonded any more than the officers of any other municipality in the United States who do not handle any finances of a municipality. This is simply fine business for the bonding company and brings no benefit to the District or the Government.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know how much the Commissioners are compelled to pay for these bonds?

Mr. WOOD. I do not know the regular bonding rates here.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. They have to pay it out of their own pockets, do they not?

Mr. WOOD. No; the District pays it, I understand. Of course, a Commissioner could not very well pay the fee on a $50,000 bond per annum, as it would amount to several hundred dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time and also the 5 minutes that the gentleman from Texas yielded me.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO].

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, it is amusing on District day to listen to the gentleman from Texas—always ready and willing to take the floor, and oftentimes taking advantage of not having a quorum, and then ridiculing, as he calls them, the "new Members."

The gentleman from Texas has told us everything except on this occasion why he does not want to save some money for the Treasury. He has always taken the floor as the watchdog of the Treasury. When the District comes into the House and makes a recommendation to save money for the District, because of money paid out as premiums for bonds, which has nothing to do with the District because the men who are bonded handle no funds, and therefore are unable to misappropriate anything, and if there is any misfeasance in office we have the courts open, he objects.

The gentleman from Texas has told us when the Capital was in Pennsylvania, when it was in Maryland, and then when it was brought back here as a Capital, where it owns the land, but he failed to tell us what price the Government paid for this valuable piece of land. He did not tell us that it was the colonial estates that had given the land to the Government.

He emphasized the fact that the land was worth nothing. Of course it was worth nothing, the same as every piece of land in the country at some time was worth nothing.

So in order to kill time he talks about everything under the sun except the real issue. I would like to have him tell the Members of the House why he is always picking on the District. Since he has been on the Appropriations Committee he has constantly been cutting down the appropriations for the District. He is constantly helping to take away assessable property, and now when the District wants to save a few dollars in order that it may benefit, he comes in here and complains when we are asking to cut down appropriations that they say are very extravagant. We are not asking to cut down any extravagant appropriations. We are simply asking to save a few dollars that are paid for bonds by officials who handle no funds and cannot misappropriate funds. I hope the House will support the committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Can the gentleman tell us whether these officials are covered by a blanket bond or individual bonds?

Mr. PALMISANO. Individual bonds.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has any attempt been made to cover these officials by a blanket bond?

Mr. PALMISANO. No. This law was enacted years ago when the Commissioners had charge of the funds. Since that time they have been made merely budget directors, or commissioners, and they handle no funds. When the question was brought up in the committee I asked whether the Commissioners had control over contracts.

I was then informed that they had not even the last word on contracts. Realizing who the people were who were required to give a bond, the Commissioners of the District, and wondering whether they could do some sort of trickery work in reference to contracts, I asked the question, and they said "No"; that they have not the last say on contract. So there is no need to require a bond of them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do these individuals carry the expense of the bond personally, or is it a District expense?

Mr. PALMISANO. I think it is a District expense, because their income would not justify paying for a $50,000 bond.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Can any member of the committee tell us what would be saved in bond premiums if this bill were enacted into law?

Mr. PALMISANO. I do not know, but it might be about $1,500.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do the Commissioners have the power to initiate or partly confirm a contract pertaining to any kind of property?

Mr. PALMISANO. No; the Budget Director has control of that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Have the Commissioners any power over any kind of property, not just cash?

Mr. PALMISANO. I do not think so. The thing I had in mind at the time was contracts, and I asked whether it would be dangerous to permit them to officiate without bonds, in view of their power over contracts, and I was informed that they had not the say on contracts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The total annual saving which this bill would bring about is about $1,500?

Mr. PALMISANO. One thousand five hundred dollars to two thousand dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes in which to reply to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO].

Over in his State every little justice of peace is under bond. Do you know why he is under bond? For faithful performance of duty.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. PALMISANO. Does the gentleman realize that those justices of the peace collect fines which are to be returned to the State?

Mr. BLANTON. They may do that, but not in large amounts.

Mr. PALMISANO. Very well; they should be bonded.

Mr. BLANTON. These District Commissioners control the expenditure of $40,000,000 annually. How about the county attorneys? Do they handle money? Some county attorneys and some district attorneys in some States are required to give bond.

Mr. WOOD. What kind of attorneys are under bond?

Mr. BLANTON. All of them in some States.

Mr. WOOD. Not in my State.

Mr. BLANTON. They are in some States.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman knows that the county attorneys handle funds in claims of any consequence or property.

Mr. BLANTON. How about county surveyors? The surveyors do not handle any funds. Practically all county surveyors in the various States are under bond. This bill would relieve the surveyor in Washington from being under bond.

Mr. BEITER. There are no county surveyors. County engineers do the surveying.

Mr. BLANTON. In some States like Texas we have county surveyors. They have county surveyors in many of the States. They have them in your State, and your State, and your State [nodding to several Members]. Every one of them is under bond.

Mr. MILLARD. Does anyone know the form of this bond? I have been listening to argument here for 20 minutes and nobody seems to know whether it covers misappropriation of funds or malfeasance or misfeasance.

Mr. BLANTON. Every lawyer in the House knows that every official bond covers not only misappropriation of funds but also it covers faithful performance of duty and provides against malfeasance in office. It makes that official responsible for every malfeasance in office. If he purposely enters into some fraud against the people he serves, those people who are damaged by it can go into court and make him pay for it on his bond. Many notaries have been sued for damages for making false certificates.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Does not the gentleman think that the moral influence alone exercised by the bond is worth the price of it?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, that is correct. It is worth everything. Very few officials default and the reason for it is because most of them are honest, and they are all under bond, and the moral effect deters the dishonest in many cases. It is an unwise procedure for Congress to relieve high officials of the District of Columbia from the necessity of giving bonds. It has worked well here since 1878.

Let me call your attention to something funny that my friend from Maryland, Mr. PALMISANO, said. He said it was not necessary to require bonds, because if they were guilty of malfeasance in office you could prosecute them in a criminal court. What good would that do? It would not get any money back. If a surveyor deliberately accepted a bribe and ran a crooked line and defrauded somebody out of $10,000 and he did not have anything that you could attach by law, what good would it do to prosecute him criminally? It would not get the money back. It is the bond that stands between him and unfaithful service to the people. The bond makes whole the fraud and dishonesty.

This is nothing to me, personally. If you want to relieve all of these Washington officials of bonds, do so, but what kind of explanation are you going to make to all of your local officials when you go back home, who were forced to give bond? They will come to you and say, "Congressman, I want you to help me to get a law passed in the State legislature relieving me of a bond. I notice up in Washington where the District Commissioners got tired of being under bond, and wanted to evade responsibility, sat down and drew up a law to relieve them of giving bonds and sent it to the District Committee and the District Committee reported it and while BLANTON made a fight against the bill, you voted to relieve them and I want you to help relieve me." What will you say to that? I have done my full duty when

I have finished my speech against this bill, and when I vote against it. I cannot do more.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman tell the Members if there are any officers in the State of Texas who do not handle money who give bonds to the extent of $50,000? It may be true they are under a nominal bond.

Mr. BLANTON. If I tell the gentleman of about 5,000 unimportant officers in Maryland who do not handle any money at all who are under bond, will he withdraw this bill, and not pass it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield myself 5 minutes more. I am going to accept the gentleman's challenge. I will name 5,000 officers in Maryland who do not handle any money at all for the State or for the people and who are under bond. They are notaries public, and everyone of them you have in Maryland is under bond, is he not? What is it for? It is for faithful performance of service. It is to keep him from making a false certificate. When some crook comes to him and represents himself to be Mr. Goldsborough and says he is making a deed to somebody for Mr. Goldsborough's property, if that notary does not ascertain who that man is and find out that he is not Goldsborough, he is guilty of malfeasance in office, and he can be sued on his bond for damages. That is what the bonds are for. It is to protect the people from dishonest practices.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield now, as I do not want to take up too much time.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. Very well. I yield to the gentleman, since he is on the committee handling the bill.

Mr. PALMISANO. It is true notaries do give bond.

Mr. BLANTON. Why do you not relieve them?

Mr. PALMISANO. But it is a nominal bond; not a $50,000 bond.

Mr. BLANTON. They are about $1,500 bonds in most States. They range from $1,000 to about $2,500.

Mr. PALMISANO. Very well. They can do an injustice, such as the gentleman spoke of, of $100,000 in one real-estate transaction. That is something that cannot be done here.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, more than that damage could be done here by a dishonest Commissioner. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] gave you the crux of it a while ago when he said it was the moral influence of that bond over officials that counted most. You put them under bond and keep them under bond. I hope I will never vote, as long as I am in the House, to relieve a public official from giving bond to require faithful and honest performance of service to the people of the country whom he represents.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What reason is there for not having these bonds covered by a blanket bond instead of individual bonds?

Mr. BLANTON. Not a bit. They could do it and save much on premiums.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And would it not save a lot of money?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. They would save a lot of money by having a blanket bond.

I want to call attention to one other thing and then I will have finished.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I regret I have not the time. I do not want to be interrupted for a moment. I am sorry.

Some of you older Members will remember some 12 years ago I made an investigation, when I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, of the insurance department of the District of Columbia, when Insurance Commissioner Miller was in charge there. You will remember the report I then filed with Congress, which is published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, wherein I showed that that man was accepting bribes from insurance companies all over the land. He was collecting annual bonuses from them in order to allow them to do business in the District of Columbia. I showed instance after instance where he had collected those bonuses. The very next day after I filed my report the Commissioners fired him and kicked him out of office. Suppose he had not been under bond? Suppose you had relieved him of bond? When you relieve the Commissioners of bond you take all the responsibility off of their shoulders, if there should ever be one who is dishonest.

And once in a while a commissioner is dishonest. I will remind you of former Commissioner Col. Frederic A. Fenning. There are men in this House who some years ago saw me take this floor and on my responsibility as a Member of Congress, impeach a Commissioner of the District of Columbia, Col. Frederic A. Fenning, of high crimes and misdemeanors. I presented evidence against him before the Gibson committee for several weeks. It condemned Fenning. He had three of the leading lawyers of Washington to defend him. Frank Hogan, the great criminal lawyer, was one of his attorneys. After I impeached him from this floor, I prosecuted him before our Judiciary Committee for several weeks, and I piled up the evidence on him so strong, I showed where he had had many scores of shell-shocked soldiers of the World War declared insane and had put them in insane asylums, and he had himself appointed their committee, or guardian, and he had robbed them out of nearly $200,000. I forced him to resign and I forced him to pay back some of that money to those shell-shocked soldiers.

It pays to have high commissioners under bond. Once in a while you get a black sheep among them. Once in a while you may again get another black sheep among some of the officials of the District of Columbia. There is no reason why they should not give bond. They have done it since 1878. It is no reflection on their honesty. Let us keep them under bond.

When the proper time comes I shall move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill, and if you want to keep them under bond, which they have been under since 1878, you will vote for my motion. Why have they not asked to be relieved in all that time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield myself 1 more minute and that is all I want. Why did they not ask to be relieved 10 years ago, or 20 years ago? Why did they not ask to be relieved 30 years ago? Why did they not ask to be relieved 40 years ago? They have waited all these years since 1878, and been under bond since 1878, and this is the first time they have ever prepared a bill and brought it up here asking to be relieved from giving a bond.

I am going to vote to make them give a bond. I am not going to vote to relieve them. You can do it if you want to, but the responsibility will be upon your shoulders. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mrs. NORTON. That concludes the general debate, Mr. Chairman, and the Clerk may read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved June 11, 1878 (20 Stat. 103, ch. 180), entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia", be, and the same hereby is, amended by repealing the provision "and shall, before entering upon the duties of the office, each give bond in the sum of $50,000, with surety as is required by existing law", and said section is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"The said Commissioners are hereby authorized and empowered, any statute to the contrary notwithstanding, to determine which officers and employees of the District of Columbia shall hereafter be required to give or renew bond for the faithful discharge of their duties and to fix the penalty of any such bond."

With the following committee amendments——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk reads the committee amendments, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. Chairman, I have debated this bill. I am not going to take up any further time. If you vote to strike out the enacting clause, you will leave the law as it has been since 1878, and will not relieve high officials from giving bonds. If you vote down my motion you will pass this bill relieving the Commissioners and 31 high officials from giving bond, and will leave the people they serve without this protection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Considering the millions of dollars that are handled every year by these Commissioners, their many official acts, contracts, and so forth they pass upon, and the men appointed under them who will be relieved from bond under this bill, it seems to me as though to pass this bill would be nothing short of a tragedy.

Mr. BLANTON. We have turned over to them for the next fiscal year $41,000,000. They can make contracts involving every penny of it. It is a ridiculous proposition to relieve them of such bonds, for they control every person who will pay out this $41,000,000 and every person who makes contracts respecting it.

It is nothing to me personally. I have done my duty. I have called the matter to your attention, and when I vote against this bill, that is all I can do.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] a few moments ago propounded a question as to how much saving there would be to the Government if this bill were enacted into law. Under the assumption that each commissioner was bonded for $10,000, it has been stated the saving would be approximately $1,500. Since that time I have learned that each person is bonded for $50,000. So the saving instead of being $1,500 would be approximately $6,000. I wanted to make this correction and also to have the members of the committee know that the saving to the Government will be $6,000 rather than $1,500 as heretofore stated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has any calculation been made as to what the saving would be on a blanket bond instead of individual bonds?

Mr. BLANTON. They could have a blanket bond covering all of them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the committee would find that a very staggering saving could be made by the use of a blanket bond instead of individual bonds.

Mr. BEITER. I understand the saving in premiums would be about 40 percent.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The bonding companies realize the extent of the liability or the premium would not amount to $6,000.

Mr. BEITER. That is their minimum charge, as I understand it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They can charge what they please.

Mr. BEITER. Bonding companies generally have a minimum charge, and in this instance I am advised the charge is $5 per thousand.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; they do not. I have represented them 25 years.

Mr. BEITER. I do not doubt the gentleman's statement. However, I know the laws governing bonding companies vary in nearly every State in the Union, and in all probability there is a vast difference between the laws governing bonding companies in the District of Columbia and those in the State of Maryland. I am sure the opponents of this bill are as anxious to effect a saving to the Government as are the members of the District Committee and the District Commissioners who have recommended that this proposed legislation be enacted into law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. NORTON) there were—ayes 48, noes 26.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman cannot get an automatic vote in the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCRUGHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7765, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on my motion.

The SPEAKER. There is no such question pending before the House.

Mrs. NORTON. I objected to the vote on the ground there was not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. That question has not been raised in the House.

Mr. BLANTON. The Committee rose before the Committee found it had no quorum.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PALMISANO. As I understood, the gentlewoman from New Jersey objected to the vote on the ground there was not a quorum present, and while that was being considered the gentleman from Texas moved that the Committee rise.

My inquiry is, Does the motion of the gentleman from Texas take precedence over the objection of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

The SPEAKER. The proceedings to which the gentleman refers took place, of course, in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Texas moved that the Committee rise; and the Committee has risen, and we are now in the House. There is nothing pending before the House so far as this bill is concerned.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7765.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my motion to permit the gentleman from New York to submit a unanimous-consent request.

HOLDING-COMPANY BILL

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have until midnight tonight to file a majority report and minority views on the holding-company bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the announcement of the Chair with respect to my objection to the vote on the ground that a quorum was not present.

The SPEAKER. The question is not pending before the House.

NATIONAL PARK TRUST FUND BOARD

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas further withhold his motion to adjourn?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my motion for the time being.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2074, to create a National Park Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I would inform the gentleman that by unanimous consent a similar House bill (H. R. 6734) was passed and no Member on the minority of the committee objected.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman can take it up in the morning. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 44, noes 46.

So the motion was rejected.

BONDS OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 7765, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7765) to amend (1) an act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; (2) an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia"; to regulate the giving of official bonds by officers and employees of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the bill be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. No.

The SPEAKER. The House has already decided to go into Committee for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7765, and the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7765, with Mr. SCRUGHAM in the chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, as soon as the Clerk reports the bill I have a preferential motion to offer.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion. The Committee of the Whole having moved to strike out the enacting clause and there having been further business transacted, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. NORTON) there were—ayes 48, noes 49.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum, and pending that I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and six Members are present; a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, what does the Chair understand tellers are demanded on?

Mr. BLANTON. On the vote to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Following that there was a point of no quorum made.

Mr. BLANTON. No. I made a point of no quorum, and pending that demanded tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. All of those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand it, this teller vote is being taken on the question of the Committee rising and reporting the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Those in favor of striking out the enacting clause would pass through the tellers first?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And those opposing would pass through later?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that is not a parliamentary inquiry. That is telling the Members how to vote.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 45, noes 56.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 2, line 5, strike out the words "any statute to the contrary notwithstanding."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "bond", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That this power of the Commissioners shall not apply to officers and employees who receive, disburse, account for, or otherwise are responsible for the handling of money, and whose bonds are now fixed by law. The provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1909, and for other purposes', approved August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. 118, 125), relating to rates of premiums for bonds for officers and employees of the United States shall be, and are hereby, made applicable to the rates of premiums for bonds of officers and employees of the government of the District of Columbia."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 1578, chapter LV, of the act approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1424), entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", is hereby amended so as to read:

"The surveyor shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before the Commissioners that he will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his office, which oath shall be deposited with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 3. That section 1592 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia is amended so as to read:

"The assistant surveyor shall take the same oath his principal is required to take, and may, during the continuance of his office, discharge and perform any of the official duties of his principal."

SEC. 4. That said Code of Law for the District of Columbia is further amended by repealing in its entirety section 1597 thereof.

SEC. 5. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SCRUGHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7765, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. NORTON) there were—ayes 52, noes 48.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 115, not voting 143, as follows:

Mr. KVALE changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I object.

THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter which I have written to the president of the United States group in reference to the Interparliamentary Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

JUNE 18, 1935.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
President United States of America
Group the Interparliamentary Union,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: As a Member of the Congress I wish to protest to you, as president of the United States of America Group of the Interparliamentary Union, against any action or any participation of the United States of America group in relation to international economic or international political questions to be taken up at the next meeting of the Interparliamentary Union.

I wish to protest particularly against any action or participation by the American group in relation to the "Harmonization of the Briand-Kellogg Pact with the Covenant of the League of Nations", which topic I note is upon the official agenda for the next meeting.

With regard to my protest, I wish to bring to your attention a statement of Dr. Charles L. Lange, formerly secretary general of the Interparliamentary Union, which appears on page 14 of the Interparliamentary Union, handbook of the American group, 1914. This statement reads:

"But up to the present time the interparliamentarians have always limited themselves to the discussion of questions relating to international law; they have never discussed economic questions, and they have always expressly refused to pronounce themselves on problems of a political nature, in which the interests of different States might be opposed.

"The latter principle is one inevitably bound up with the character of the institution itself. Because the Union is composed of responsible statesmen, belonging to nations whose legitimate interests may from time to time be in conflict, it would inevitably compromise its own authority if it raised its voice for or against this or the other practical solution of international conflicts. The interparliamentary gatherings have, without exception, always restricted themselves to the advocacy of peaceful and judicial methods for the settlement of conflicts."

I desire specifically to bring to your attention that the act authorizing the appropriation for the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union provides as follows: "That an appropriation of $20,000 annually is hereby authorized, $10,000 of which shall be for the annual contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of international arbitration; and $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to assist in meeting the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union for each fiscal year for which an appropriation is made."

It would seem from this language that the United States of America group has authority to participate only in discussions or actions "for the promotion of international arbitration."

Very truly yours,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

CHARLES A. LINDBERGH—PATRIOT, PIONEER, STATESMAN, LAWYER, WRITER, COURAGEOUS CHAMPION FOR THE PEOPLE

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, in 80 years of Minnesota history many Congressmen and Senators have come to Washington from the North Star State. The most able and distinguished of them all was Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh, of Little Falls, who was destined to reach a place in the hall of fame of this country because of his progressive, forward-looking, common-sense economic views. He was known as a "radical", a term often applied to the great men of the Nation. I predict that Lindbergh will grow in the estimation of the American public, and as he recedes from our day and age his figure will loom larger in our political life.

His books, reproduced by large publishing houses, are now often quoted in the foremost and best-read magazines in the country. It was a strange turn of fate that the stellar accomplishments of his brilliant son should aid in bringing to the attention of the American people the achievements of the father, Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh.

Lindbergh was modest, quiet, and unassuming, a keen student, and his reputation in Washington was that of ability, diligence, and persistence. He was first to arrive at his offices, sometimes coming when the bugles sounded reveille for the troops about Washington. Often at sunrise he would be at work, and whenever I visited his offices I always found him buried in his papers and his writings and his work. He served five consecutive terms, from March 4, 1907, to March 4, 1917, having served prior to that time as county attorney of Morrison County, Minn., 1891–93.

MINNESOTA PIONEER

He was able to do this tremendous amount of work because of his early training as a woodsman, hunter, and man of work in a frontier country. He was tall, dignified, and slender in appearance. He knew his district thoroughly and was greatly beloved by its people. During his campaigns for Governor of the State of Minnesota he suffered the fires of war time persecution. This persecution now serves to set off his lofty character and makes him outstanding in Minnesota and American history.

We cannot honor Congressman Lindbergh too much. He is not fully appreciated even today, but as the years pass we will know him better for his great accomplishments. The Money Trust investigation, which he sponsored, was the most important investigation of the twentieth century in Congress. Nothing like it before or since has ever been published by any congressional committee, and anything that has happened since, such as the recent Senate investigation, is a mere copy and repetition of the first Pujo Money Trust investigation, for years advocated by Lindbergh. His every prediction concerning the Federal Reserve System has come true.

He was in every sense of the word a real, true, genuine American. He was born in Stockholm, Sweden, January 20, 1859, and was brought by his parents to the homestead near Melrose, Minn., before he reached the age of 1 year. He received an American training in the United States and thoroughly understood our people and our institutions. I have met hundreds of nationally great men in the various Congresses and in my public life; but I have never met a man, no matter what position he held, who made a deeper or more profound impression upon his close personal friends than Charles A. Lindbergh.

LINDBERGH'S POLITICAL BATTLES

Lindbergh always had a plan and a program—a well-thought-out platform. He gave most freely of his time to bring his ideas before the public, often when he must have known how forlorn was the hope of victory. He found, as many others before and since have learned, that the best forum is the public platform in campaign times, primary and election, in campaign years. And always he carried his message to the people in the off years in between elections.

Out there in the hot summer sun on hayracks and wagon platforms he spoke, and he used the early automobile as a forum long before the days of the loudspeaker system. He canoed up and down streams of the north woods and walked over hills and western prairies. He labored hard with his fellow citizens to instruct and convince and urge them to political action.

I remember one winter night, many years ago, when we drove through Shakopee, Minn., and, weary and hungry, Mrs. Lundeen and our little family stopped off at a little country hotel for dinner. A sound of many voices came through the main-room door. Men came and went. Our curiosity was aroused, especially when we learned that the discussion centered around farm problems.

LINDBERGH AND THE FARMERS

Here was "C. A.", as we often called him, in the center of an extremely earnest group of men of the soil, men who that very day struggled hurriedly through their many chores that they might be on hand to confer with their friend—the farmers' friend, the people's friend—Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh. And how late they stayed, and when the group broke up, others lingered on, but "C. A." was there when the last man left, and then he would think and write and ponder and plan. That was Charles A. Lindbergh.

It is well known that the Pujo investigation of 1913, ordered by House Resolutions 429 and 504, before a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, was sponsored by Congressman Lindbergh; his resolutions and speeches resulted in this monumental work. There had been much talk in the country about interlocking directorates, but the Pujo investigation proved their existence. It gave the facts, statistics, and data. It called Morgan, Carnegie, and Rockefeller, and all the rest of the financial powers in America to Washington, and placed them on the witness stand.

The recent Senate Banking and Currency Committee investigation and other investigations are merely repetitions and only confirm the facts uncovered in the original Money Trust investigation by Lindbergh of Minnesota.

LINDBERGH STATE PARK, LITTLE FALLS, MINNESOTA

In honor of Colonel Lindbergh and his famous father, mother, and home, we of Minnesota have dedicated the Lindbergh State Park at Little Falls, appropriation being made by the State for its maintenance, and the land being deeded to the State by the heirs. There are magnificent pines and a beautiful rural setting above the Mississippi which sweeps on past Little Falls. The location of the park is about 2 miles from the center of Little Falls, Minn., easily accessible from the main highway, running through the Twin Cities, St. Cloud, Little Falls, and Brainerd.

I remember distinctly in 1924, urging the erection of a monument, preferably a great boulder, to be inscribed to the honor and memory of Congressman Lindbergh. I could interest only one man in the matter, Mr. G. A. Raymond, of Minneapolis, a close friend and political supporter of Lindbergh in all his campaigns. Finances were lacking to put the project across. A number of letters were written to granite companies at Little Falls and St. Cloud. We talked of State parks, and I frequently urged upon my Farmer-Labor associates the introduction of a bill into the State legislature to carry out this project.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH, WORLD FAMOUS AIR HERO, ONLY SON OF CONGRESSMAN CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

However, nothing came of it until our world famous Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, only son of Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh, conquered the ocean from New York to Paris; even then the matter lagged for some time until Senator Rosenmeier, of Little Falls, introduced a bill which passed the legislature and was signed by our Farmer-Labor Governor, Floyd B. Olson, making possible forever the Lindbergh State Park.

The original Lindbergh home was destroyed by fire many years ago and a new house was built, which still stands. However, this present house was rather badly handled by the crowd which rushed in after the colonel's flight across the ocean. Tens of thousands wrote their names upon every nook and corner; every book and pamphlet and piece of movable furniture disappeared, and even stoves and other articles and utensils were taken apart and carried away, to the great loss of future generations, especially students who would like to examine the volumes, pamphlets, and writings collected by Lindbergh during his long public service. All was carried away and disappeared forever.

AUGUST LINDBERGH OLD FARM HOMESTEAD PROPOSED STATE PARK

For years I have proposed a Melrose-Lindbergh Park near Melrose, Minn., on the original homestead established by Congressman Lindbergh's father, August Lindbergh, in 1860 and where the Congressman grew to manhood. I have conducted much correspondence on this matter. I have urged our State officials and many others to no avail. Some day the original homestead will become a State park in honor of the three Lindberghs—all courageous, undaunted, immortal pioneers.

UNDYING DETERMINATION

A strain of undying determination runs through three generations of the Lindbergh family. Discouragement, persecution, and calamity were met and conquered by grandfather, father, and son. Seldom is such unconquerable spirit found in the successive generations of one family. The whole world knows the odds against which young Colonel Lindbergh staked his life in the first trans-Atlantic flight; his undaunted courage has won for him world-wide admiration. His father, Congressman Lindbergh, displayed the same courageous spirit in facing the bitter persecution of political enemies. In future years his heroism will be more widely known. Both father and son inherited a fighting determination that knew no defeat from the grandfather, August, the Swedish statesman and American pioneer who emerged from the jaws of death a cripple, and yet lived to build his log house, rear his family, manage his farm, and educate a future Congressman.

COURAGE IN THE FACE OF DEATH

In 1861 a terrible accident befell August Lindbergh. He had hauled a giant log to the mill to be sawed into lumber for his house. At the mill he slipped and fell into a circular saw, losing his left arm to the shoulder and cutting through four ribs. The wagon was hitched to the oxen and August was carried back to his farm—a 4-hour journey—lying prostrate on the wagon floor, his remaining hand gripping his left shoulder to check the flow of blood. It was 3 days and 3 nights before the nearest doctor could be brought to the dying man. His courageous young wife, Louise—30 years his junior—and his son Charles made innumerable trips to the spring during that time, bringing cold water and keeping the bleeding and fever under control. When the doctor arrived amputation was performed without anesthetic, and after 2 years as an invalid, August Lindbergh returned to his work as if nothing had happened, and carried on as before.

FOUNDER OF FARMER-LABOR PARTY

Among all the splendid work of this fine Minnesotan none was more important than his aiding in the building of a Farmer-Labor Party in the State of Minnesota.

He stood by when the going was hard. He was there at its birth. He was the first Farmer-Labor Nonpartisan League candidate for Governor, and was the main support of Dave Evans, who was the first to carry the Farmer-Labor banner for Governor. Throughout the years and to the very end he was a loyal courageous fighter for the principles of right and justice.

I DEFEND ONLY THE RIGHT

Colonel Lindbergh at a recent Washington aircraft hearing said, "I defend only the right." Golden words, taught a Minnesota boy by a wonderful father, who never fought for anything but the right.

We have listed here his many battles—for office, his enemies would say; for principles and country, we reply; for, irrespective of victory or defeat, he drove on with all his power of thought and great physical strength until he fell upon the political battlefield, as he would have chosen, in the midst of a fight where the battle was hottest for Governor, and glory, and his beloved people.

ELECTION HISTORY OF CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

1891–93: County attorney, Morrison County, Minn. (Preceded and followed by Frank W. Lyon, and not a candidate for reelection.)

PERSISTENT MEN OF VISION

It is common to abuse persistent men of vision, like Lindbergh, for their frequent candidacies. The conservative press delights in that, forgetting that their own conservative candidates are inveterate and incurable office seekers.

Suppose we give the record of a great liberal and a great progressive and a great radical—the candidacies of Abraham Lincoln for office, as furnished us by the Congressional Library at Washington, D. C.

Lincoln had a plan and a platform. He always had a well-thought-out program. Why not fight for it, in victory or defeat? And he did. He surely did. That is the life story of Abraham Lincoln. Here we may read and learn.

ELECTION HISTORY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

1832, March 9: Lincoln announced himself as candidate for the Illinois Legislature.

1832, May 27: Lincoln elected captain of his company in the Black Hawk War.

1832, summer: Lincoln defeated for the legislature. The successful candidates had votes running from 1,127 to 815. Lincoln had 657.

1833: Lincoln appointed postmaster of New Salem. Held office 3 years.

1833: Lincoln appointed deputy county surveyor by John Calhoun, surveyor of Sangamon County. Reappointed by T. N. Neale in 1835.

1834: Lincoln elected to Illinois Legislature by the following vote: Lincoln, 1,376; Dawson, 1,370; Carpenter, 1,170; Stuart, 1,164. Lincoln was reelected in 1836, 1838, and 1840. Received the Whig vote for speaker in 1838 and 1840. Twice defeated for speaker.

1841: Lincoln declined to be candidate for Governor.

1843: Lincoln sought nomination by Whigs for Congress. Defeated.

1844: Lincoln Presidential elector for Henry Clay. Lincoln defeated. Illinois went for James K. Polk.

1846: Lincoln elected to Congress by the Whigs, majority 1,511.

1848: Lincoln voted against Mexican War. Popular indignation ran high. Refused to stand for renomination.

1849: Lincoln applied for Commissioner of the General Land Office. Failed.

1849: Lincoln offered governorship of Oregon Territory. Declined. Desired to accept, unable to persuade Mrs. Lincoln to go to that far western country.

1850: Lincoln said to have refused a nomination for Congress.

1854: Lincoln elected to the legislature by some 650 majority. Later he resigned because a member could not be candidate for United States Senator.

1855. Lincoln Whig candidate for Senate. Defeated.

1856: Lincoln received 110 votes for Republican candidate for Vice President. Defeated.

1856: Lincoln Presidential elector for Fremont. Defeated. Illinois went for James Buchanan.

1858: Lincoln nominated for the Senate by the Republicans.

1859: Douglas, the Democratic candidate, chosen by the legislature, 54 to 46. Lincoln defeated.

1860: Lincoln nominated and elected President.

1864: Lincoln renominated and reelected President.

CONGRESSMAN LINDBERGH AND THE FARMER-LABOR PARTY

Among the founders of a Labor Party in America we find foremost the name of Lindbergh, who battled it out with his Republican conservative reactionary opponent, J. A. A. Burnquist, in the cruel and vicious war years of 1917–18. The shame of that campaign can never be erased by those who heaped abuse and violence upon a great man. The mere memory of it ought to bring the crimson blush of shame were they not too callous in mind and body. Yes; thank God, they are almost forgotten, but he lives on in glory without end.

What was the result of his work? What accomplishments at Washington? Who were the Farmer-Labor Representatives in House and Senate? We list them here, and may we say, always on the side of liberalism and progress. Had America followed our advice we would have kept out of European entanglements, we would have escaped the destruction of the World War and its inevitable panic and depression. Here is the true American party—loyal to the traditions of the great Republic and building for a better and happier America. Ours is the program for social security, and Lindbergh was our first great teacher. Here is the hope of America—a great national Farmer-Labor Party.

MINNESOTA TERRITORIAL DELEGATES TO CONGRESS

Minnesota was made a State in 1858. From 1849 to 1858 there were three Territorial Delegates sent to Congress from Minnesota. These Delegates were:

Henry H. Sibley, January 15, 1849, to March 4, 1853; 4 years 1 month 17 days.

Henry M. Rice, December 5, 1853, to March 4, 1857; 3 years 2 months 27 days.

W. W. Kingsbury, December 7, 1857, to May 11, 1858; 5 months 4 days.

Errors may be discovered by those versed in Minnesota political lore. If so, we will be pleased to stand corrected.

CONGRESSMAN LINDBERGH'S BUST PLACED IN JOHN MORTON MEMORIAL MUSEUM, PHILADELPHIA

I have spoken of Lindbergh's writings, and I here list Lindbergh's books and pamphlets, chronologically furnished me by the John Morton Memorial Museum, of Philadelphia, where recently a bust of Congressman Lindbergh was placed, on Sunday, June 23, 1935, at which ceremony I had the honor to deliver some remarks on the life of Lindbergh. Dr. Amandus Johnson, director of the museum, deserves great credit for his loyal work in remembrance of great Swedish-American immortals honored here—John Morton, John Hanson, John Ericsson, Jenny Lind, and numerous others.

We also wish to call attention to Lindbergh's many speeches delivered between March 4, 1907 and March 4, 1917, during his five consecutive terms—10 years—in Congress. These speeches contain a wealth of information. They are full of prophecies of the future. They are the result of clear thinking and deep study. All of these speeches should be compiled into a set of books containing all of Lindbergh's congressional speeches and writings. This will be done some day.

It was my pleasure to present to the Morton Museum the Rules and Manual of the United States House of Representatives used by Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh. This well-worn volume came into my possession from my friend, G. A. Raymond, now in Portland, Oreg.

SOCIAL-INSURANCE LEGISLATION

The Lindberghs of Sweden came to America sturdy, independent, thoughtful men. They were always unafraid and smiled through tempests of hatred and opposition. Sweden leads in social legislation. It is a progressive, liberal country. After coming to America, Congressman August Lindbergh, grandfather of the colonel and father of Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh, continued his efforts to improve conditions among his fellow men. He was a great Liberal leader in Sweden and, in spite of his language handicap, continued to lead in the American community where he pioneered.

His great son, the American Congressman, followed in the footsteps of his father, who served as congressman in the Swedish Congress; and the world hero of the air, Colonel Lindbergh pioneered and continues to pioneer. Whether in new territories or in new fields of thought, always searching for the truth, each one of these pioneers met the sneers and scoffs of his fellow men calmly. They were men—

In conscious virtue bold
Who dared their secret purpose hold
Unshaken heard the crowds' tumultous cries
  And the impetuous tyrant's angry brow defied.
Let the loud winds, that rule the seas
Tempestuous their wild horrors raise,
Let Jove's dread arm with thunder rend the spheres
Beneath the crash of worlds undaunted they appear.

[Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SEARS for 1 week, on account of important business.

A MILLION RAILROAD MEN FOR WAR REFERENDUM

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by the 21 railroad brotherhoods.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, in one of the most significant and dramatic labor movements of modern times the support of a million men has been placed back of House Joint Resolution No. 167, the constitutional war-referendum resolution, which is designed as a preventive of war. As the author of the resolution I am very grateful for their support.

The Railway Labor Executives' Association, which speaks directly for the 1,000,000 organized workingmen who are members of the 21 standard railroad brotherhoods and indirectly reflects the thought of millions of other workingmen, at a meeting in Washington decided to throw its united support back of House Joint Resolution No. 167 as a measure deemed urgently necessary to prevent America from being dragged into war at an early date through the machinations of propagandists of special interests, munition manufacturers, and professional war promoters.

In a communication which scathingly reviews the activities of the war promoters, and which is addressed to the Judiciary subcommittee which has been conducting hearings on the Ludlow resolution, the Railway Labor Executives' Association emphasizes the need of haste, and says:

> We urge that every effort be made to speed the final adoption of this resolution. This legislation is racing against the danger of war, and there is no time to spare.

The so-called "Ludlow amendment" provides that, except in the case of invasion or attack, war cannot be declared until the question is submitted to a Nation-wide referendum and a majority of the people of the country vote for war; also that in the event of war all war properties, munitions plants, and so forth, shall be taken over for use of the Government during the period of the emergency, thus removing the profit incentive to war.

In this crisis—for a world situation that reflects such obvious threats of an impending war is truly a crisis—labor of America is fortunate in having to represent it such an influential spokesman as the Railway Labor Executives' Association. This organization of railway employees, sometimes known as the "21 brotherhoods", is the most vital force in the labor movement today. It has initiative, courage, and fighting qualities that make it a tremendous force, not only for the advancement of the labor movement but for good citizenship in America. To it is due a large share of the credit for bringing about a betterment of social and living conditions among all workers, both union and nonunion. It has been unerring in its discernment of intolerable conditions affecting workers and quick and effective in finding the means of correction.

Its plans and purposes are made articulate through the most virile labor publication in the Western Hemisphere, the publication called "Labor", which is issued from the building owned by the Railway Labor Executives' Association at Delaware Avenue and B Streets SW., this city. Edward Keating, who directs that publication, is a forceful editor, a close student of public questions, a former liberal Member of Congress who has the commoner's viewpoint, and whose philosophy is fashioned on the Jeffersonian idea of equality among men.

AN ORGANIZATION THAT IS 100 PERCENT AMERICAN

The American Railway Labor Executives' Association is 100 percent American and it is for protecting the good, solid, honest American manhood from the tricks and schemes of the war promoters who stand convicted at the bar of public opinion of encouraging and promoting strife for the sake of filthy dollars.

The association believes that those who have to pay the awful costs of war and to do the suffering and dying should have something to say as to whether or not war shall be declared, and it is not willing that any American shall be ripped from his family and thrown into the hell of war just to protect somebody's investments, or to enable somebody to pile up fabulous profits. Seventeen years ago the association saw workingmen conscripted and thrust into the horrors of the trenches and battlefields of a foreign war at a dollar a day, while 23,000 swivel-chair patriots were being elevated into the class of millionaires at home. While it stands firmly for adequate defense, it does not propose that at any time hereafter, with its consent, the fine young manhood of America shall be sacrificed to fight a foreign war until the question has first been submitted to the people of America and approved by them by a majority vote. That is the sum and substance of the resolution I have introduced.

It goes the entire limit in permitting national defense, but it is opposed to foreign wars unless such wars have the sanction of a majority of Americans in a vote taken in the privacy of the ballot booths where the citizen can record the verdict of his conscience with no one to dictate or swerve him from his honest judgment. To that just and reasonable program the Railway Labor Executives' Association stands pledged with absolute unanimity.

TEXT OF RAILROAD MEN'S APPEAL

The statement adopted by the Railway Labor Executives' Association and presented to the Judiciary Committee by W. D. Johnson, vice president of the Order of Railway Conductors of America, one of the leaders of organized labor, is as follows:

The Railway Labor Executives' Association, representing the 1,000,000 railway workers of the United States, desires to place itself on record with your committee as being unqualifiedly in favor of the immediate passage by Congress, and the ratification by the several States, of the constitutional amendment proposed in House Joint Resolution No. 167.

Every thoughtful American who is at all informed on international affairs must feel that there is very grave danger of another war among European and Asiatic nations within the next few years. Ancient rivalries have been revived and hatreds have been heated again to the point where a minor incident may be enough to precipitate a conflict even more destructive than that of 1914–18. Political adventurers, military leaders, and those industrial interests which profit from wars and preparation for wars have stirred international animosities and brought about a situation which can be compared only to that preceding the Great War. The outbreak of hostilities may occur without warning.

We believe in preparedness, but of a kind directly the opposite of that which our own militarists advocate. We believe that our Government must be prepared to keep America out of the next war; we believe that the people of the United States must be prepared to resist those propagandists who will not hesitate to urge our participation in the holocaust toward which the world is moving. We believe that such preparations, if they are to be effective, must be made now before new warfare has created the atmosphere of panic and hysteria which permits professional patriots to drum up war sentiment. We believe that the constitutional amendment proposed in this resolution is patriotic preparation against European war. We believe that its adoption will keep America out of the general destruction threatening modern civilization.

The workers we represent, in common with all decent citizens of our country, have been sickened and disgusted by the revelations recently made of the activities and the profits of the peddlers of war munitions. Efforts sincerely made by governments desiring to limit armaments, and thereby to lessen the international suspicion which breeds wars, have been defeated by the incredibly brutal and vicious practices of these munition makers. Professional propagandists have collaborated in producing the state of mind among the peoples of the world which assures the widest sale of the implements of war. These munitions makers and their agents are creating their markets and selling their goods with no other thought in mind than securing for themselves the greatest possible profit.

The greed for profits was not lacking from American manufacturers before and during the World War. While American soldiers fought in the trenches to decide a European war whose issues were of no real concern to us, billions of dollars were being paid by our Government directly and through the financial agents of foreign governments to the manufacturers of munitions in the United States. The appalling sacrifices demanded of our soldiers and their families should have brought voluntary surrendering by our munitions manufacturers of all profits; they should have been eager to supply us and our Allies all possible munitions at actual cost. We know now that to the eternal disgrace of these interests they reaped profits which were far beyond any possible justification, which were possible only because of the desperate need of the Government and the people of the United States.

If European war comes again, there will be no lack of the same kind of destructive and unpatriotic action by our munitions manufacturers. Nothing has happened to make us believe they have changed their spots. There will be no lack of newspapers to give space to false reports of atrocities or to imaginary insults to our national honor. There will be plenty of skilled propagandists who will, for money, use all their arts to confuse and to mislead our people into believing that we should take up arms against some other nation. No sensible American whose memory runs back to the last war and who has followed the disclosures of the munitions investigation, can doubt that the munitions manufacturers will try to force this country into whatever war they can promote in Europe or Asia. No sensible American can fail to realize that war psychology can be created out of the lies and the oratory of the propagandists. No sensible American wants to see us in that next war.

The constitutional amendment that is proposed will prevent the sudden and ill-considered sort of action which might plunge us into war. The referendum will give time for thought and for countering the propaganda of those whose selfish interests would be served by war. More than that, the limitation of munitions profits would not only force upon munitions makers a decent restriction during war—it would also greatly reduce their interest in promoting American belligerency. This amendment, however, still permits speedy congressional action to defend the Nation against actual invasion.

We urge upon your committee that it report out favorably the resolution under consideration and that every effort be made to speed its final adoption. This legislation is racing against the danger of war and there is no time to spare.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial appearing in the Atlanta Constitution of June 24, 1935.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I should very much like to hear what the gentleman has to say, but under the conditions I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow morning after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the distinguished minority leader [Mr. SNELL] may have 1 hour to address the House and get in good humor.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2917. An act authorizing an appropriation to the American Legion for its use in effecting a settlement of the remainder due on, and the reorganization of, Pershing Hall, a memorial already erected in Paris, France, to the commander in chief, officers, and men of the expeditionary forces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 7205. An act to amend the Ship Mortgage Act, 1920, otherwise known as "section 30" of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, approved June 5, 1920, to allow the benefits of said act to be enjoyed by owners of certain vessels of the United States of less than 200 gross tons; and

H. R. 7652. An act to authorize the furnishing of steam from the central heating plant to the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on June 22, 1935, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7672. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), in compliance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 25, 1935, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, reporting, pursuant to law, that there is an accumulation of documents and papers on the files of the Administration which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. GLASS and Mr. HALE members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President of the United States to make ample provision for the encouragement of the artistic, cultural, humane, patriotic, and sentimental phases of our American national life in the Federal-works plan

Whereas the Congress of the United States has approved the appropriation of huge sums to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States in a comprehensive Federal works plan; and

Whereas the President of the United States has announced the tentative proportions of said sums as to their disbursement, which includes an amount allocated to so-called "white collar" workers; and

Whereas the State of California is taking steps and has made provisions for numerous enterprises which may be of general benefit because of their inspirational and educational value, such as fairs, expositions, conventions, industrial and housing exhibitions, and celebrations to mark high attainment in the world of construction and engineering; and

Whereas the State of California and several other of the sovereign States of our Union, are nearing the completion of certain such construction projects that bespeak the initiative and industry of our present generation, the accomplishment and achievement of which can be properly perpetuated as imperishable monuments, and fittingly recorded by employing the services of the white-collar workers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the President of the United States is hereby memorialized to make ample provision for the encouragement of the artistic, cultural, humane, patriotic, and sentimental phases of our American national life in the great Federal works plan by the employment of white-collar workers; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested, empowered and authorized to (1) transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the National Director of the Federal Work Relief Administration; and (2) designate and select the State department, official, agent, or director to initiate projects for the employment of white-collar workers to carry out the purpose of this resolution; and be it further

Resolved, That all departments of the State of California cooperate with the department designated by the Governor and aid in developing an appreciation of culture, beauty, science, history, arts, and achievement.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Resolution 34

Whereas the amount of imports of foreign starches has increased more than threefold since 1927; and

Whereas said foreign starches are produced by coolie labor under low standards of living, are imported into the United States duty free, and are not subject to a processing tax; and

Whereas the producers of starches in the United States have maintained a high wage level for their employees which conduced toward the high standards of living that control in this country; and

Whereas American-produced starches are subject to a processing tax; and

Whereas by reason of such unfair competition the output of starches by American manufacturers has been materially and substantially reduced with its resultant depressing effects upon the American workingman and farmer so as to cause unemployment, hunger, the lowering of the American standard of living, and the undermining of the morale of the people of this country; and

Whereas House bill No. 6961, introduced at the current session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, tends to mitigate, extenuate, and palliate the foregoing evils: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the fifty-ninth general assembly (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is respectfully memorialized and importuned to enact House bill No. 6961, now pending before it; and be it further

Resolved, That each Member of Congress from the State of Illinois is respectfully urged to lend his aid in support of this proposed legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this preamble and resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of Congress from the State of Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Alma Deas, dated at Miami, Fla., June 24, 1935, remonstrating against the confirmation, when and if nominated, of Fred Ewing to be postmaster at Hialeah, Fla., until investigation is made thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Managers of the New York Produce Exchange, favoring the amendment of section 557 of the Tariff Act of 1930, so as to delete from that section the words "or 10 months in the case of grain", thus extending to grain the same period of 3 years now afforded to merchandise in general to remain in bonded warehouse and to be exported without import duty, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the First Sekuraner Dr. Braunstein Progressive Society and Kletzker Young Men's Benevolent Association, both of New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of House bill 8163, known as the "Kerr bill", pertaining to the immigration of aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of several citizens of New Rochelle, N. Y., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 600, to amend sections 211, 245, and 312 of the Criminal Code, as amended, pertaining to the dissemination of contraceptive information and supplies, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TAXATION OF THE FUR INDUSTRY

Mr. COPELAND presented a letter from N. Taylor Phillips, Esq., attorney and counselor at law, New York City, N. Y., submitting a suggested plan of method of taxing the fur industry, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, June 21, 1935.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR COPELAND: As you are of course aware, there is now being considered House Joint Resolution 324 to extend the so-called "nuisance taxes" for another year.

The furriers in this State are interested in recasting the fur tax in a manner which will produce more revenue for the Government, be more easily and positively collected, and with far less expense of collection.

There is under the present law an exemption on furs costing up to $75 which has been extremely injurious to the trade and has made tax evasion wide-spread to the injury of legitimate dealers.

The intention is now to tax all furs as they come into the hands of the dyers and dressers. As there are comparatively few of these in the country and all furs must be dyed and dressed, nothing can escape tax.

This plan, known as the "Canadian plan" has been in successful operation in Canada. I understand that Senator POPE will offer an amendment covering this matter when it reaches the floor of the Senate.

After reading the enclosed memorandum on this subject, if you feel that it justifies the foregoing statements in respect of this matter, I will very much appreciate any consideration and any assistance which you may find possible to extend.

With very kindest regards, believe me, as always,

Faithfully yours,

N. TAYLOR PHILLIPS.

SUBSTITUTE TAX PLAN

SECTION A—EXPLANATION OF THE PLAN—SUGGESTED METHOD OF TAXING THE FUR INDUSTRY

Which will produce the following results:

1. Greater gross income to the Government.
2. A very much smaller cost of collection to the Government.
3. Entire elimination of circumvention.

The fur industry has in it about 5,000 wholesale manufacturers; about 2,000 retail manufacturing furriers; 8,000 department stores and specialty shops which sell furs; an indeterminate number of so called "bedroom" or "garret" fur manufacturers; and, lastly, a great many thousands of cloak and suit manufacturers—in all, well over 20,000 sources to whom the Government should look for taxes in order to put everyone in the industry on an equal basis.

It is unnecessary to go over all of the evils of the present system of taxation. The Government is fully aware of the circumvention and evasion, and fully aware of the difficulty of getting any reasonable percentage of the money which is due it.

There is about $75,000,000 worth of raw furs consumed in the fur trade. In order to convert these furs into fur garments or fur trimmings these furs must be dressed and/or dyed. The dressing and dyeing industry amounts to about $15,000,000. These services are rendered by 180 companies. Ninety percent of all dressing and dyeing of furs is done within a radius of 50 miles from Forty-second Street and Broadway. Twenty-five percent of the total dressing and dyeing charges is billed by one company. There are 1,500 firms of all types which do business with dressers and dyers.

The total value of all dressed and dyed furs used in this country amounts to approximately $90,000,000; that is, $75,000,000 plus $15,000,000 for dressing and dyeing.

The foregoing information is presented so that the following plan can better be understood.

Every raw fur, whether it be domestic or an imported skin, whether it be a rabbit or a chinchilla, must pass through the hands of a fur dresser. As stated previously, there are 180 fur dressers and/or dyers. When an owner of raw skins, whether he be a fur merchant, a retailer or a fur manufacturer, or a cloak and suit manufacturer sends his skins to a dresser, it is proposed that he fill out a Government form which states the market value of the shipment. That form accompanies the shipment to the dresser and/or dyer. Upon completion of the work, the dresser sends to the Government, on a Government form, a statement indicating the value of the raw skins, plus the dressing charges. The Government then has in its files a direct check upon the 1,500 customers of the fur dressers and dyers, and knows exactly where its tax money is.

Now let us get back to the three statements which we made at the beginning of this memorandum:

1. GREATER GROSS INCOME TO THE GOVERNMENT

A tax of 3 percent on dressed and/or dyed furs would yield $2,700,000. Our belief is, however, that there will be a decided improvement in the entire fur business after the stifling effects of the present tax is removed. The present tax will yield very little more than $2,500,000. The proposed tax will yield nearer $3,000,000.

2. A VERY MUCH SMALLER COST OF COLLECTION TO THE GOVERNMENT

The Government will collect its tax from approximately 1,500 known sources, backed by actual records, with an accurate method of checking it. The cost of collection should be appreciably lower.

The Treasury Department, however, is better qualified to judge this phase of the subjet.

3. ENTIRE ELIMINATION OF CIRCUMVENTION

Circumvention of any nature is practically impossible. As stated before, the Government will collect its revenue from 1,500 known sources. We have given consideration to the possibility of undervaluation. There is no great possibility of anyone attempting to do this. There are four reasons why it would be foolhardy for an owner of the skins to engage in undervaluation. Let us assume that Mr. Owner sends a dresser $1,000 worth of muskrats. In order to reduce his taxes, he values these muskrats at $500. Here is where the four reasons come in:

1. If a fire takes place in the dresser's plant, he would get but $500.
2. If a robbery took place, he would get but $500.
3. If the dresser spoiled his merchandise—which is something that takes place every day in the week—he would get but $500.

4. And, lastly, the Government can always ask Mr. Owner to show a purchase bill.

It is suggested that this tax law state that it shall be necessary for the owner of the skins to fill out the raw-fur valuation form, and that the dresser and the dyer transmit to the Government filled-out Government forms which will indicate the value of the processed furs.

It is important to point out that this type of tax does not hit back at the farmer. The farmer does not send in the skins to be dressed and dyed. Of the 2,000,000 American farmer-trappers, not 200 send in their skins to the dresser and dyer. The farmer-trapper sends his skins primarily to so-called "receiving houses." These receiving houses sell the skins to various trade factors, and it is these trade factors who send in their skins to the dresser and dyer.

I feel that this point should be emphatically made, so that there can be no possible misapprehension. This type of tax is entirely a tax on the entire fur trade. Unlike the present tax, which is actually paid many times over by the farmer-trapper, the type of tax I am suggesting will do two things:

1. It will completely free the farmer-trapper from paying any fur tax whatsoever.

2. It will so improve conditions in the fur industry that the industry will be able to pay better prices for the pelts which the farmer-trapper sells.

Another point I want to emphasize in connection with the type of tax I am suggesting is that the tax is not levied against any one factor in the fur industry. To the contrary, it will be paid directly or indirectly by the entire fur trade in such a manner that the tax burden will be absolutely equally distributed. After all, the pelt is the basis of the fur industry. Everything revolves around the skin. Under the type of taxation which I am suggesting the tax becomes part and parcel of the price of the pelt. Therefore everybody who handles the pelt from the time it is sent in to be dressed and dyed up until the time the finished garment is sold by the retail store will share in the tax burden. This would seem to be the goal to be aimed for, inasmuch as the tax is designed to be a tax on furs and not on any one branch of the fur industry.

IMPORTED DRESSED AND DYED FURS

Customs officials would simply charge 3 percent at the point of entry.

SECTION B—PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE TAX ON THE PRIVILEGE OF DRESSING OR DYEING FURS

SECTION 1—IMPOSITION

There are hereby imposed upon the dressing or dyeing of furs on or after the date of the enactment of this act the following taxes:

1. Upon the dressing of raw furs a tax equivalent to 3 percent of the value of the furs immediately before dressing plus a fair charge for their dressing, to be paid by the owner of the furs whether they are dressed by him or by another on his behalf.

2. Upon the dyeing of dressed furs a tax equivalent to 3 percent of a fair charge for their dyeing, to be paid by the owner of the furs whether they are dyed by him or by another on his behalf.

(NOTE.—The tax is presented in a double aspect, because furs are not always dyed at the time they are dressed. The question of what should be done in the case of furs which are dressed and dyed before importation into the United States is left open.)

The provisions of this act are not to apply to trappers or other individuals who dress furs which they have trapped for their personal use.

SECTION 2—RETURNS

Every person liable for a tax under this act shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay such taxes to the collector for the district in which is located his principal place of business, or, if he has no principal place of business in the United States, then to the collector at Baltimore, Md. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe. The Commissioner may extend the time for making returns and paying the taxes under this act, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary, but no such extension shall be for more than 6 months.

(NOTE.—Since no cash may be available to the owner of furs at the time they are dressed or dyed, the Commissioner should have broad power to extend the time for payment of the tax in necessitous cases.)

SECTION 3—DECLARATION OF VALUE AND REPORTS

In every case where raw furs are dressed by a person other than the owner thereof, the owner shall by a statement in writing, to be delivered to the dresser before the furs are dressed, declare the fair value of the raw furs. Every person dressing furs of which he is not the owner shall make monthly reports with respect to the furs dressed by him each month, including the value of the raw furs as estimated by the dresser, the value of the raw furs as declared by the owner, the charge made or to be made for dressing, and, if the furs are also dyed, the charge made or to be made for dyeing. These monthly reports shall contain such additional information and shall be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

SECTION 4—PAYMENT OF TAXES

The taxes imposed by this act shall, without assessment by the Commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of one-half percent a month from the time the tax became due until paid.

SECTION 5—REGULATIONS

The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe and publish all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act.

SECTION 6—CREDITS AND REFUNDS

Credit or refund of any overpayment of tax imposed by this act shall be allowed or made only upon compliance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In no case shall interest be allowed with respect to any amount of tax under this act credited or refunded.

SECTION 7—APPLICABILITY OF ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1926, shall, insofar as they may be applied and are not inconsistent with this act, be applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by this act.

SECTION 8—DEFINITIONS

When used in this act—

(1) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(2) The term "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

(3) The term "collector" means collector of internal revenue.

SECTION 9—APPLICABILITY OF PRIOR TAX

The taxes imposed by this act shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by section 604 of the Revenue Act of 1932, which shall not apply to articles sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer after the date of the enactment of this act.

SECTION C—LEGAL SUPPORT FOR THE PROPOSED BILL—ITS CONSTITUTIONALITY

There can be no question that such a tax would not be a direct tax on property or its ownership and thus subject to the rule of apportionment, but would be a valid excise tax on the particular privilege of dressing or dyeing furs, even though there may be some doubt whether it would be excisable to the dresser or dyer who did not own the furs. But note the proposal is to make the owner of the furs the taxpayer.

Bromley v. McCaughn (280 U. S. 124) and the authorities cited by Justice Stone in that case establish the validity of the proposed tax. As Justice Stone said in the Bromley case, "While taxes levied upon or collected from persons because of their general ownership of property may be taken to be direct, this Court has consistently held, almost from the foundation of the Government, that a tax imposed upon a particular use of property or the exercise of a single power of property incidental to ownership is an excise which need not be apportioned." Since taxes on the right to give property (Bromley v. McCaughn, supra) to dispose of property by legacy (Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41), to manufacture and sell colored oleomargarine (McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27), to sell grain upon a commodity exchange (Nicol v. Ames, 173 U. S. 509), to sell shares of stock (Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363), to use foreign-built yachts (Billings v. U. S., 232 U. S. 261), to use carriages (Hylton v. U. S., 3 Dall. 171), to use certain manufactured articles (sec. 622, Revenue Act of 1932), to process agricultural commodities (sec. 9, Agricultural Adjustment Act) are valid excises, certainly there can be no doubt of the validity of an excise tax imposed upon the owner of furs for the privilege of dressing and dyeing them or having them dressed and dyed for him by another.

UNCONSTITUTIONALITY OF TARIFF BARGAINING ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Finance Committee is to take up the general question of tariff and tax legislation, and open the general field, I am expressing the hope that some attention may be given to Senate Resolution 145, which calls attention to the alleged unconstitutionality of the Tariff Bargaining Act, and I submit a letter from Judge Thomas D. Thacher, ex-Solicitor General of the United States, in which the following sentence occurs in connection with his very well-sustained opinion:

> Upon the principles laid down in the oil and poultry cases the act clearly appears to be an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to the President.

I ask that this letter be referred to the Finance Committee and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SIMPSON THACHER & BARTLETT,
New York, June 22, 1935.

HON. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of June 10, 1935, in which you have requested an expression of my views upon the resolution which you introduced in the Senate declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that the tariff-bargaining law is clearly unconstitutional. The law to which your resolution refers is entitled "An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930", approved June 12, 1934 (Public, No. 316, 73d Cong.). The President at a recent press conference has declared that the law is clearly constitutional, and the Secretary of State has made a public statement to the effect that no one will seriously question the constitutionality of the law. These expressions of opinion from such authoritative sources are entitled to great respect, and I have delayed answering your letter in order to give you a considered opinion.

The act of June 12, 1934, adds to the Tariff Act of 1930 the following:

"SEC. 350. (a) For the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States (as a means of assisting in the present emergency in restoring the American standard of living, in overcoming domestic unemployment and the present economic depression, in increasing the purchasing power of the American public, and in establishing and maintaining a better relationship among the various branches of American agriculture, industry, mining, and commerce) by regulating the admission of foreign goods into the United States in accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production so that foreign markets will be made available to those branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States, the President, whenever he finds as a fact that any existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or any foreign country are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the means hereinafter specified, is authorized from time to time—

"(1) To enter into foreign trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof; and

"(2) To proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions, or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, or for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign trade agreements, as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder. No proclamation shall be made increasing or decreasing by more than 50 percent any existing rate of duty or transferring any article between the dutiable and free lists. The proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall apply to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of all foreign countries, whether imported directly or indirectly: Provided, That the President may suspend the application to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any country because of its discriminatory treatment of American commerce or because of other acts or policies which in his opinion tend to defeat the purposes set forth in this section; and the proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall be in effect from and after such time as is specified in the proclamation. The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part."

The act also provides:

"SEC. 4. Before any foreign-trade agreement is concluded with any foreign government or instrumentality thereof under the provisions of this act, reasonable public notice of the intention to negotiate an agreement with such government or instrumentality shall be given, in order that any interested person may have an opportunity to present his views to the President, or to such agency as the President may designate, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe; and before concluding such agreement the President shall seek information and advice with respect thereto from the United States Tariff Commission, the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, and from such other sources as he may deem appropriate."

The act contains other provisions not pertinent to the question of constitutionality.

The question presented is whether Congress has delegated to the President legislative power without adequately providing standards to guide and control his unfettered discretion. In considering this question it is important to bear in mind the nature of the legislative power which Congress has attempted to delegate to the President. The legislative power to lay duties, although embraced by the taxing power, may nevertheless be exercised as a regulation of foreign commerce. It may not be questioned that Congress may exercise this power by laying duties to encourage the industries of the United States, and to this end may determine what articles may be imported into this country and the terms under which such importation is permitted. This power is exclusive and plenary, and Congress may, and undoubtedly does, in its tariff legislation consider the conditions of foreign trade in all its aspects and effects, including its effects upon the commercial and industrial welfare of the United States. These principles, long the subject of political controversy, were finally settled by the Supreme Court in Board of Trustees v. United States (289 U. S. 48).

The act of June 12, 1934, was enacted in the exercise of this plenary power of Congress to regulate foreign commerce. This is its declared purpose, to be accomplished by expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States and corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States. To this end the President is authorized to enter into foreign trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof and, having made such agreements, by proclamation to increase or decrease existing duties or other import restrictions as are required or appropriate to carry out any such agreement. The duties and other import restrictions proclaimed by the President apply to articles of growth, produce, and manufacture of all foreign countries, not merely of those countries with which such agreements are made. Having proclaimed such duties and restrictions, the President may immediately suspend their application to the products of any country "because of its discriminatory treatment of American commerce or because of other acts or policies which in his opinion tend to defeat the purposes set forth in this section." The only standard prescribed for the exercise of these plenary legislative powers thus delegated to the President is that he must find as a fact, before entering into any trade agreement or proclaiming any change in duties or import restrictions, that the existing duties or restrictions of the United States or of any foreign country "are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the declared purpose of the statute will be promoted" by the proposed trade agreement or the proclaimed change in duties or other import restrictions. It is further provided that no proclamation shall be made increasing or decreasing by more than 50 percent any existing rate of duty or transferring any article between the dutiable and free lists.

In Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan (293 U. S. 388) and in A. L. Schechter Poultry Corp'n v. United States (55 Sup. Ct. 837) the Supreme Court of the United States has recently declared section 9 and section 3 of the National Industrial Recovery Act invalid because of the unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to the President; and the Court has twice declared:

"Congress cannot delegate legislative power to the President to exercise an unfettered discretion to make whatever laws he thinks may be needed or advisable for the rehabilitation and expansion of trade or industry."

In the poultry case it was held that a finding that the general purposes of the statute would be promoted by the President's exercise of legislative power was not a finding of fact but was a mere expression of opinion, leaving him free to exercise his discretion as he saw fit. This principle applies to section 350 (a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 as amended.

The only other condition precedent to Presidential action is that he shall find that any existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or of any foreign country are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States. The statute does not relate the agreement to be made to particular duties or restrictions; nor does it relate the duties and restrictions to be proclaimed to existing duties and restrictions found to be unduly burdensome and restrictive. In the first instance it relates the duties and restrictions to be proclaimed to trade agreements which have been made with foreign countries by the President, but these duties and restrictions are applicable to imports from all countries unless the President suspends their application, and this he may do because of acts or policies of any country which tend to defeat the general purposes of the act. In thus suspending the duties and restrictions with relation to a particular country the President's discretion is absolutely unfettered and uncontrolled except by his own opinion as to what "may be needed or advisable for the rehabilitation and expansion of trade or industry" (Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, supra).

Upon the principles laid down in the oil and poultry cases the act clearly appears to be an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to the President. It is necessary, however, to consider legislation of Congress which has in the past delegated to the President the power to suspend, increase, and decrease customs duties. A summary of this legislation appears in Norwegian Nitrogen Co. v. United States (288 U. S. 294, at pp. 308–309). Such legislation was under consideration by the Supreme Court in Hampton & Co. v. United States (276 U. S. 394) and Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649), and while in each of these cases the particular delegation of power was sustained as constitutional, the principles upon which such delegations of power must be tested were fully developed and defined by the Court, and these principles controlled decision in the oil and poultry cases.

The principles were recently applied by former Attorney General William D. Mitchell in an opinion rendered to the President under date of February 14, 1933 (77 Opinions of Attorney General, 70), in holding that a section of a bill passed by the Philippine Legislature was invalid as an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. The bill (H. 2516, 2d sess. of the 9th Philippine Legislature) contained the following provision:

"SEC. 6. The Governor General, upon recommendation of the Philippine Tariff Commission which may be created by law, or by the Secretary of Finance, in case no such commission is created, whenever in his judgment conditions in the Philippine Islands warrant it, may, from time to time, by proclamation, reduce or reincrease the duty on each or all of the articles herein enumerated: Provided, That no reduction shall be made to less than 50 percent of, nor reincrease shall be made to more than, the rates imposed by the Philippine Tariff Act of 1909, as amended by this and other acts."

Characterizing this section, the Attorney General said:

"It attempts to vest in the Governor General discretion to reduce or increase duties 'whenever in his judgment conditions in the Philippine Islands warrant it.' It places limits on the amount of the reductions or increases, but within those limits it attempts to confer upon him absolute discretion. The fault with this provision of the bill is that it prescribes no rule or principle on which the Governor General may act. It does not confine his discretion to prescribed matters of fact or to the weight of evidence. The applicable principles have been stated in many decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States."

Analyzing the decisions of the Supreme Court in Field v. Clark, supra, and Hampton & Co. v. United States, supra, the Attorney General pointed out that in the former case the tariff act provided that if the President was satisfied that the government of any other country imposed duties upon agricultural or other products of the United States which "he may deem to be reciprocally unequal or unreasonable" he should have the power to suspend the provisions of the act relating to the free induction of certain commodities into the United States, in which case certain tariffs prescribed in the act of Congress should become applicable. The President's action, the Court found, was to be determined upon the basis of findings with respect to the commercial regulations of other countries, and nothing involving the expediency of the legislation was left to his determination. In other words, he was the mere agent of the lawmaking department, to ascertain the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. The Attorney General then pointed out that in Hampton & Co. v. United States, supra, the President's action was made determinable by his findings on the question whether the duties fixed in the act equalized the differences in cost of production in the United States and the principal competing country with respect to a given article. The opinion of the Attorney General continued:

"In both these cases the Court sustained the validity of the statutes under consideration, but the principles on which those decisions were based point clearly to the invalidity of section 6 of the act of the Philippine Legislature above quoted. There is a wide difference between the flexible tariff provisions in the Tariff Act of 1922 and section 6 of this act. The Philippine Legislature has not laid down any principle on which the Governor General shall act. It has not confined itself to delegating to him the power to investigate and determine facts on which the application of the law is to depend. Giving to the President power to adjust our tariff duties to equalize the differences he may find to exist between the costs of production at home and abroad is quite different from the attempt of the Philippine Legislature to give to the Governor General power to change the Philippine tariffs without any guide as to his action other than that found in the phrase 'whenever in his judgment conditions in the Philippine Islands warrant it.' It is evident that the Philippine Legislature has gone too far in its attempt to confer authority on the Governor General to change tariff rates and that section 6 of this bill is in conflict with the fundamental provisions of the Organic Act (39 Stat. 545), and if approved by you and placed upon the statute books would not constitute a valid enactment."

Under the provisions of section 350 (a) the President's authority, through the exercise of his tariff-bargaining power with all the nations of the world, to revise duties and restrictions upon imports within the 50-percent limit prescribed by the statute appears to be absolutely unfettered and uncontrolled by any standard considered and adopted by Congress in the exercise of its power to prescribe the legislative policy which must guide executive action. The phrases "unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States"; "that the purposes above declared will be promoted", and "because of other acts or policies which in his opinion tend to defeat the purposes set forth in this section", do not in any sense bind or control the exercise of the power attempted to be delegated by this statute. The modification of tariff schedules and restrictive provisions need not be related to the action of any country, to the condition of any particular trade or industry, to the discriminatory or retaliatory legislation of any particular country, or to any particular facts, except the making of a trade agreement with a single country. Indeed, if the President finds it desirable to expand our foreign markets through concessions granted by a foreign government and to open our domestic markets by concessions given in exchange, he may revise the tariff schedules without regard to costs of production here and abroad or the resulting effects upon particular industries in this country. No such unfettered delegation of legislative powers appears in any of the tariff acts, and upon the principles repeatedly declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, I am of the opinion that the statute is unconstitutional.

I have not considered the statute in its relation to the treaty-making power. Reciprocal tariff arrangements were made by the President, by means of an exchange of diplomatic notes, after the enactment of the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890, but I am not familiar with this correspondence. Furthermore, after the passage of the Dingley Act of 1897 the President negotiated and promulgated a number of reciprocity agreements. I am not familiar with these agreements, and do not know whether or not they were approved, either by Congress or by the Senate.

Faithfully yours,

THOMAS D. THACHER.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD a telegram I have received from Mr. Robert H. Wheeler, vice president of the Newark (N. J.) Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEWARK, N. J., June 24, 1935.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Capitol, Washington, D. C.:

May we respectfully state that the fact cannot be ignored that it is imperative that the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill be passed before adjournment? More than 73,000,000 of our citizens have, either directly or indirectly, requested the Congress of the United States to pass a Federal law to curb lynching and mob rule. In order that the pages of history yet to be written may not record this country as a barbarian nation, may we implore you not to delay the passage of such important legislation?

Respectfully,

EXECUTIVE BOARD NEWARK BRANCH, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE, ROBERT H. WHEELER, Vice President.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BACHMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2704) for the relief of Clayton M. Thomas, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 956) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2877) to reimpose and extend the trust period on lands reserved for the Pala Band of Mission Indians, California, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 957) thereon.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted minority views to accompany the bill (S. 1632) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by water carriers operating in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, heretofore reported from that committee with amendments, which was ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 925.

INSPECTION OF NAVY YARDS, ETC.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 161) authorizing the inspection of United States navy yards, air stations, and other naval activities, reported it without amendment, submitted a report (No. 955) thereon, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 3145) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Sgt. Samuel Woodfill a captain in the United States Army and then place him on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3146) to provide for the use of the U. S. S. Oregon as a memorial to the men and women who served the United States in the War with Spain; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 3147) for the relief of the Clark Dredging Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 3148) for the relief of the heirs of Lewis G. Norton; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3149) providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida at Fort Pierce, Fla.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 3150) to levy an excise tax upon carriers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 3151) to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

(Mr. WAGNER also introduced Senate bill 3152, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and appears under a separate heading.)

COMPENSATION TO EMPLOYEES OF INTERSTATE CARRIERS FOR DISABILITY OR DEATH

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I ask also, so that I may not take the time of the Senate at this juncture, that there be printed as a part of my remarks in introducing the bill an explanatory statement of the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred, as requested, and the Senator's statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3152) to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees of interstate carriers, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The statement by Mr. WAGNER is as follows:

This legislation is introduced for the purpose of extending the principle of workmen's compensation for industrial accidents to the most important group of workers remaining without this modern protection—employees of interstate commerce carriers.

In 1912 a congressional committee, after 2 years' exhaustive investigation, reported voluminously in favor of a Federal workmen's compensation law for employees injured in interstate commerce. The bill was passed by both Houses of Congress, but because of differing provisions which were not adjusted, failed to become law.

Meanwhile, State after State has discarded the outgrown system of employers' liability suits for damages, and Congress has adopted three workmen's compensation laws: In 1916 for civilian employees of the Government, in 1927 for longshoremen and harbor workers, and in 1928 for private employees in the District of Columbia. Workmen's compensation, which is now adopted in this country in all but two States, has been demonstrated to be for the best interests of workers, employers, and the whole community. But interstate commerce employees are still subject to the antiquated system of employers' liability under the Federal act of 1908.

The late Chief Justice Taft, in an address before the American Law Institute on May 9, 1929, said:

"A good many years ago it was attempted in Congress to provide a workmen's compensation act, or what was equivalent to it, with reference to that great body of men whose lives are constantly at stake in the operation of the transportation systems of this country. We in the Supreme Court, and all judges who have to do with the active conduct of litigation, realize the amount of time that is taken up in litigation of that kind, and also realize how much has been saved to the courts of the country by workmen's compensation acts. But we have no such system in the Federal courts. We need it.

"I hope that in the study of negligence, which I understand is going on, you may stop for a moment and look over to the kindred subject of how insurance against injury, disaster, and death of railroad employees can be carried on under the Constitution by Congress. If you will look back, as we can, to the years since those Federal bills were initiated and think how much time might have been saved and how much real good could have been done by introducing what is practically a system of general insurance to save lives and limbs—and women and widows by means of sustenance after the death of the breadwinner—I think you will feel stirred to a movement of that sort."

On May 6, 1935, the United States Supreme Court, in the majority opinion in the case of Railroad Retirement Board v. The Alton Railroad Co., invalidating the Railroad Retirement Act, said:

"Every carrier owes to its employees certain duties the disregard of which render it liable at common law in an action sounding in tort. Each State has developed or adopted, as part of its jurisprudence, rules as to the employer's liability in particular circumstances. These are not the same in all the States. In the absence of a rule applicable to all engaged in interstate transportation, the right of recovery for injury or death of an employee may vary, depending upon the applicable State law.

"That Congress may, under the commerce power, prescribe a uniform rule of liability and a remedy uniformly available to all those so engaged is not open to doubt. The considerations upon which we have sustained compulsory workmen's compensation laws passed by the States in the sphere where their jurisdiction is exclusive apply with equal force in any sphere wherein Congress has been granted paramount authority. Such authority it may assert whenever its exercise is appropriate to the purpose of the grant.

"A case in point is the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, passed pursuant to the delegation of admiralty jurisdiction to the United States. Modern industry, and this is particularly true of railroads, involves instrumentalities, tasks, and dangers unknown when the doctrines of the common law as to negligence were developing. The resultant injuries to employees, impossible of prevention by the utmost care, may well demand new and different redress than that afforded in the past.

"In dealing with the situation it is permissible to substitute a new remedy for the common-law right of action; to deprive the employer of common-law defenses and substitute a fixed and reasonable compensation computed to the degree of injury; to replace uncertainty and protracted litigation with certainty and celerity of payment; to eliminate waste and to make the rule of compensation uniform throughout the field of interstate transportation, in contrast with inconsistent local systems.

"By the very certainty that compensation must be paid for every injury such legislation promotes and encourages precaution on the part of the employer against accident and tends to make transportation safer and more efficient. The power to prescribe a uniform rule for the transportation industry throughout the country justified the modification of common-law rules by the safety-appliance acts applicable to interstate carriers and would serve to sustain compensation acts of a broader scope, like those in force in many States. The collateral fact that such a law may produce contentment among employees, an object which as a separate and independent matter is wholly beyond the power of Congress—would not, of course, render the legislation unconstitutional. It is beside the point that compensation would have to be paid despite the fact that the carrier has performed its contract with its employee and has paid the agreed wages. Liability in tort is imposed without regard to such considerations; and in view of the risks of modern industry the substituted liability for compensation likewise disregards them.

"Workmen's compensation laws deal with existing rights and liabilities by readjusting old benefits and burdens incident to the relation of employer and employee. Before their adoption the employer was bound to provide a fund to answer the lawful claims of his employees; the change is merely in the required disbursement of that fund in consequence of the recognition that the industry should compensate for injuries occurring with or without fault."

From the general welfare angle this problem has been discussed from time to time during the 23 years since Congress first attempted to pass legislation on the subject. At a joint meeting of representatives of railway operators and railway unions at Chicago in January 1932 steps were taken looking toward the earnest consideration of action by Congress on a Federal workmen's compensation law for employees of interstate commerce carriers. Looking toward more adequately meeting the hazard of industrial accidents, the committee on economic security, in its report to the President on January 15 of this year, recommended that an accident compensation act for railroad employees be adopted.

The present bill was first introduced by me as S. 4927 in the first session of the Seventy-second Congress on June 23, 1932, and was reintroduced as S. 3630 in the second session of the Seventy-third Congress on May 17, 1934, and again as S. 2793 on May 7, 1935. Following each introduction, it has been widely distributed for criticism and suggestions among experienced administrators of compensation laws and among the representative organizations of the two principal interests to be affected by this legislation. The bill in its present form embodies several improvements suggested by the comments thus received.

The bill appropriately follows somewhat closely the existing well-tested Federal Longshoremen's Act of 1927, which was designed to meet a similar administrative problem where private employees under Federal jurisdiction are scattered throughout the country. The bill applies to workers employed by carriers of interstate commerce, including railroads, express and sleeping-car companies, and any person operating a vehicle or airplane on a regular route. It provides for all necessary medical care and, after a 3-day noncompensated waiting period, for cash compensation based on two-thirds of wages.

The proposed act is to be administered by a representative commission of three members appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Deputy commissioners in important centers, under the unifying supervision of the commission, will do the actual day-by-day work of hearing claims and awarding compensation. Appeals on questions of law from the decision of the deputy will be taken to the Federal district court, as under the Longshoremen's Compensation Act adopted by Congress in 1927.

Special provision is made for accident-prevention work and for the rehabilitation of disabled workers. Employers are, of course, required to insure the payment of compensation, and administrative expenses are assessed upon insurance carriers, including self-insurers, as is done in New York and a number of other States, including Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, New Jersey, North Carolina, Texas, and Virginia. The inadequacies and evils of the existing system of employers' liability for interstate-commerce workers indicate the necessity for modern legislation to meet present-day needs which will effectively and adequately protect all interstate-commerce carriers' employees who are injured in the course of their employment. Such legislation can be worked out to the advantage of employers and employees and will at the same time relieve the public of the various expenses growing out of litigation.

EXTENSION OF TEMPORARY DEPOSIT INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. GLASS introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance provided for by section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GLASS subsequently, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported Senate Joint Resolution 152 without amendment.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES—AMENDMENT

Mr. MURRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3047) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright", approved March 4, 1909, as amended, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BLACK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8554, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 45, after line 20, to insert a new paragraph as follows:

Cemeterial expenses, War Department 1935: For the procurement of 10,000 additional headstones of the same kind as those now being purchased (but over and above the appropriation in the War Department appropriation bill of 1936, nonmilitary activities, which will permit the purchase of 25,906 headstones in the next ensuing fiscal year), there is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, the sum of $90,300.

"A PLANNED ECONOMY FOR WALL STREET" (S. DOC. NO. 81)

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document an article by Mr. Charles H. Meyer, of the New York Bar, entitled "A Planned Economy for Wall Street." Mr. Meyer discusses very clearly some features of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and other legislation. The article is pertinent and enlightening, and ably presents the matters discussed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PENSIONS FOR NEEDY BLIND PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT—RECONSIDERATION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday the bill (H. R. 5711) to provide pensions for needy blind persons of the District of Columbia and authorizing appropriations therefore was passed. I think it has not as yet been messaged to the House. I have discovered—and my attention was brought to the matter by the author of the bill, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania—that in view of the social-security bill which was passed some days ago an amendment will be necessary. Therefore I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the vote by which the bill referred to by him was passed be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, with the request should be coupled a further request, in accordance with the consent granted last evening, to commence the consideration of the calendar with Order of Business No. 839.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that such an agreement was entered into last evening, to begin the consideration of the calendar where it was left off yesterday.

Mr. ROBINSON. The agreement was that when we next proceeded with the call of the calendar for unobjected bills the call should commence with the number where we left off yesterday.

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now I ask that we proceed with the call of the calendar under that order.

Mr. McNARY. That is just what I was suggesting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	La Follette	Pope
Ashurst	Copeland	Logan	Radcliffe
Austin	Costigan	Lonergan	Reynolds
Bachman	Dickinson	Long	Robinson
Bailey	Dieterich	McAdoo	Russell
Bankhead	Donahey	McCarran	Schall
Barbour	Duffy	McGill	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard
Bilbo	Frazier	McNary	Shipstead
Black	George	Maloney	Smith
Bone	Gerry	Metcalf	Steiwer
Borah	Glass	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gore	Moore	Townsend
Bulkley	Guffey	Murphy	Trammell
Bulow	Hale	Murray	Truman
Burke	Harrison	Neely	Tydings
Byrd	Hatch	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Caraway	Holt	Nye	Wagner
Chavez	Johnson	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Keyes	Overton	Wheeler
Connally	King	Pittman	White

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is detained from the Senate on important public business.

Mr. DIETERICH. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is detained by important public business in Illinois.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has been called from the city because of the death of one of his associates. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is absent because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on June 24, 1935, the President had approved and signed the following acts:

S. 1585. An act for the relief of Stefano Talanco and Edith Talanco;

S. 1611. An act to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va.;

S. 1809. An act for the relief of Germaine M. Finley;

S. 1863. An act for the relief of Trifune Korac;

S. 2218. An act for the relief of Elsie Segar;

S. 2278. An act authorizing the construction of buildings for the United States representative in the Philippine Islands;

S. 2371. An act for the relief of Margaret G. Baldwin; and

S. 2508. An act to authorize the naturalization of certain resident alien World War veterans.

EXTENSION OF TEMPORARY DEPOSIT INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, at the time I asked for the unanimous-consent order under which the Senate is now proceeding the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was about to submit a request pertaining to Senate Joint Resolution 152 to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance provided for by section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended. I should like to ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Virginia may present that joint resolution and have it now considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Virginia be permitted to submit a joint resolution and that it be taken up for consideration at the present time. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire has the Banking and Currency Committee passed on the joint resolution unanimously?

Mr. GLASS. It is reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McNARY. Has it been considered at length?

Mr. GLASS. It has been considered both by the subcommittee which has Federal Reserve legislation in charge and by the full committee, and by both I was authorized to report the joint resolution to the Senate and ask for immediate action upon it.

Mr. McNARY. When does the act expire?

Mr. GLASS. It expires next Saturday night.

Mr. McNARY. That is the emergent situation which it is desired to meet by the passage of the joint resolution?

Mr. GLASS. That is the emergency which it is desired to meet by the passage of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GLASS subsequently said: Mr. President, I renew my request for unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution reported from the Banking and Currency Committee to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance provided for by section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, earlier in the day, when the matter was brought to the attention of the Senate, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] registered objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to permit me to make a brief statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McNARY. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I came into the Chamber just as the Senator from Virginia was asking unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution postponing for a full year the taking effect of the existing statute regarding the guaranty of bank deposits. I had strongly the feeling that to continue the suspension of the operation of this permanent act for 1 year would be tantamount to an admission upon the part of the Senate, at least, that it did not contemplate action upon the remaining titles of the bank bill which is pending in the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Since interposing that objection, however, I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], and other Senators who are members of the committee; and, after receiving full assurance that the measure referred to is going to receive action, and will be reported to the Senate in due course and without unnecessary delay, I have decided to withdraw my objection to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to extend for 1 year the temporary plan for deposit insurance provided for by section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended (1) by striking out "July 1, 1935" wherever it appears in subsections (e), (l), and (y), and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1936"; and (2) by striking out "June 30, 1935" where it appears in the first sentence of the eighth paragraph of subsection (y), and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1936."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in reference to the joint resolution which has just been passed, I desire to say that the committee reported the joint resolution this morning. My own judgment is that the time ought to be 90 days instead of 1 year; but the majority of the committee was of the other view and reported the joint resolution as the Senator from Virginia has stated.

I do not care to make any contest about the matter. I think, however, it would have been advisable to make the limitation 90 days, because we expect to have the banking bill before the Senate and expect to pass it within 90 days, which will put into permanent law the provision with regard to the insurance of deposits.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to make a personal statement.

The newspapers this morning gave an utterly inaccurate statement of the purpose of this joint resolution, to the effect that it was designed to prevent action on the three titles of the banking bill pending in the committee. There is not a word of truth in that statement. There is no justification or excuse for it. To show how utterly inaccurate one of the recitals was, it was therein stated that I had made a vehement appeal to the committee to adopt the joint resolution, whereas I did not open my mouth on the subject until I voted for the joint resolution when my name was called.

INCREASE OF TAXATION

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement. Yesterday I stated I should move this morning to take up the joint resolution passed by the House of Representatives extending the so-called "nuisance taxes." Since that time there have been some developments which justify me in stating at this time that I shall not call up the joint resolution this morning. I hope to call it up at the first opportunity, probably tomorrow. A meeting of the Finance Committee has been called for 4 o'clock this afternoon, at which time we hope to consider certain amendments which will be offered to the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator whether or not the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives is expecting to proceed to the consideration of the President's message submitted some time ago, and, if so, when that important committee, a committee of the House where all legislation to raise revenue must originate, intends to take up the message?

Mr. HARRISON. The information I have from the Speaker and the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is that they will not take up the matter immediately, or at least until the Senate shall have passed upon certain amendments to the joint resolution already passed by the House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The only information I have on the subject was contained in the morning press, upon which I place full reliance. It occurred to me the Senator is proceeding with unseemly haste in attempting to present a tax bill, whose purpose is to modify the general tax structure, as an amendment to a joint resolution covering only so-called "nuisance" taxes. If I am correctly informed, the nuisance taxes will expire on the 30th day of this month. Hence it would appear that the Senator is attempting to attach, as an amendment to the joint resolution, a tax bill which must necessarily be considered very hastily by both branches of Congress if it is to be passed by Saturday night.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is correct in his conclusions. That is why we hope there will be a great deal of haste in the matter. That is why I am calling the Finance Committee together this afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the intention of the Chairman of the Finance Committee to proceed without any hearings being had, without notice being given to anyone affected by the plan of taxation?

Mr. HARRISON. That matter has not as yet been decided.

Mr. McNARY. Speaking with utmost frankness, is it possible for the chairman of the committee to say he will submit the matter to the committee today, and then in the same breath say we will pass it by Saturday night and still state that the committee can hold hearings on the proposed amendments?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it would be impossible to have extended hearings and pass the joint resolution by Saturday night.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator think the proposal which he is now making, an amendment affecting the entire tax structure, can be attached to the joint resolution, and come within the constitutional provision relating to revenue measures?

Mr. HARRISON. I am quite sure if we can get a majority of the Senators to vote for the amendment, we can do it.

Mr. McNARY. Of course the Senate could pass it, but has the Senator seriously considered the constitutional effect of an attempt to place an amendment of substance on a measure which we are pleased to call a joint resolution having to do with the raising of revenue?

Mr. HARRISON. The joint resolution before us is a revenue measure and we have a right to place amendments of a revenue character on a revenue measure, the joint resolution having originated in the House.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that, but the joint resolution the Senator is proposing to have considered is a mere shadow. The substance which the Senator is proposing to have considered is a tax measure, and I believe that cannot be done constitutionally. Has the Senator given any serious consideration to the plain mandate of the Constitution?

Mr. HARRISON. I have thought about it night and day, and I am sorry the Senator and I differ about it, as others may differ about it.

Mr. KING. We do.

Mr. HARRISON. The matter is here, and I hope the Finance Committee this afternoon may take it up and give it consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator kindly outline in a few words what he proposes in the matter of the collection of new revenue?

Mr. HARRISON. As suggested in the President's message, as the Senator realizes, there are three proposals which the President is very anxious to have taken up for consideration at this time. He is very anxious to have them placed on the joint resolution as amendments.

The first is with reference to graduated taxes on corporations, beginning, as suggested in the President's message, at 10¾ percent on the smaller corporations and running as high as 16¾ percent on the larger corporations.

Secondly, in the present law relating to incomes of $1,000,000 and more, the brackets cease at $1,000,000. A person pays at the same rate on an income of $10,000,000 as on an income of $1,000,000. As suggested in the President's message, he desires that an increase in surtaxes on the larger incomes shall be written into the law. That is the second proposal.

The third suggestion is to put a tax on net inheritances. Under the present law, as the Senator will remember, the tax ceases at 60 percent. After an estate is split up and the inheritances go to the individuals, then under the President's suggestion we would apply a tax on the large inheritances.

Mr. LONG. A tax of how much?

Mr. McNARY. What sum of money does the Senator expect to raise by these proposed taxes?

Mr. HARRISON. Out of the three proposals the rough estimate, ascertained from my conference this morning with the experts, subject, of course, to revision, is somewhere around $340,000,000.

Those are the three suggestions submitted by the President on which he desires legislation in connection with the joint resolution at this session of Congress.

Mr. CLARK and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The Senator from Mississippi is speaking by unanimous consent. He has yielded to the Senator from Oregon. Does the Senator from Mississippi at this time yield to any other Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield further to the Senator from Oregon if he wishes to interrogate me further.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to do so. When the President's message was read I thought the clear implication was that the President did not expect and did not hope for any legislation of this nature at the present session of Congress. I entertain the hope that the committee, after further consideration, will not go into this important question at this time. It is not fair to those who have been here during these strenuous days and have worked diligently and faithfully for the passage of legislation which has been submitted. If there is any fitting legislation in that behalf, would it not be better to have the committee consider the subject matter studiously, thoroughly, and diligently during the summer or fall, and let the Congress come back in the fall, or winter if need be, to consider the matter, rather than to try hurriedly and hastily to pass it in 4 or 5 days at this time? I submit that suggestion to the intelligence and fairness of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. That viewpoint has been expressed by some and it has been vetoed by others. It is thought that the best thing to do under the circumstances is to consider the legislation at this time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it the intention of the Chairman of the Finance Committee and other leaders to undertake to force through before next Saturday night very comprehensive and wide-spread changes in our present taxing laws on the basis of rough estimates from the Treasury Department?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, it is not my desire to force anything through the Senate; but it is the desire to bring it before the Senate for consideration, so the Senate may act as it shall see fit.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to say to the Chairman of the Finance Committee that I was one of those who signed the round robin the other day.

Mr. HARRISON. That undoubtedly had influence in reaching the decision.

Mr. CLARK. That round robin expressed a willingness on the part of the Senators who signed it to stay here all summer, if necessary, to consider and work out a program along the lines of the President's message. Speaking for myself alone, that did not mean I was willing between now and next Saturday night to vote for a snap-judgment measure based on a rough estimate from the Treasury Department by some expert which has never been considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House and has never been considered by the Finance Committee of the Senate. I desire now to serve notice that, so far as I am concerned, if this very comprehensive measure is to be adopted and passed through the Senate by next Saturday night, it will be very late Saturday night when it is done.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, I am sure the Finance Committee never takes snap judgment, but always considers earnestly every proposition that is laid before it. I am sure the Senate itself has no desire to try to take snap judgment on any matter. We have some very extraordinary experts not only in the legislative branch of the Government but in the Treasury Department. I feel quite sure that this matter, which is now being considered and worked on, will be in shape very quickly, and the committee can then give every consideration to it. Whether or not it will take until midnight on Saturday I do not know. I am willing to stay here Saturday night if we cannot pass the bill before that time, but we shall lose taxes amounting to between a million and a half and two million dollars a day after the expiration of the nuisance taxes on Saturday night; and, of course, the longer we stay here in a discussion of these amendments the more it will delay the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Let me suggest to my friend from Mississippi that the sooner the Congress goes ahead and passes the temporary measure for the extension of the so-called "emergency" or "nuisance" taxes and really undertakes seriously to work out the tax program contained in the President's message along comprehensive and permanent lines, on information which should be before the Congress at the time it acts, the sooner we shall arrive at the goal outlined in the President's message.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that I am sure we are not going to act too hastily in this matter. We can obtain the opinions of the experts and act quickly; and I know that with the aid of the Senator's keen intellect and ability and experience, together with the cooperation of other members of the Finance Committee, not including myself, we can evolve a workable program without staying here all summer.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I feel constrained to call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the next bill on the calendar, which will be stated by the clerk.

THIRD TRIENNIAL MEETING OF ASSOCIATED COUNTRY WOMEN OF THE WORLD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2664) to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has called for the regular order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am speaking to the bill now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. HARRISON. I thought I had answered all questions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has not. Am I mistaken in understanding that the Senator is now proposing a course which his own committee by vote within the past 10 days declined to pursue?

Mr. HARRISON. There have been some very important developments since the committee acted recently. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I correct in saying that the committee did vote otherwise within the week?

Mr. HARRISON. The committee did vote the other way, and voted not to put any amendments on the joint resolution.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire to state that the committee did not vote unanimously to that effect.

Mr. HARRISON. No; there were two members of the committee, I think, who did not vote that way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the vote that was taken did not involve primarily this proposition anyway. There were many proposals or suggestions to amend some of the taxes we were extending. The committee really took the position that it would not add those proposals to the joint resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Michigan has asked me a question, and I should like to answer it. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is absolutely correct. This new development came before us after the Finance Committee had reported the joint resolution without any amendment save to change the time from 2 years to 1 year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator think it is fair to the rest of the Senate to ask us to take the program of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], when he is the only one in the Senate who has had a real chance to inquire into it?

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from Michigan must consult his own conscience, and I am sure he still has some left.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "hereby", to insert "authorized to be", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936, such sum to be expended for such purposes and under such regulations as the Secretary of State shall prescribe and without regard for any other provision of law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERCY C. WRIGHT

The bill (H. R. 2566) for the relief of Percy C. Wright was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill, at any rate?

Mr. KING. It is reported adversely. Let it go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I can give an explanation of the bill if the Senator desires. Does the Senator wish an explanation of it, or does he wish it to go over?

Mr. KING. I should like it to go over. The Secretary of War reports adversely on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BULKLEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 841, being House bill 2566. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], who reported that bill, is now present in the Chamber, and I think the Senator from Tennessee will not object to it at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. What bill is it?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is House bill 2566, for the relief of Percy C. Wright.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to recurring to the bill and to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2566) for the relief of Percy C. Wright, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Percy C. Wright, former Reserve officer, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month: Provided, That such pension shall be in lieu of any pension now received from the Veterans' Administration by said Percy C. Wright: And provided further, That this act shall not deprive said Percy C. Wright of such insurance payments to which he may be entitled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GEORGE C. MANSFIELD CO.

The bill (S. 2160) for the relief of the George C. Mansfield Co. and George D. Mansfield was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have a statement of the subject matter and purposes of this bill. I see the bill was introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and was reported by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President a bill identical with this has passed the Senate, if my recollection serves me, on two separate occasions. It is a bill designed to grant to the Mansfield Co. the right to go to the Court of Claims because of losses which they sustained as a result of the action of the Federal Food Administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when was the claim first presented?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The bill was first presented, if I recollect correctly, in 1924. The Senate will remember that subsequent to the action taken against this company, decisions of the Supreme Court indicated that certain portions of the act were unconstitutional. This bill is merely to authorize this concern to test out its rights in the Court of Claims.

Mr. KING. The Senator will perceive that there has been a recommendation against it by the Food Administration, as I recall.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct; but——

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall have to ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 2160.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair.) Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2160) for the relief of the George C. Mansfield Co. and George D. Mansfield, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "loss", to insert "if any", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the George C. Mansfield Co. and George D. Mansfield, of Milwaukee, Wis., are hereby authorized to bring suit against the United States to recover damages for any loss or losses which they may have suffered because of the action of the Federal Food Administration, division of enforcement, in directing and compelling said George C. Mansfield Co. and said George D. Mansfield to sell certain cheese products. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and determine such action on its merits, and to enter decree or judgment against the United States for the amount of such actual loss, if any, as may be found due to said George C. Mansfield Co. and said George D. Mansfield, without interest, with the same right of appeal as in other cases, notwithstanding the lapse of time or status of limitations or the tortious character of the action: Provided, That such action shall be brought within 6 months from the date that this act becomes effective.

SEC. 2. That upon final determination of such cause, if a decree or judgment is rendered against the United States, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay final judgment, which shall be paid to said George C. Mansfield Co. and said George D. Mansfield or their duly authorized attorneys of record by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the presentation of a duly authenticated copy of such final decree or judgment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, when this bill was reached on the calendar today I objected to its consideration because the report of the committee disclosed that no favorable recommendation was made by the department having jurisdiction of the subject matter. It appears that the bill simply refers the case to the Court of Claims for investigation and finding; and I withdraw the objection which I made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the Senator taking that course. I think in the confusion I perhaps did not make it clear to the Senator that the bill merely refers this matter to the Court of Claims to give the parties in interest a chance to adjudicate the rights, if any, of the claimants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED L. HUDSON AND WALTER K. JEFFERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1111) for the relief of Alfred L. Hudson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? There seems to be no recommendation by the Department.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am rather slow-minded. A minute ago the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] made a statement in which he mentioned my name. I did not catch the purport of it until I had been seated here for about 10 minutes.

I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that I come from a family which claims kinship with everybody down to the hundredth cousin; and if $340,000,000 a year is going to be raised by a bill imposing a tax on big fortunes, it may be that I shall claim at least one-half of 1 percent kinship with that bill, and that I shall not disown that much of my own color and blood in it; but $340,000,000 a year of added revenue from big fortunes to a country whose deficit is $3,000,000,000 does not come up to the point where it can be called a close blood relative. However, I shall not disown whatever kinship exists.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the pending bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. This is a bill for the relief of A. L. Hudson and Walter K. Jeffers, whose property was damaged by the lowering of the water level of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal. While the War Department reports against the bill, we have felt that it was a meritorious claim. It is only for $854.90 in the case of one claimant, and $629.70 in the case of the other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "pay", to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated"; in line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,484.66 by reason of damages to his" and insert "$854.90 and to Walter K. Jeffers the sum of $629.70 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for damages to their"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred L. Hudson, the sum of $854.90, and to Walter K. Jeffers the sum of $629.70 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for damages to their property caused by the lowering of the water level of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, 1½ miles west of the town of St. Georges, in New Castle County, in the State of Delaware: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Alfred L. Hudson and Walter K. Jeffers."

RUTH NOLAN AND ANNA PANOZZA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3180) for the relief of Ruth Nolan and Anna Panozza.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? I will ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], so that he will know what is running through my mind about the bill, whether the individuals mentioned did not give bond, and now do they not desire to have the Government reimburse them? If that is so, we ought not to have bonds.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No, Mr. President; the situation in this case is simply this: These people put up bonds amounting to $6,500. The accused appeared and was tried, and there was no reason for forfeiting the bonds. The record discloses that it was purely by mistake that the bonds were forfeited. The recommendation of the Department is that the bill should pass.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, was the face amount of the bonds, or any amount whatever, paid into the Treasury by the two ladies who signed the bonds?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; they put up cash bonds. By mistake the money got into the Treasury. There was no basis for the forfeiture of the bonds.

Mr. KING. Does the Treasury Department recommend in favor of the restoration of the money?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOROUGH OF BROOKLAWN, N. J.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2140) for the relief of certain purchasers of lands in the borough of Brooklawn, State of New Jersey, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "Board", to insert "Bureau", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Shipping Bureau is authorized and directed to make refunds to present owners of lands in the borough of Brooklawn, in the State of New Jersey, which have been purchased by them from the United States of 28 percent of the purchase price of such purchased lands where the full purchase price of said lands or where the full amount of principal and interest due on purchase money bonds and mortgages given to the United States of America, represented by the United States Shipping Board, covering such lands has been paid by such owners into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 2. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That said refunds shall be in full settlement of all claims that such owners of lands, as hereinbefore described in this act, may have against the Government of the United States: And provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated by virtue of this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated by virtue of this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of the act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we should have an explanation of this bill. If no explanation is given, I shall ask to have the bill go over.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, an identical bill was passed by the Senate last year. I am not very familiar with its terms; but, in general, the situation is that during the war the Government bought the land in question and built a war city there. Later on there was not any use for it, and the property was sold to the public.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Department recommends the passage of the bill, does it?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF CIVILIAN TEACHERS AT THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The bill (S. 2845) to provide for the retirement and retirement annuities of civilian members of the teaching staffs at the United States Naval Academy and the Postgraduate School, United States Naval Academy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, this bill was sent to the Senate by the Navy Department upon the recommendation of the Visiting Board to the Naval Academy in 1934. It proposes to set up a retirement system for members of the teaching staff at the United States Naval Academy and the Postgraduate School after they have reached the age of 65 years. It proposes a system similiar to retirement systems which prevail in many of the colleges throughout the country at the present time.

I have a list of colleges in which such system is in force, and it is quite long. The bill seeks to give the civilian teachers a retirement system, they to contribute 5 percent of their annual salaries toward the creation of the fund. That, briefly, is the substance of the bill. It would take quite a while to read the list of the colleges throughout the country which have similar systems. This bill is formulated along the lines of such systems.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, some of the professors called to see me about the matter, and I asked them if they were dissatisfied with their salaries. I think the salary of one of the gentlemen was $4,100, he told me, and he said he was not dissatisfied with it, but as I understood him this would afford an opportunity for them to get a little more by way of retirement. I desire to have the privilege of voting against the bill. If the Senator desires to have it voted on, very well.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF NAVAL AND MARINE CORPS RESERVES IN CONNECTION WITH THE "AKRON" DISASTER

The bill (H. R. 4764) for the relief of the officers and men of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserves who performed flights in naval aircraft in connection with the search for victims and wreckage of the United States dirigible Akron, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN SEAMEN

The bill (S. 379) for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to object to this bill for the reason that the State Department says its enactment would lead to unfortunate international complications. At some appropriate time, if we have opportunity to do so, we can discuss the matter at some length. For the time being, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE LINE OF THE NAVY

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I see the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] in the Chamber, and I should like to call attention to the fact that when Calendar No. 442, House bill 5599, to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes, was reached yesterday it went over at the request of the Senator from New York. I should like to have the Senate recur to that bill. The Senator from New York has an amendment which I am willing to accept and take to conference, and I think that will meet the objection of the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of Calendar No. 442, being House bill 5599. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that does not quite come within the plan suggested in the proceedings of yesterday.

Today we started on page 13 of the calendar in order to finish the consideration of the bills remaining on the calendar. I do not think it is quite within the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement to go back to measures which were considered yesterday, when under the unanimous-consent agreement we are considering new orders today.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will permit the consideration of this bill. I was not here yesterday, being away on important business, and it was on my objection, recorded with a fellow Senator, that the bill went over. The Senator from Florida is going to accept the amendment which I had in mind, and I hope the Senator from Oregon will allow the bill to be passed. It is an important bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the absence of the Senator from New York on yesterday, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5599) to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York proposes an amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 10, after line 18, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 9. That hereafter no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps on the active list while such officer is employed, after June 30, 1897, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government; and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date: Provided, That no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any retired officer in the Navy or Marine Corps who for himself or for others is engaged in the selling of, contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to the Navy or the Navy Department, any naval supplies or war material.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the Naval Appropriation Act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 576; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 2), as provides that "hereafter the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be 4 percent of the total authorized enlisted strength of the active list, exclusive of the Hospital Corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps", is hereby amended to read as follows: "Hereafter the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be equal to 4¾ percent of the total authorized enlisted strength of the active list, exclusive of the Hospital Corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps."

SEC. 2. That so much of the Naval Appropriation Act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 576; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 4), as amended by the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1482; U. S. C., supp. VII, title 34, sec. 4), as provides: "That the total number of commissioned line officers on the active list at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the proportion of 1 in the grade of rear admiral, to 4 in the grade of captain, to 8 in the grade of commander, to 15 in the grade of lieutenant commander, to 30 in the grade of lieutenant, to 42 in the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign, inclusive: Provided, That no officer shall be reduced in rank or pay or separated from the active list of the Navy as the result of any computation made to determine the authorized number of officers in the various grades of the line", is hereby amended to read as follows: "That the total number of commissioned line officers on the active list at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be distributed in the proportion of 1 in the grade of rear admiral, to 4 in the grade of captain, to 8 in the grade of commander, to 15 in the grade of lieutenant commander, to 30 in the grade of lieutenant, to 42 in the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign, inclusive: Provided, That no officer shall be reduced in rank or pay or separated from the active list of the Navy as the result of any computation made to determine the authorized number of officers in the various grades of the line: Provided further, That for the purpose of making any computation to determine the authorized number of officers in the various grades of the line above the grade of lieutenant (junior grade), the number of commissioned line officers on the active list, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall, until June 30, 1936, be assumed to be 5,499, and after that date any computation to determine the authorized number of officers in the various grades of the line shall be based on the total number of commissioned line officers on the active list at any one time not below 5,499, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers: Provided further, That except in time of war the following numbers, exclusive of additional numbers in grade, in the grades as indicated shall not be exceeded: In the grade of rear admiral, 58; in the grade of captain, 240; in the grade of commander, 515: And provided further, That except in time of war, if any computation made to determine the authorized number of officers in the various grades of the line would, except for the immediately foregoing proviso, give a greater number of rear admirals than 58, or a greater number of captains than 240, or a greater number of commanders than 515, such excess number shall be carried in the grade of lieutenant commander and an increase in that grade above the 15 percent of the total number of commissioned officers on the active list at any one time, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, is hereby authorized for that purpose."

SEC. 3. That section 4 of the act approved May 29, 1934 (48 Stat. 814), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That after June 30, 1936, lieutenants and lieutenants (junior grade) who shall not have been recommended for promotion to the next higher grade by the report of a line-selection board as approved by the President shall, on and after June 30 next succeeding the date of the approval of said line selection board, if they have completed 14 or 7 years, respectively, of commissioned service, be carried as additional numbers in grade, but shall be included in the authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy in any grade to which later promoted. That for the purpose of extending section 3 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1483; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, sec. 286a), to officers below the rank of lieutenant commander, the said section is amended so that the length of service therein prescribed shall be 21 years for lieutenants and 14 years for lieutenants (junior grade): Provided, That lieutenants with less than 21 years' commissioned service shall become ineligible for promotion on June 30 of the fiscal year in which they attain the age of 45 years: Provided further, That no officer of said rank shall become so ineligible prior to June 30, 1936: And provided further, That the restriction on the number of involuntary transfers in any fiscal year to the retired list prescribed in section 7 of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1484; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, sec. 286e), shall not apply to the grade of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade.)"

SEC. 4. That so much of the act approved June 30, 1914 (38 Stat. 404), as amended by the act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 576, 581), as further amended by the act approved July 1, 1918 (40 Stat. 708), which, as contained in the United States Code, title 34, section 3, provides:

"The total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following Staff Corps, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be based on percentages of the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy as follows:

"Supply Corps, 12 percent; Construction Corps, 5 percent; Corps of Civil Enginers, 2 percent; and the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the Medical Corps shall be sixty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent of the total authorized number of the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, including midshipmen, hospital corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps: Provided, That hereafter the authorized number of surgeons in the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, increased by one.

"Dental Corps: There shall be one dental officer in the Navy for each thousand of the total authorized number of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps.

"Corps of Chaplains: The total number of chaplains and acting chaplains in the Navy shall be 1 to each 1,250 of the total personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps as fixed by law, including midshipmen, apprentice seamen, and naval prisoners" is hereby amended to read as follows:

"The total authorized number of commissioned officers of the active list of the following staff corps, exclusive of commissioned warrant officers, shall be based on percentages of the total number of commissioned officers of the active list of the line of the Navy as follows:

"Supply Corps, 12 percent: Construction Corps, 5 percent; Corps of Civil Engineers, 2 percent; and the total authorized number of commissioned officers of the Medical Corps shall be sixty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent of the total authorized number of the officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, including midshipmen, Hospital Corps, prisoners undergoing sentence of discharge, enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, and the Flying Corps: Provided, That hereafter the authorized number of surgeons in the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, increased by one.

"Dental Corps: The total authorized number of commissioned officers of the Dental Corps shall be one for each 500 of the actual number of officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps.

"Corps of Chaplains: The total authorized number of chaplains and acting chaplains in the Navy shall be one to each 1,250 of the total personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps as fixed by law, including midshipmen, apprentice seamen, and naval prisoners."

SEC. 5. That section 3 of the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1483; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, sec. 286a), is hereby amended by inserting after the word "Provided", appearing in line 10 of said section 3 of Statutes at Large, volume 46, page 1483, the following clause: "The term 'service in grade' shall be construed to include service on the promotion list for his grade: Provided further", so that the said section will read as follows: "Except as provided in section 7, captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders, who shall not have been recommended for promotion to the next higher grade by the report of a line selection board as approved by the President prior to the completion of 35, 28, or 21 years, respectively, of commissioned service in the Navy, shall be ineligible for consideration by a line selection board, and any officer in said grade shall likewise be ineligible for consideration who on June 30 of the calendar year of the convening of the board shall have had less than 4 years' service in his grade: Provided, That the term 'service in his grade' shall be construed to include service on the promotion list for his grade: Provided further, That the commissioned service of Naval Academy graduates, for the purpose of this section only, shall be computed from June 30 of the calendar year in which the class in which they graduated completed its academic course, or, if its academic course was more or less than 4 years, from June 30 of the calendar year in which it would have completed an academic course of 4 years: Provided further, That except as provided in section 7, officers of any grade commissioned in the line of the Navy from sources other than the Naval Academy, shall become ineligible for consideration by a selection board when the members of the Naval Academy class next junior to them at the date of their original permanent commission as ensign or above become ineligible for consideration under the provisions of this section."

SEC. 6. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer and appoint officers of the line of the Navy, not above the grade of lieutenant commander, to the corresponding grade in the Construction Corps, Civil Engineer Corps, or Supply Corps, without regard to the age of the officers so transferred and appointed.

SEC. 7. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer and appoint officers of the Staff Corps of the Navy not above the rank of lieutenant commander to the corresponding rank and grade in the line of the Navy and the officers so transferred and appointed shall have the lineal position and precedence in the line which they would have held had they remained in the line or had their original appointments been in the line. Any officer so transferred and appointed shall be carried as an additional number in the grade in which he is serving and to which he may hereafter be promoted.

SEC. 8. That exclusive of student aviators and qualified aircraft pilots of the Navy and Marine Corps, the number of tactical and gunnery observers of the Navy and Marine Corps detailed to duty in aircraft and involving actual flying shall hereafter be in accordance with the requirements of naval aviation as determined by the Secretary of the Navy. So much of section 20 of the act approved June 10, 1922 (42 Stat. 632), as amended by section 6 of the act approved July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 782; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 37, sec. 29), which is inconsistent with or in conflict with the provision of this section, insofar as it relates to the Navy and Marine Corps, is hereby reapealed.

SEC. 9. That hereafter no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps on the active list while such officer is employed, after June 30, 1897, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government; and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date: Provided, That no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any retired officer in the Navy or Marine Corps who for himself or for others is engaged in the selling of, contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to the Navy or the Navy Department, any naval supplies or war material.

SEC. 10. That all laws and parts of laws which are inconsistent herewith or in conflict with the provisions hereof, insofar as they relate to the Navy and Marine Corps, are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. The present section 9 should be renumbered to be section 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that amendment will be made.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TRAMMELL subsequently said: I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer [Mr. MINTON in the chair] appointed Mr. TRAMMELL, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROMOTION OF OFFICERS OF THE NAVAL STAFF CORPS

The bill (H. R. 5382) to provide for advancement by selection in the staff corps of the Navy to the ranks of lieutenant commander and lieutenant; to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the equalization of promotion of officers of the staff corps of the Navy with officers of the line" (44 Stat. 717; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 34, secs. 348 to 348t), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BELL OIL AND GAS CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2464) for the relief of the Bell Oil & Gas Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "of", to strike out "$5,964.79" and to insert in lieu thereof "$4,616.69", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,616.69 to the Bell Oil & Gas Co. of Tulsa, Okla., for the purpose of reimbursing said Bell Oil & Gas Co. for Federal tax on gasoline delivered under contract with the War Department, dated June 29, 1932, said Department having contracted to pay said tax and said payment having been refused by the Comptroller General of the United States: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment, this bill provides for the reimbursement of a contractor with the United States.

In 1932 the War Department asked for bids upon gasoline, and in the advertisement for bids the following statement appeared:

Any Federal tax hereafter made applicable will be charged to the Government and entered on invoices as a separate item.

Afterward a Federal tax bill was enacted, and this contracting firm agreed to furnish gasoline, and the Government agreed to pay the tax. The Government paid the tax for about a month, and then stopped paying the tax, and in order that the contractor might comply with the contract, he had to pay the tax.

The pending bill is for the reimbursement only of the tax which the contractor was compelled to pay in order to make good on his contract. The Government is in no way obligated in the matter excepting, under the pending bill, to reimburse the contractor for the amount of the tax paid under protest.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I read from the report of the Secretary of War:

The subject bill S. 2464 proposes to make payment in the sum of $5,964.79 to the Bell Oil & Gas Co. as reimbursement for Federal taxes on the gasoline delivered under the contract referred to above. Inasmuch as it has been ascertained from paid invoices on file in the General Accounting Office that 431,269 gallons only of gasoline were furnished under the terms of said agreement, the amount stated in the bill would appear to be in excess of that which could have accrued in consequence of the Federal tax of 1 cent per gallon imposed by the Government on the gasoline delivered under the terms of the contract.

In view of the foregoing and the fact that contract W 503 QM-10664, as executed, made no provision for the payment either of Federal taxes or of interest, favorable consideration of this bill is not recommended.

I do not see how we can possibly justify a repayment under those circumstances. In the first place, the amount is not correct, and in the next place the company paid the tax voluntarily, without being required to do so.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It paid the tax under protest, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be so, and it might have a just claim against the Department for what was actually paid, but there is nothing here to indicate that the figures are correct. Instead of that being so, the Department disputes the figures which are presented.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, in answer to the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee, while it is true that the Department reported that the figures were not correct, that was an error on the part of the department, and the Committee on Claims checked that matter fully and found the figures as stated in the bill to be correct, which is now admitted by the department.

The only dispute about the bill is in reference to the payment of the interest on the amount of the tax paid. While there was not a strict compliance with the certificate required by the Department, it is clearly demonstrated that the tax was not included in the bill rendered. The War Department for several months paid the tax, but the Comptroller General finally ruled that because the certificate did not strictly comply with the law, was not filled out in exactly the correct way, the amount could not properly be paid. I think the amount of the tax that was paid very clearly should be refunded. The House passed a bill allowing the interest, but the Senate committee did not allow the interest. The figures, however, are correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. The pending bill does not carry interest?

Mr. BURKE. No; and the figures are absolutely correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF PREFERENCES AND PREJUDICES IN THE CASE OF PORTS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] is compelled to leave the Chamber to attend to some important business, and he and I are concerned with Senate bill 1633, to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes, being no. 932 on the calendar. In order that the Senator may leave to keep his engagement, I ask that the bill may go over by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill would go over under objection by one Senator.

Mr. LONG. It will not be reached for some little time. That is why I ask unanimous consent at this time that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have it go over for the day?

Mr. LONG. For the day; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOSEPH W. HARLEY

The bill (H. R. 1119) for the relief of Joseph W. Harley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARRIE M'INTYRE

The bill (H. R. 1438) for the relief of Carrie McIntyre was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAKE B. MORRISON

The bill (H. R. 617) to correct the military record of Lake B. Morrison was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I explain the bill briefly? Will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes. I will say to the Senator that I have examined the report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The records list Lake B. Morrison as a deserter, but the evidence before the committee further shows that he was ordered by his commanding officer to go home under threat of being shot if he did not obey, and, being an unusually young man for a soldier, in view of the threat on the part of his superior, he went home and remained there. This superior officer stated that he took this course on account of the young man's utter recklessness under fire. The Committee on Military Affairs believes that under the circumstances the young man should be relieved of the charge of desertion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection. I withdrawn my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 617) to correct the military record of Lake B. Morrison, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Lake B. Morrison."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4827) for the relief of Don C. Fees was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4828) for the relief of John L. Summers, disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that bill. The Senator by whom it was reported is not in the Chamber, and I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LIENS OF STATE AND LOCAL TAXES

The bill (S. 2351) to amend section 66 of the Judicial Code to provide for the enforcement of the lien of State and local taxes against property in the possession of receivers and other officers of the United States courts without leave of such courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. DUFFY] and myself to meet a situation which has arisen under the Bankruptcy Act. The Wisconsin Central Railway Co. is incorporated under the laws of the State of Wisconsin. It has, out of 1,832.20 miles, 1,408.5 miles located within the State of Wisconsin. It is a corporation created by grant of a charter from the State of Wisconsin. In 1909 the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railroad leased the Wisconsin Central lines under a 99-year lease. The taxes, which the State has always assessed against this corporation, its own creature, have always been paid up until the time that the road was placed under a Federal receivership. The effect has been to completely insulate the incident railroad company against procedure in the State courts.

Mr. McKELLAR. For taxes?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For back taxes which it owes to the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. McKELLAR. The feature which struck me as being of very doubtful propriety were these words in the committee amendment:

> And any such receiver, liquidator, referee, trustee, or other officer or agent, without order of the court of his appointment, shall comply with all orders, judgments, and decrees of any State court issued in the exercise of jurisdiction under this paragraph.

It seems to me that is likely to give rise to a great deal of confusion. Why not direct the Federal court to issue the order?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, what this bill seeks to do——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see what the bill seeks to do, and I think it is proper.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What the bill seeks to do is to permit action to be commenced in the State courts to recover taxes against the corporation, which obtained its charter from the State itself, but because of the Federal receivership it has been effectively resisting the efforts of the State to collect taxes which are known to be due to the State.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the State ought to collect the taxes, but I doubt the propriety of the committee amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I say that this amendment to the bill received the very careful consideration of the subcommittee and the full Judiciary Committee and was unanimously reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is evident that it ought to be done, and I withdraw the objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I appreciate the Senator's action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2351) to amend section 66 of the Judicial Code to provide for the enforcement of the lien of State and local taxes against property in the possession of receivers and other officers of the United States courts without leave of such courts, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the word "court", to insert a semicolon and the words "and any such receiver, liquidator, referee, trustee, or other officer or agent, without order of the court of his appointment, shall comply with all orders, judgments, and decrees of any State court issued in the exercise of jurisdiction under this paragraph", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 66 of the Judicial Code is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"Any State or civil subdivision thereof, heretofore or hereafter levying or imposing any tax which is or shall be a lien upon any property located within such State or civil subdivision, which property at the time of the imposition or levying of such tax or at any time thereafter is in the possession of any receiver, liquidator, referee, trustee, or other officer or agent appointed by a United States court, may pursue all remedies under the laws of such State for the enforcement and collection of such tax in the same manner and to the same extent as if the property were not in the custody of any such court or receiver, liquidator, referee, trustee, or other officer or agent, without leave of or interference by such court; and any such receiver, liquidator, referee, trustee, or other officer or agent, without order of the court of his appointment, shall comply with all orders, judgments, and decrees of any State court issued in the exercise of jurisdiction under this paragraph."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in connection with the passage of the bill, I ask that there may be incorporated at this point in the RECORD a letter from the attorney general of Wisconsin, Hon. J. E. Finnegan, addressed to my colleague [Mr. DUFFY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MARCH 1, 1935.

Re: Wisconsin Central Railway Co.

Hon. RYAN DUFFY,

United States Senator, Capitol Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: A peculiar situation has developed respecting the taxes owed to the State of Wisconsin upon the Wisconsin Central Railway Co.'s property within this State for the years 1932, 1933, and 1934. The State finds itself at a disadvantage in the collection of these taxes because of the fact that the Wisconsin Central is in receivership by virtue of an order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota, and by virtue of the various provisions of the Judicial Code and decisions of the Federal courts, which will hereafter be adverted to.

We believe that the State can be placed in a position to collect the taxes it has coming from the Wisconsin Central by action in the State court if the Judicial Code is amended as hereinafter suggested. For your information, we give you the following outline of the facts in this transaction:

The Wisconsin Central Railway Co. is indebted to the State of Wisconsin upon unpaid taxes levied pursuant to the provisions of chapter 76, Wisconsin Statutes, as follows:

Due June 15, 1932	$341,573.10
Due Nov. 21, 1934 (reassessment for year 1933)	526,001.58
Due Nov. 21, 1934 (reassessment for year 1934)	540,002.08
Total	1,407,576.76

None of these taxes have been paid.

The Wisconsin Central Railway Co. is organized and existing under the laws of the State of Wisconsin. As of December 31, 1932, of a total of 1,832.20 miles in its system, 1,408.50 miles were located in the State of Wisconsin, and the remaining mileage is located as follows:

210.83 miles in Minnesota.

42.26 miles in Michigan.

170.61 miles in Illinois.

In January of 1909 Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Co. acquired the majority of the outstanding common stock of the Wisconsin Railway Co. and entered into an agreement with the subject railway, denominated at least for 99 years, but characterized by our Supreme Court in Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Co. v. Henry (255 N. W. 896, at 897) as "perhaps more in the nature of a contract whereby the Soo Co. agreed to operate for that term unless sooner terminated the Wisconsin Central lines in connection with its own for the common benefit of both."

From the date of the execution of this lease until December 2, 1932, the Soo line operated the railway property of the Wisconsin Central under this lease. By 1924 the Soo line had acquired practically all of the common stock of the subject railway. The so-called "lease" required the Soo Co. to pay out of the earnings of Wisconsin Central the taxes levied against the latter's property, with provision exempting it from personal liability for such taxes, and also required the Soo Co. to account for the earnings of the Wisconsin Central line and turn the net earnings over to the subject company.

For many years the Soo line has owned railway property within the State of Wisconsin in addition to the property of the Wisconsin Central which it operated under the agreement above mentioned. For some years prior to the year 1933 it had been the practice of the tax commission to assess the operating property of the Soo line and of the Wisconsin Central, under the provisions of chapter 76, statutes, as a unit and to levy a single tax thereon which, prior to the year 1932, the Soo line paid without protest. Following this practice a unit assessment of both the properties of the Soo and the Wisconsin Central were made for the year 1932, and a tax levied thereon in the total amount of $975,923.14, of which the Soo paid $634,350.04, leaving an unpaid balance of $341,473.10, being the amount first mentioned in this letter. We are not advised as to whether or not the Soo made any protest against the unit assessment for the year 1932 at the time it was made, but presumably the reason why the Soo only paid part of the tax for the year 1932 was that it was in financial difficulties itself. This presumption that it did not intend to protest against unit assessment of properties of both companies for the year 1932 is supported by the fact that it paid almost two-thirds of the tax levied for that year, while the value of its operating property within the State is much less than half of that of the Wisconsin Central.

Although the subject railway is a Wisconsin corporation and has the bulk of its operating and nonoperating property within this State, on December 2, 1932, the Northwestern Fire & Mutual Insurance Co. filed its bill of complaint against the Wisconsin Central Railway Co. in the District Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota, alleging that a substantial part of the subject's railway is in Minnesota; that its principal operating offices, "so far as the defendant conducts operations" and the records pertaining thereto, are in Minneapolis; that the plaintiff owns $10,000 of the subject's bonds secured by trust indentures on its properties. That there were no earnings from the property for part of the interest due on the subject's bonds for the years 1930, 1931, and 1932, and none for the January 1, 1933, installments, and that the Wisconsin Central faced hundreds of lawsuits by bondholders; that there would be payable to the State of Wisconsin in the immediate future taxes in excess of $341,000, constituting a paramount lien on the property of defendant, which taxes defendant is and will be unable to pay, whereupon the State of Wisconsin will be entitled to take possession of defendant's property and to have the same sold in satisfaction of such taxes; that the property of the subject railway was being operated by the Soo line under a lease; that the revenues would be insufficient to pay the operating expenses; and that the Soo Line had given notice that, unless arrangements were made to meet operating expenses, it would cease operating the subject's lines and return possession thereof to the subject railway company; that if the Wisconsin Central took possession of its lines it would be unable to operate the same because of lack of funds and necessity of building up an operating organization; that the Wisconsin Central was threatening to take possession of its lines, and that the properties were, therefore, threatened with cessation of operation; that the remedy under the trust mortgages securing the bonds was inadequate because it gave no remedy by receivership, foreclosure, or otherwise, excepting after default and no default under the terms thereof had occurred, and that the nonoperation of the lines of Wisconsin Central could only be prevented by injunction and receiver. The usual prayer for appointment of a receiver and restraint upon creditors and others was appended to the bill.

On December 2, 1932, the same day that the bill was verified and filed, the Wisconson Central filed its answer, admitting every allegation of the bill and joining in the prayer for the appointment of a receiver.

On December 2, 1932, A. E. Wallace was appointed receiver for the operating properties of the Wisconsin Central and was, by the order, specifically authorized "to discharge all public duties obligatory upon" Wisconsin Central Railway. He was authorized, in his discretion, to provide for the payment of (a) all taxes and assessments then or hereafter due upon the property of the Wisconsin Central, (b) operating expenses, and (c) and (d) other items. All persons were enjoined from interfering with the possession of the receiver. The receiver was directed to file a $25,000 bond and to file an inventory within 90 days.

A. E. Wallace, at the time of his appointment, according to our information, was the general manager and a vice president of the Soo Line.

On December 3 petition for ancillary receiver was filed in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, and on that day Judge Wilkeson appointed A. E. Wallace ancillary receiver of the property and assets of the Wisconsin Central Railway Co., situated in the seventh judicial circuit. The order of the Minnesota court was confirmed and its provisions made to extend over the property of the Wisconsin Central, located in the seventh judicial circuit, and the order contained restraint upon creditors and others similar to that provided in the original order of the Minnesota district court. The ancillary receiver was not required to give bond.

On December 7, 1932, certified copy of the order of Judge Wilkeson, together with copies of the bill of complaint, answer, and order filed in the Minnesota court, were filed in the District Courts of the United States for the Eastern and Western Districts of Wisconsin. This procedure was apparently adopted pursuant to the authority of 28 U. S. C. A., section 117, which provides that where in any suit in which a receiver is appointed property of a fixed character, which is the subject of the suit, lies within different States of the same judicial circuit, the receiver shall be immediately vested with full jurisdiction and control over all the property, the subject of the suit, lying or being in such circuit.

It will be observed that, although the Wisconsin Central is a Wisconson corporation and the bulk of its property is located within this State, both the company and its operating property have been effectually insulated against action by its creditors in the State of its origin and principal operations, all without application to or proceedings had in any State or Federal court located in Wisconsin.

On December 3, 1932, the receiver, with the approval of the Minnesota district court, entered into an agreement with the Soo Co. whereby the Soo Co., for the receiver, continued to operate the Wisconsin Central lines. It thus appears that the continuity of the management of the operating properties of the subject railway by the Soo Line has not been disturbed by the receivership. The last-mentioned agreement provided that the Soo Co. was to collect the revenues of the Wisconsin Central Lines and apply them in discharge of cost of operation and maintenance, including taxes, and was not obligated to use its own funds for these purposes. We are informed that the Soo Line has continued to operate the subject properties under this agreement until the present time.

During the year 1933 the State of Wisconsin became a party to the receivership proceeding by filing with the district court of Minnesota its claim for the 1932 taxes in the amount of $341,573.10, plus interest at the rate of 15 percent per annum.

On or about May 1, 1933, the tax commission again made a unit assessment of the properties of the Soo and the Wisconsin Central Cos. and levied a tax thereon of $857,187.76. The Soo Line protested against this assessment, tendered the sum of $78,000 as being the amount of tax justly and equitably due on June 15, 1933, on the lawful assessment of its properties, and commenced an action in the circuit court of Dane County against the State treasurer and others to declare the 1933 assessment illegal. The lower court granted the relief prayed for, and its judgment was affirmed upon appeal to the Supreme Court (Minn., St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Co. v. Henry, 255 N. W. 896). This case was decided on July 2, 1934. Prior to the decision the tax commission, on or about May 1, 1934, again assessed the properties of the Soo Line and the Wisconsin Central as a unit and levied a unit tax thereon for the year 1934.

On October 22, 1934, in compliance with the decision of the Supreme Court directing separate assessments of the property of the Soo Line and of Wisconsin Central for taxation purposes, the Tax Commission assessed the property of the Wisconsin Central separately and levied a separate tax thereon for each of the years 1933 and 1934. These are the unpaid taxes mentioned in the third paragraph of this letter. We are not advised whether or not the Soo Line has paid the taxes which were reassessed and levied against its property separately.

Section 76.22, Wisconsin Statutes, provides that the taxes levied and assessed pursuant to the provisions of chapter 76, after the same become due, shall become a lien upon the property of the utility within the State prior to all other liens, debts, claims, or demands whatever, which lien may be enforced in an action in the name of the State in any State court of competent jurisdiction against such company and against its property within the State; and further provides that the judgment in such action shall fix the amount of taxes and interest, adjudge the same a lien on the property and provide for the sale of such property within 90 days after the entry of judgment, and further provides that the state treasurer, in the name of the State, may bid at the sale and become the purchaser of the property thereat.

Under the authority of this section, the State commenced an action in the Dane County circuit court against the Wisconsin Central and its receiver, alleging the nonpayment of the taxes for the years 1933 and 1934 upon the reassessment above mentioned, and praying for the declaration and foreclosure of the lien enjoyed respecting such taxes. Leave was not obtained from the District Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota to commence this foreclosure action.

Because of the Federal decisions hereinafter referred to, a serious question as to the right of the State to proceed with the tax foreclosure action authorized by the Wisconsin statute above mentioned, has arisen. It will be noted that leave to maintain the action has not been obtained from the Minnesota Federal court. The reason for this was that the State does not want to subject the determination to them the question of the amount and validity of the taxes, as well as the remedies for the enforcement thereof, determined by a Federal court outside the State of Wisconsin. In other words, the State wants to be able to enforce its tax without going to the Federal court of neither Minnesota nor Illinois in order to have permission to exercise its sovereign right.

A number of Federal cases seem to take the view that the appointment of a receiver in a Federal court places the property in custodia legis and removes it from the power of the State to enforce a tax liability thereon. The leading case upon this point is Ex parte Tyler (13 Sup. Ct. 785, 149 U. S. 164), decided in 1893. In that case a receiver was appointed for the South Carolina Railway Co. in 1889. For the year ending November 1, 1891, the receiver made his return of the property for the taxes as provided by State law, and the State Board of Equalization raised the valuation as reported and computed a tax on the increased valuation. The receiver paid the amount of taxes admitted to be due, and filed his bill in the court of his appointment asking that the various county treasurers and sheriffs be restrained from issuing and levying tax executions against the property to collect the difference between the amount claimed and the amount paid, claiming that the balance of the tax was illegal. Temporary restraining order was issued upon this bill. While this restraining order was in force, the receiver made his report for the year 1892, the board of equalization again raised the valuation, and the receiver paid the amount which he admitted to be due. The various county treasurers issued tax executions for the difference between the amount paid and the amount levied for the year 1892, and on February 4, 1893 Tyler, sheriff of one of the counties levied upon a portion of the railway company's rolling stock by chaining it to the tracks.

On February 6 the receiver filed his petition in the circuit court, alleging the illegality of the taxation, praying for an injunction restraining interference with property in his hands and asking that the sheriff be committed in contempt for levying upon property in the custody of the court. Upon hearing thereafter had, the court held that in the contempt proceeding it was not competent for the court to go into the question as to whether the tax was or was not illegal, but did enjoin the sheriff from interfering with the possession of the receiver and directed the restoration of the property seized to the receiver, and adjudged the sheriff in contempt of court. In denying the petition for writ of habeas corpus, the Supreme Court, among other things, said (p. 789):

"No rule is better settled than that, when a court has appointed a receiver, his possession is the possession of the court, for the benefit of the parties to the suit and all concerned, and cannot be disturbed without the leave of the court, and that if any person, without leave, intentionally interferes with such possession, he necessarily commits a contempt of court, and is liable to punishment therefor."

And again (p. 790):

"The maintenance of the system of checks and balances characteristic of republican institutions requires the coordinate departments of government, whether Federal or State, to refrain from any infringement of the independence of each other; and the possession of property by the judicial department cannot be arbitrarily encroached upon save in violation of this fundamental principle.

"The levy of a tax warrant, like the levy of an ordinary fieri facias, sequestrates the property to answer the exigency of the writ; but property in the possession of the receiver is already in sequestration, already held in equitable execution, and, while the lien for taxes must be recognized and enforced, the orderly administration of justice requires this to be done by and under the sanction of the court. It is the duty of the court to see to it that this is done, and a seizure of the property against its will can only be predicated upon the assumption that the court will fail in the discharge of its duty—an assumption carrying a contempt upon its face."

And further (p. 791):

"This principle is applicable here, for whether the sheriff were armed with a writ from a State court, or with a distress warrant from a county treasurer, this property was as much withdrawn from his reach as if it were beyond the territorial limits of the State.

"The inevitable conclusion that this must be so, if constitutional principles are to be respected in governmental administration, does not involve interruption in the payment of taxes, or the displacement or impairment of the lien therefor; but, on the contrary, it makes it the imperative duty of the court to recognize as paramount, and enforce with promptness and vigor, the just claims of the authorities for the prescribed contributions to State and municipal revenue; and, when controversy arises as to the legality of the tax claimed, there ought to be no serious difficulty in adjusting such controversy upon proper suggestion. The usual course pursued in such cases is by intervention pro interesse sue, as in the instance of sequestration (2 Daniell, Ch. Pl. & Pr. (4th ed.) 1057, 1744; Savannah v. Jessup, 106 U. S. 563, 564, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 512). The tax collector is a ministerial officer (Erskine v. Hohnback, 14 Wall. 613; Stutsman Co. v. Wallace, 142 U. S. 293, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 227), and no reason is perceived why he should not bring his claim to the attention of the court, while, on the other hand, it is clearly the duty of the receiver to do so, if he contends that the taxes are illegal. If found valid, they must be paid; if invalid, the court will so declare, subject to the review of the appellate tribunals."

The court further held in the cited cases that 28 U. S. C. A., sections 124 and 125, which direct the receiver to manage and operate the property, "according to the requirements of the valid laws of the State in which such property shall be situated, in the same manner that the owner or possessor thereof would be bound to do if in possession thereof", and further authorize suit against any receiver without leave of court "in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with such property" did not restrict the power of the Federal court to preserve property in the custody of the law from external attack.

This decision has been adhered to by the Federal courts (Fidelity Trust Co. v. Tennessee Charcoal Iron Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 3 Fed. (2d) 857).

Brictson Mfg. Co. v. Close (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (25 Fed. (2d) 794), in which it was held that a tax deed obtained upon property in the possession of a receiver was void (Scott v. Western Pac. R. Co., 246 Fed. 545; Coy v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. (D. C. Oreg.), 212 Fed. 520; Bird v. City of Richmond (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 240 Fed. 545; Bright v. Arkansas (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 249 Fed. 950, 953).

Under those decisions the question arises whether or not the Minnesota court would treat any deed issued upon a foreclosure sale in the pending action as a mere nullity, and claim the power to forestall any attempts by purchaser at the foreclosure sale to wrest possession of the property from the receiver.

You can see from the foregoing that a very fruitful source of litigation and delay in the collection of these taxes has been made available to the Wisconsin Central. We feel you will agree with us that the State should not be deprived of this substantial tax revenue by a public utility, at a time when the State badly needs the money, and when other taxpayers have to pay their taxes, although they are in a poorer position to do so than is the Wisconsin Central. We feel you will also agree with us that the State should not be required to go to Minnesota or to Illinois to obtain permission to collect these taxes from a Wisconsin corporation upon Wisconsin property.

We therefore suggest that the Judicial Code be amended so as to permit the State to enforce its tax lien in the State courts and prevent this situation arising at any future time. To accomplish this purpose we have drawn a bill creating a new section of the Judicial Code, which we would like to have you examine and give us the benefit of your views thereon. If the form of the proposed bill meets with your approval, we would greatly like to have it introduced in Congress and pressed with all convenient dispatch.

The Wisconsin Central has been trying to take advantage of the situation above outlined by attempting to negotiate a settlement of the taxes for $800,000. You can readily see how they are trying to deprive the State of over $600,000 of revenue without any cause whatever.

Yours very truly,

J. E. FINNEGAN, Attorney General.

AIR MAIL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday we practically completed the air mail bill, except that there was an objection by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. The Senator from Ohio has withdrawn his objection, and I ask unanimous consent to return to that bill, as I think every Senator, so far as I know, has agreed upon its terms. I refer to House bill 6511, being Calendar No. 718.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6511) to amend the air mail laws and to authorize the extension of the Air Mail Service, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert new matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, to the committee amendment I offer one other amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. I am sure it will meet with the approval of all Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment at the proper place it is proposed to insert the following section:

SEC. 12. (a) That hereafter no air mail carrier shall issue passes to any person or transport passengers at a different rate from that charged passengers generally: Provided, That said carriers may transport (a) the Postmaster General on departmental business or any person designated by him as traveling on departmental business; (b) any official or employee of the company or their immediate families; (c) any official or employee of other air mail companies.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill, because evidently it is one of considerable importance, and I know from the communications I have received that it is attracting a great deal of attention.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, Mr. President, and for a number of months the bill has been very earnestly considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; virtually all of the differences have been ironed out, and the bill as now presented, I believe, meets the approval of everyone. I call special attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], who is now here to speak for himself about this bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday I asked that this bill go over. In the meantime I have satisfied myself that the amendments make the bill quite satisfactory.

Mr. McKELLAR. I believe it is satisfactory to virtually everyone who is interested in it, and that is why I am asking that it be considered at this time, and I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am compelled to ask that the bill go over for 1 day because of amendments which came to me, which, I think, probably have been inserted in the bill, but of which I am not certain.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that chambers of commerce from the Senator's State, California, and all of the Senators from the Pacific Coast States have stated that the provision which is in the bill is entirely satisfactory to them. If it should not be satisfactory, I will agree to a reconsideration of the bill, if it shall be passed at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me ask the Senator just one question. If he assures me upon that point probably I can withdraw my objection. Are the amendments which were presented by the city of Los Angeles and the representative of the city before the committee incorporated in the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. They are incorporated in the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to state that the bill is not entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont in one regard, and that is the perpetuation of the vindictive clause in the bill, but the Senator from Vermont did not wish to make a contest upon that point. He has received very satisfactory treatment from the chairman of the committee with respect to certain amendments, and, therefore, the Senator from Vermont does not oppose the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have a vote, Mr. President?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am getting so many telegrams and telephone calls from newspapers and individuals on a new constitutional question which has arisen, as shown by the morning newspaper, that I consider it to be necessary to make a statement.

It seems that our Federal Government is going into more "new deals" all the time, and the latest of its activities is that of taking over the business of operating garbage collections and other departments in the city of New Orleans. Constitutional lawyers desire to know just where the authority comes by virtue of which the Federal Government can take over and run, as the Federal Government, the departments of the city of New Orleans, and to pay them out of the Federal funds. I wish to say that I have not undertaken to find any constitutional authority nor do I think anyone else has undertaken to find any such constitutional authority for such activities.

Further, I see from the newspaper reports—and all I know is from the public press, because I am not undertaking to keep myself informed on matters that do not concern me, and I am not concerned with the municipal affairs of the city of New Orleans nor am I concerned much with the F. E. R. A.—that the garbage men in New Orleans have struck against the F. E. R. A.

Mr. MINTON. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. LONG. I am talking; and that is the regular order. The Senator has something to learn about the rules that he does not know.

It seems from what I read in the newspapers that the Federal Government has got itself a strike down in my home city. It has taken over a department of the city government; it has taken over their pay roll, and it is paying their pay roll, and it is doing the municipal service of collecting the garbage off the streets every morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, is the garbage to which he refers political or physical garbage? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I do not think any of the forces of the Senator from Kentucky are down there yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope not.

Mr. LONG. Therefore, it must be physical garbage.

Mr. BARKLEY. If any of my constituents were down there I should like to rescue them.

Mr. LONG. I am afraid that if the Senator got among political garbage he could not leave that kind of kinfolk.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that the reason the Senator goes back so often?

Mr. LONG. No; it is not. I go back not because of the city's political organization but of the State's political organization.

The point I am trying to bring to the Senate so that Senators may be able to answer their own constituents rather than have them wire me when similar things happen in their own cities. They have a strike down there, they say now, over wages the Government is paying the city employees. These men were getting around $90 to $100 a month from the city, but the Government comes in and says, "We are running this garbage department and if any of you do not do what we tell you you are violating the Government law which forbids Federal employees from being interfered with." A municipal garbage collector is a Federal employee, and they have cut his wages down there, and now, according to the newspapers, the garbage collectors are striking against the Government, and confusion exists, which I think Senators should acquaint themselves with, on the constitutional aspects, because of the fact that there are a number of cities which want the Federal Government to take over their pay rolls. My fellow Senators from other cities, such as New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago, will want their pay rolls taken over by the Federal Government, but the workers will not want their wages cut. It seems that we ought to get some uniformity about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. LONG. Very well; I will cover it on another matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the amendment reported by the committee to House bill 6511.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JURISDICTION IN CIVIL SUITS

The bill (S. 2524) amending section 112 of the United States Code, annotated (title 28; subtitle, "Civil suits, where to be brought"), was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONG and Mr. AUSTIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I have been recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend for a question, but I wish to complete the little observation I was making.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was going to suggest that the observation be made on some other bill. I am about to object to this bill on behalf of a Senator who is absent, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is interested in the bill. I announce his absence, and object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. LONG. I will ask that the bill go over at the conclusion of my remarks. I wish now to read from the Washington Post. The headline is:

Garbage men in New Orleans to strike again. Walkout set for today as collectors revolt at F. E. R. A. wages.

I want to make plain that this is a department of the government that I have not anything in the world to do with, neither with the F. E. R. A. of the United States Government, nor with the municipal department of the city of New Orleans. I want to clear my skirts to start with by saying that I have absolutely nothing whatever to do with the garbage department of the city of New Orleans or with the city government of New Orleans inside, outside, direct, or indirect, and that I have nothing to do with the F. E. R. A.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 24.—Garbage collectors here will strike again tomorrow rather than accept employment from the F. E. R. A., a spokesman announced late today.

Commissioner of Public Works Joseph P. Skelly said the jobs would be filled with other workers, so that the city's health would not be endangered as it was when garbage piled up in gutters during a 1-day strike last week.

The F. E. R. A. stepped in with Federal funds to end the strike last week—

I want Senators to listen to this:

The F. E. R. A. stepped in with Federal funds to end the strike last week by paying salaries of the garbage collectors the city couldn't pay. The city is in financial straits because of a political battle with Senator HUEY P. LONG.

In other words the city of New Orleans went broke fighting me. They spent their pay roll and spent all their money, this dispatch means, I guess, and therefore, having spent it all trying to beat the Long ticket, they have not any money to pay their workers. So the Federal Government went down there and put some money in the treasury to enable the city to fight the political campaign, and are now putting a little more in there. I want them to be satisfied one with the other. So I am going to read the remainder of this story:

The Kingfish's State administration has harassed the city treasury at every turn in an effort to drive out Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley.

Just how we have harassed the city treasury, I do not know. They asked the right to borrow money and the State itself joined in the request that they let them have the money, but still they would not let them have it, and the city went into bankruptcy. It filed a petition in the bankrupt court on the ground that it could not pay its debts, and now they say I am responsible for having harassed them somewhere. I have not harassed them. We cleaned their plow down there in the political campaign and we will do so the next time. They will need the whole $5,000,000,000 down there before they get through. This garbage money will not be a drop in the bucket. However, the Federal Government having taken over all the functions of the garbage department, the workers are striking against the F. E. R. A. today. Let me read the remainder of this article:

C. Parks, spokesman for the garbage collectors—

This is the Federal Government business now—announced renewal of the strike tomorrow after a conference with Skelly late today.

Parks told Skelly the collectors wanted a 6-day week, time and a half for holiday work, and the regular city wage scale of $3 a day for helpers and $3.50 for drivers.

The men were put on a 5-day basis several months ago. The F. E. R. A. made its wage scale $10 a month under the old city schedule.

That shows how they cut the wages there. In order, they say, to keep the Long people from having anything to do with it, they cut the poor garbage collectors down to $10 a month. If the F. E. R. A. had not stepped in, they would have had to appeal to the State administration for help; but the city administration would rather have these poor workers under the F. E. R. A. at $10 a month, which is starvation, than to let them have a decent wage. So the Federal Government is down there in the strike-breaking business, confusing the public and destroying confidence and running a municipality and sending big agents from Washington, D. C., to New Orleans to operate the garbage business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired. Senate bill S. 2524 will be passed over.

LOSS OF CITIZENSHIP BY NATIVE-BORN WOMEN

The bill (S. 2912) to repatriate native-born women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment? If his mind is set upon the matter, I will not waste time.

Mr. KING. My mind is set. I wish to prepare an amendment which has been suggested, and I have not had time to prepare it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, I will not waste time by making an explanation but will wait until the Senator shall have prepared the amendment.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the Senator presenting his views.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I will wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PER CAPITA PAYMENT TO CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 4123) providing for the payment of $15 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this article continues:

Skelly insisted that other workers would be found to keep up the garbage collection without a lapse.

Paid only part of their wages this month and nearly 2 months behind since the first of the year the garbage collectors refused to work last Friday until something was done about their back pay.

In Washington—

In Washington—

Frank H. Peterman F. E. R. A. administrator for Louisiana, took over garbage collection as a F. E. R. A. project, together with nine other departments concerned with health.

This was interpreted in some quarters as a left-handed blow at LONG, enemy of the national administration. Mayor Walmsley has resisted LONG's State dictatorship, and this warfare brought the city into its present straitened financial circumstances.

In other words, the city of New Orleans is in strained financial circumstances because of the fact that they have not been with us. It can only be interpreted in one way. Our State administration is in no strained financial circumstances. We have a balanced budget and three or four million dollars in the treasury and we do not need any money from anybody. When the Federal Government sends us one of their ultimatums we tell the Federal Government where they can go to. We do not have to have them messing with us. They can go wherever they please, so far as we are concerned. But now, the city government is in financial embarrassment, a government which was elected to support the Roosevelt administration and to be against me; and they say that because they are not blood kin in politics to me they cannot get along. It is a sad commentary that Washington, D. C., is going to treat these brethren worse than others. So I think the Congress ought to have the information and Senators ought not to have me blamed for something for which I am not responsible. The Government will probably want to deduct this amount from the other work relief that we get in Louisiana. I do not want that done. I want Senators to see to it, if they have cities that think the Federal Government ought to pay their municipal pay rolls, that they should get busy and learn how we are doing it in Louisiana. Do not have your cities telephoning me and your newspapers wiring me. If you want to get public money, learn how to do it. If you do not want to put taxes on a city, if you do not want to carry your municipal pay roll, here is the way to get the money, but let us try to evolve a scheme which will not bring on a strike every time the Federal Government steps in and proposes to give the people $10 a week or $10 a month. Let us ask them to pay a man a wage that is consistent with what he was earning previously.

I have no concern with the city-government affairs. I have no concern with the administration's representatives down there. If they are meddling and having a strike, it is their business and not mine, but at some time they ought to be able to do something orderly and regularly, so that when they create disorder and confusion and pursue this kind of expected course, they will not blame me for their rashness and their unconstitutional activities which were expected to bring on this kind of furor in a place that does not need them and wishes they would step out and keep out. We would be glad if they would move everything they have in Louisiana clear out of it instead of having this kind of business.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator want the Government to move everything out of Louisiana? We would be glad to have it up in Alabama.

Mr. LONG. Take it! We would be glad to have Alabama have it, if it is to be run like the relief.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator want the Federal land bank moved from Louisiana to Alabama?

Mr. LONG. We do not care what you take out of there that the Roosevelt administration has had anything to do with putting there.

Mr. BLACK. I understand the Senator is willing to move the Federal land bank out of New Orleans?

Mr. LONG. I have nothing to do with the Federal land bank.

Mr. BLACK. I want to be sure.

Mr. LONG. We would not care a rap or a snap of the finger if they should move the Federal land bank, if it is like the relief, and anything else the Roosevelt administration has down there. Take it all, and get out of there and stay out of there! [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator think with the approval of his people we can get it moved?

Mr. LONG. The administration has to have some jobholders down there, and anti-Long men hold those jobs and will keep the bank there.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to have the Federal land bank moved over to Alabama.

Mr. LONG. The Senator could not have it because of the anti-Long jobholders who are being sheltered down there. The administration has to keep those anti-Long men in jobs there, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BLACK. I understand the Senator expresses a willingness to move the Federal land bank away from New Orleans, and that he will help me get it for Alabama?

Mr. LONG. Oh, no. I say the anti-Long people will have to do something about it, and they would want to keep it there so they can hold their jobs.

Mr. BLACK. I thought the Senator was willing to have the Federal land bank moved out of New Orleans.

Mr. LONG. The Roosevelt administration did not put it down there.

Mr. BLACK. I understood the Senator to say he would be willing to have the Federal land bank moved out of New Orleans.

Mr. LONG. I do not care what they may do with it. So far as concerns me personally, other interests are best accommodated in New Orleans.

Mr. BLACK. Is the Senator willing to have it moved out of New Orleans?

Mr. LONG. I do not think there is anyone in Alabama who would know how to run our land bank. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has never answered my question. Does he state or express a willingness to have the Federal land bank moved out of New Orleans into some other State?

Mr. LONG. Anything the Roosevelt administration has put in New Orleans they can take out. That happens to be a Republican institution in New Orleans.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator want it to remain there?

Mr. LONG. The anti-Long people in Alabama and Mississippi would not be able to get it away from the anti-Long people in Louisiana.

Mr. BLACK. Is the Senator retreating from the position he first took when he said he would be glad to have the bank moved out of New Orleans?

Mr. LONG. I think we will be glad to have everything the Roosevelt administration has put in Louisiana taken out of there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I have asked the Senator about the removal of the Federal land bank from New Orleans.

Mr. LONG. May I answer the Senator from Alabama in his own time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. LONG. The Roosevelt administration did not put that bank there.

Mr. BLACK. Will it be all right to move it away?

Mr. LONG. I should not care if it were moved if it were not for others who need it.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator approves and would be glad to see it moved away?

Mr. LONG. I would not care if they took it over to Alabama, but they have no one there who is able to run it.

Mr. BLACK. We will let that take care of itself. Is the Senator willing to have the bank moved out of New Orleans?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLACK. I join in the request!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state again the bill which was last called.

PER CAPITA PAYMENTS TO CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 4123) providing for the payment of $15 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band, of Minnesota, from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator the ground of his objection?

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator from Minnesota that the Secretary of the Interior, with respect to the bill, made the following statement:

> In view of the amount of relief funds that has been allotted to the Red Lake jurisdiction and the cooperation extended by the State relief administration, it is believed that a per capita payment is not justified at this time, and that the small balance remaining to the credit of these Indians should be conserved for future beneficial use.

He recommends that the bill do not pass. Therefore I object to its present consideration.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah withhold his objection to enable me to make a brief statement?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Secretary's report was made on the bill when it provided for a $25 per capita payment. After the amount was cut down to a $15 per capita payment, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was favorable to it. The money comes out of the Indians' own funds. No money whatever is taken out of the Federal Treasury. It comes out of the Indian tribal funds, which come from the sale of their fish and timber. It is a cooperative plan on the reservation, as the Senator, of course, knows. The Indians are very strongly in favor of the measure.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator assure the Senate that Secretary Ickes has modified the views which he expressed in his letter dated March 9, 1935, in the paragraph which I read?

Mr. FRAZIER. I cannot say with regard to Secretary Ickes, but I know the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has changed his mind, and I presume he was instrumental in the writing of the report which was first drafted. The amount was cut down from $25 to $15 per capita payment. It comes out of the Indians' own money.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the Secretary's representative did say in my presence, when the bill was reported, that it was satisfactory.

Mr. KING. Was his attention challenged to the letter which he had written in opposition to the bill and was an explanation made as to why he changed his mind, if he has changed his mind?

Mr. SCHALL. The original bill provided for a $25 per capita payment. The funds were not sufficient to take care of that payment, but when the amount was reduced to $15 it was approved by Mr. Zimmerman, who appeared before the committee. This is a House bill.

Mr. KING. Before we conclude the call of the calendar during the day I shall confer with the Secretary of the Interior, and, if he has no objection, I shall have none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection of the Senator from Utah, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. FRAZIER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar 894, House bill 4123, which is the Chippewa Indian bill, providing for a $15 per capita payment. The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. When it was previously called on the calendar the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] objected, but he has since told me he would withdraw his objection inasmuch as it is stated in the first part of the report that the Assistant Commissioner made the statement before the committee that the Secretary of the Interior had no objection to the bill in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reverting to House bill 4123?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the report of the Secretary of the Interior seems to be adverse, inasmuch as it says:

> In view of the amount of relief funds that has been allotted to the Red Lake jurisdiction and the cooperation extended by the State relief administration, it is believed that a per capita payment is not justified at this time, and that the small balance remaining to the credit of these Indians should be conserved for future beneficial use.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Utah referred to that statement when he made his objection. The bill as originally drawn carried a per capita payment of $25, but when it was reduced to $15 the Bureau of Indian Affairs withdrew all objection. The Assistant Commissioner stated that the Secretary would withdraw his objection. The payment is to be made out of the money belonging to the Indians.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that is the proper way to make a record. The Secretary of the Interior makes a written report that a per capita payment is not justified, and then someone else comes in and says the Secretary has changed his mind. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SCHALL subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to House bill 4123, which was objected to a few moments ago by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I understand he has withdrawn his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to recur to House bill 4123. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it developed during the brief discussion of the bill a few moments ago that the Secretary of the Interior had submitted an adverse report upon it. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], however, stated that the amount of the proposed payment had been reduced from $25 to $15, and that it was represented by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the Secretary of the Interior had no objection to the bill in that form. In view of the statement of the Senator from North Dakota I do not wish to insist upon my objection, and so I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4123) providing for the payment of $15 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury so much as may be necessary of the principal timber fund on deposit to the credit of the Red Lake Band of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota and to make therefrom payment of $15 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota, immediately payable upon the passage of this act under such regulations as such Secretary shall prescribe. No payment shall be made under this act until the Chippewa Indians of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota shall, in such manner as such Secretary shall prescribe, have accepted such payments and ratified the provisions of this act. The money paid to the Indians under this act shall not be subject to any lien or claim of whatever nature against any of said Indians.

FILIPINO EMIGRATION FROM UNITED STATES

The bill (H. R. 6464) to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the design of the measure is to assist the Filipinos who are in distress, who are upon the relief roll or who are a charge upon the State at the present time, in returning to their own homes. It is not a deportation bill. It merely authorizes the Department, upon application, if they determine the case to be an appropriate one, to pay the transportation home of those people who are, now a charge in reality upon them. The Immigration Bureau approves it.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator any information as to the aggregate amount which will be required in order to transport this large army of Filipinos?

Mr. JOHNSON. I mistrust my memory, but I think the maximum sum which was suggested was $60,000. I am not as clear as I should be on that point, but that is my recollection.

Mr. KING. It does not provide for the deportation or transportation of all the Filipinos in the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, by no means It is only those who shall so request.

Mr. KING. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6464) to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with an amendment, in section 4, on page 3, line 13, after the word "States", to insert the words "except as a quota immigrant under the provisions of section 8 (a) (1) of the Philippine Independence Act of March 24, 1934, during the period such section 8 (a) (1) is applicable", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. No Filipino who receives the benefits of this act shall be entitled to return to the continental United States except as a quota immigrant under the provisions of section 8 (a) (1) of the Philippine Independence Act of March 24, 1934, during the period such section 8 (a) (1) is applicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR PROTECTION OF INDUSTRIAL PROPERTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1794) to effectuate certain provisions of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property as revised at The Hague on November 6, 1925, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Trade Mark Act of February 20, 1905 (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 84), as amended, be amended to read as follows:

"That an application for registration of a trade mark filed in this country by any person who has previously regularly filed in any foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States an application for registration of the same trade mark shall be accorded the same force and effect as would be accorded to the same application if filed in this country on the date on which application for registration of the same trade mark was first filed in such foreign country: Provided, That such application is filed in this country within 6 months from the date on which the application was first filed in such foreign country: Provided further, That subject to the provisions of section 5 of said Trade Mark Act (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 85) registration of a collective mark may be issued to an association to which it belongs, which association is located in any such foreign country and whose existence is not contrary to the law of such country, even if it does not possess an industrial or commercial establishment: And provided further, That certificate of registration shall not be issued for any mark for registration of which application has been filed by an applicant located in a foreign country until such mark has been actually registered by the applicant in the country in which he is located."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to say to my friend from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] that I am sure Birmingham, Montgomery, and Mobile would be glad to have some Federal money, as New Orleans is going to have its pay roll paid out of the Federal Treasury. To show my goodness of heart, I will join with the Senator in asking that those Alabama cities be given money as Louisiana is being given money.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, are there any members of the Patents Committee present who will explain the pending bill?

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the chairman of the committee, was called out of the Chamber. He asked me, if a question should be raised about this bill, to explain it, and also the bill which follows it on the calendar.

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. DUFFY. It is merely a technical matter. We have adhered to the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, which was ratified years ago. There is a discrepancy in the matter of the period of priority between the convention which we joined, which provides for 6 months, and our own law, which provides for 4 months. This bill is merely to make our own law comply with the provisions of the convention. The bill has the approval of the Commissioner of Patents and the Secretary of State and there seems to be no objection whatsoever to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this is not the bill which involves the proposed amendment respecting copyright designs, with which the Senator is familiar?

Mr. DUFFY. It is not. This is another matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1795) to effectuate certain provisions of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property as revised at The Hague on November 6, 1925, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4887 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 32) be amended to read as follows:

"No person otherwise entitled thereto shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented by the inventor or his legal representatives or assigns in a foreign country, unless the application for said foreign patent was filed more than 12 months, in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and 6 months in cases of designs, prior to the filing of the application in this country, in which case no patent shall be granted in this country.

"An application for patent for an invention or discovery or for a design filed in this country by any person who has previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention, discovery, or design in a foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States shall have the same force and effect as the same application would have if filed in this country on the date on which the application for patent for the same invention, discovery, or design was first filed in such foreign country: Provided, That the application in this country is filed within 12 months in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and within 6 months in cases of designs, from the earliest date on which any such foreign application was filed. But no patent shall be granted on an application for patent for an invention or discovery or a design which had been patented or described in a printed publication in this or any foreign country more than 2 years before the date of the actual filing of the application in this country, or which had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than 2 years prior to such filing."

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah and others that exactly the same situation confronts us in this bill as in the preceding one. It is to remove a discrepancy between our present law and the convention to which we are a party. Our law provides for a period of 4 months, and the convention provides for a period of 6 months.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS OR TRIBES

The bill (S. 1440) to enroll on the citizenship rolls certain persons of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or Tribes was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] that the Assistant Secretary of the Interior has made a recommendation against this measure with rather a long explanation.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I realize that to be true; and some of the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma also objected to opening the rolls.

These rolls were supposed to have been closed back about 1898 by the Dawes Commission. Hearings were held there for some time; and the work of the Dawes Commission was not satisfactory. Then some court was named to go into the matter further, and that was done. Afterward, along about 1916 or 1918, a law was passed to reopen the rolls, and I think two or three hundred Indians were put on the rolls at that time. That is the last time the rolls were opened.

The grandfather of these four Indians volunteered in the Civil War from the South, and was killed in Kansas. Their grandmother, who was at least a half-blood, or nearly a full-blooded Indian, was murdered, according to the statement; and the children, including the mother of these children who are asking to be put on the rolls, went back to Oklahoma, but failed to get on the rolls, and they were neglected. Hearings were held before a subcommittee. It seems to the members of the committee that they are entitled to be placed on the rolls. Bills for the purpose were introduced in several Congresses, and we believe these Indians are entitled to consideration. After full hearings by the subcommittee, they reported to the full committee, and the full committee reported favorably to the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the strong recommendation against the bill, together with the accumulated evidence, which seems to justify the opposition of the Department, and the further statement in the report that various, quite contradictory claims have been made as to the status of these Indians and their origin, I feel constrained to object. I shall make further inquiry; and at the next call of the calendar, if I have no additional information, I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, CANNELTON, IND.

The bill (S. 2887) authorizing the Perry County Bridge Commission of Perry County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannelton, Ind., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Perry County Bridge Commission of Perry County, Ind., be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, at or near Cannelton, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Perry County Bridge Commission all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Perry County Bridge Commission is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

GRACE M'CLURE

The bill (H. R. 1292) for the relief of Grace McClure was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOBLE COUNTY (OHIO) AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

The bill (H. R. 4651) for the relief of the Noble County (Ohio) Agricultural Society, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE WILLIAM HENNING

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2125) for the relief of George William Henning, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to George William Henning in full settlement of all his claims against the Government of the United States for injuries received by him on the 14th day of March 1932, when an automobile, being driven by him in a lawful manner, was run into by an ambulance owned by the Navy Department of the United States, then and there being operated by one W. Thomas, a member of the United States Marine Corps, in a negligent and reckless manner: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this Act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this Act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JULIAN C. DORR

The bill (H. R. 4105) for the relief of Julian C. Dorr was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4838) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. May we have an explanation of this bill? Does any member of the Claims Committee care to explain it? [A pause.] Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3337) for the relief of James Akeroyd & Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HENRY C. ZELLER AND EDWARD G. ZELLER

The bill (S. 1139) for the relief of Henry C. Zeller and Edward G. Zeller with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income tax paid to the United States for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1916, and ending September 30, 1917, in excess of the amount of tax lawfully due for such period, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes. I will say to the Senator from New York that I understand the Treasury Department has reported adversely.

Mr. COPELAND. It did so a year ago; but, if the Senator will look above the Treasury Department's report, he will see that the Committee on Claims makes this positive statement:

The facts in this case disclose that the taxpayer did everything necessary to protect his rights to a refund for the admitted overpayment of taxes.

The relief sought in this bill is to permit the taxpayer to institute suit in the Court of Claims for the amount admittedly owing to the taxpayer and now in the hands of the Government.

Mr. KING. May I read what Mr. Gibbons, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, states?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. KING. He says:

Under the circumstances there appears to be no reason why any special treatment should be accorded this taxpayer. If, without regard to whether a timely claim may be amended, the claim filed in this case was not a claim in praesenti, as held by the Court, but one which was to become effective as such as at some future date, there is no more reason for making an exception to the statute of limitations in this case than there is in numerous other cases in which the taxpayers failed to present their claims until after they had become barred.

The Treasury Department opposes the enactment of H. R. 6649 for the reasons indicated above.

I have read only one paragraph from the rather long letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COPELAND. That letter was before the Committee on Claims; and if the Senator will turn to the first page of the report, he will find that it refers to the various steps which were taken to extend the period for filing claims. Then finally, in another case about which we have heard a good deal, a case which was reconsidered in the light of the decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Strong against the United States, suit was instituted in the district court, where the plaintiffs were defeated, and after denying a writ of certiorari in the case the Supreme Court granted a writ of certiorari to refer other cases involving precisely the same question.

Therefore the Committee on Claims took the view, as stated here, that the facts in this case disclose that the taxpayers actually did everything to protect their rights to a refund of an admitted overpayment of taxes. It seems to me that, as a matter of justice, the taxpayers should be permitted to go to the Court of Claims and establish their claim, if they have one.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask whether there has been a more recent statement by the Treasury Department in regard to this matter?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot say as to that. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is not here at this time, but he told me that the matter was discussed at considerable length in the Committee on Claims. I was not present, because I am not a member of that committee, but the Senator from Vermont told me they took the unanimous view that this was the proper action to be taken, apparently in view of some information more recent than the letter of the Acting Secretary, written more than a year ago.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall consent that the bill be passed, but with the understanding that the Senator or myself—and I hope he will do it—will communicate during the day with the Secretary of the Treasury and challenge attention to the former report; and if the Secretary of the Treasury still adheres to the position there taken, that the Senator, upon his own motion, will move to reconsider.

Mr. COPELAND. That is perfectly agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 15, after the word "overpayment", to strike out the words "with interest at 6 percent from the date of payment", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which suits may be instituted by Henry C. Zeller and Edward G. Zeller of the city of Buffalo, in the State of New York, doing business under the name and style of G. F. Zeller's Sons, against the United States for the recovery of any income tax paid to the United States for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1916, and ending September 30, 1917, in excess of the amount of tax lawfully due for said period, be, and the same is hereby, extended to October 1, 1935, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, and it is hereby authorized and directed to hear and determine on the merits any suit commenced therein against the United States prior to October 1, 1935, for the recovery of any overpayment of such taxes, any finding, determination, judgment, rule of law, or statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

And, if it shall be found in any such suit that such tax has been overpaid, the court shall render final judgment against the United States and in favor of said taxpayer for the amount of such overpayment, such judgment to be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. MILLER

The bill (H. R. 4811) for the relief of George W. Miller, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUFUS HUNTER BLACKWELL, JR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3230) for the relief of Rufus Hunter Blackwell, Jr., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$2,755.25" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Rufus Hunter Blackwell, Jr., of Waynesville, Haywood County, N. C., the sum of $2,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries sustained by the said Rufus Hunter Blackwell, Jr., on March 11, 1920, due to an airplane owned by the United States Government and operated by an officer of the United States Army, while engaged in practice flying at Taylor Field, Montgomery, Ala., striking the said Rufus Hunter Blackwell, Jr., in such a manner and way as to injure the said Rufus Hunter Blackwell, Jr., breaking his right leg, and caused him to be permanently injured: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN J. MORAN

The bill (H. R. 4610) for the relief of John J. Moran was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4146) for the relief of Mrs. Olin H. Reed was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES SZYMANSKI

The bill (H. R. 4034) for the relief of Charles Szymanski was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHIE CARTER

The bill (H. R. 3556) for the relief of Sophie Carter was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHMOND, FREDERICKSBURG & POTOMAC RAILROAD CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4808) for the relief of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it appears that this bill has already been passed, and it ought to be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that this is a different bill from the one to which the Senator refers. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEDICINE BOW NATIONAL FOREST, WYO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2695) to add certain lands to the Medicine Bow National Forest, Wyo., which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "law", to insert the words "and regulations", so as to read:

That the following-described lands are hereby added to the Medicine Bow National Forest, Wyo., and made subject to all laws and regulations—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 915, being Senate bill 2695.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the time the bill was previously called I asked for an explanation, which was not forthcoming. Since that time, however, the Senator from Wyoming has explained the matter to me, and I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2695) to add certain lands to the Medicine Bow National Forest, Wyo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 5, after the words "applicable to", to strike out the words "national forests" and insert "such forest", and in line 6, after the word "existing", to strike out "claims, locations, entries, or applications under the laws of the United States or the State of Wyoming, whether for homestead, mineral, rights-of-way, water rights and uses, or any purpose whatsoever, and subject to the right of any such claimant, locator, entryman, permittee, or applicant to the full use and employment of his lands, water, or", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands are hereby added to the Medicine Bow National Forest, Wyo., and made subject to all laws and regulations applicable to such forest, and subject to all valid existing rights:

Sections 4 to 9, inclusive; sections 17 to 19, inclusive, township 24 north, range 70 west, sixth principal meridian.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USE OF AMERICAN VESSELS IN COASTWISE TRADE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 115) to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 883), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 27. That no merchandise shall be transported by water, or by land and water, on penalty of forfeiture thereof, between points in the United States, including Districts, Territories, and possessions thereof embraced within the coastwise laws, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation, in any other vessel than a vessel built in and documented under the laws of the United States and owned by persons who are citizens of the United States, or vessels to which the privilege of engaging in the coastwise trade is extended by sections 18 or 22 of this act: Pro- vided, That no vessel having at any time acquired the lawful right to engage in the coastwise trade, either by virtue of having been built in, or documented under the laws of the United States, and later sold foreign in whole or in part, or placed under foreign registry, shall hereafter acquire the right to engage in the coastwise trade: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to merchandise transported between points within the continental United States, excluding Alaska, over through routes heretofore or hereafter recognized by the Interstate Commerce Commission for which routes rate tariffs have been or shall hereafter be filed with said Commission when such routes are in part over Canadian rail lines and their own or other connecting water facilities: Provided further, That this section shall not become effective upon the Yukon River until the Alaska Railroad shall be completed and the Shipping Board shall find that proper facilities will be furnished for transportation by persons citizens of the United States for properly handling the traffic: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to the transportation of merchandise loaded on railroad cars or to motor vehicles with or without trailers, and with their passengers or contents when accompanied by the operator thereof, when such railroad cars or motor vehicles are transported in any railroad car ferry operated between fixed termini on the Great Lakes as a part of a rail route, if such car ferry is owned by a common carrier by water and operated as part of a rail route with the approval of such common carrier by water, or its predecessor, was owned or controlled by a common carrier by rail prior to June 5, 1920, and if the stock of the common carrier owning such car ferry is, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, now owned or controlled by any common carrier by rail and if such car ferry is built in and documented under the laws of the United States."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the explanation of the bill is contained in a single sentence which the Senator will find on page 4 of the report from the Department of Commerce. I read:

> The effect of the proposed amendment will be to exclude un-American vessels, all of which are obsolete or otherwise undesirable, from again acquiring the right to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States and will thus tend to stimulate construction of new tonnage in American yards.

In other words, the sole purpose is to prevent the repatriation of old ships which originally qualified for the coastwise trade and have been sold and are trying to return.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAST GUARD STATION AT TAFT, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 501) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Oregon at or near Taft, Oreg., which was read, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to establish a Coast Guard station on the coast of Oregon, at or near Taft, Oreg., at such point as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oregon whether the Department did not report against this bill?

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President; the Coast Guard Service is in favor of the bill. The Treasury itself is in favor of it. The service interests which favor the bill would like to have the station constructed. There is a report submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] just following the bill, and I read from the report this language:

> The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the annexed communication.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I read this from the report of Secretary Morgenthau:

> I, therefore, recommend against the passage of the bill at this time.

Let me ask the Senator: What will the station cost?

Mr. STEIWER. It is a small station, and the cost will not be very considerable. I think the Senator from New York can advise the Senator better than can I.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is a very small sum, I should say fifteen or twenty thousand dollars. The only objection the Treasury Department had to the bill was that it directed that this work be done, and the Senator well knows how under the financial plan of the President this or that is objected to. There is full agreement on the part of all concerned that it should be done. The Secretary of the Treasury did suggest that the words "and directed" be stricken out, so that there would be merely an authorization.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would not that be the better way to pass it? Would not the Senator accept an amendment to strike out the words "and directed"?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I think that if that should be done the influence of the Budget would probably prevent the construction of the station.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it will cost only a small amount, I imagine it would be very much easier to have it established. What sort of a place is Taft; how large a place?

Mr. STEIWER. The place itself is a small community, but it is located on a little bay called "Siletz Bay." The report of the Coast Guard Service discloses that in 1934 a neighboring station, which is too far away to render effective service, was called upon 11 times to render aid to vessels in distress in the neighborhood of the mouth of Siletz Bay. In the last 10 years four and a half million dollars of commerce went out of that little bay. I know there is a very real necessity for this station.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will accept an amendment to strike out the words "and directed", I will agree to the bill being passed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before the Senator presses that suggestion, let me say that this is a life-saving matter; the station is for the saving of life, and the Coast Guard takes the view that it should be established.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it wants it, it will be constructed, but authorizing it is as far as we ought to go, because we do not know of our own knowledge that lives will be saved by the establishment of the station. The Department will know about it, so let us authorize them to do it. I should think that would be all that would be necessary. I hope the Senator will accept the amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. I am reluctant to do so, and I hope the Senator will not insist upon it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think we ought to build a station there over the better judgment of the Department, or those who have charge of it. If the Department is in favor of it, if they are authorized to do it, I have no doubt it will be established.

Mr. STEIWER. Even though the Department is in favor of it, if the Bureau of the Budget are in opposition to it, they will prevent it being done. This bill, if I may say so to the Senator from Tennessee, meets the desires of the Coast Guard Service.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we authorize it and the recommendation is sent to us by the Department, it will certainly be provided for by the Committee on Appropriations, as the Senator knows, since he is a member of that committee. He knows it will be done if they recommend it, and I hope he will accept the amendment to strike out the words "and directed", because we do not know of our own knowledge that this ought to be done.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I do not want this little bill defeated on account of a matter of that sort, and while I am reluctant to accept the amendment, I will do so in order that the bill may be enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the word "authorized", it is proposed to strike out the words "and directed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Oregon at or near Taft, Oreg."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask a favor of the Senate. In 10 minutes I shall be compelled to attend a meeting of the members of the Committee on Finance. There are a number of bills on the calendar which were unanimously reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. If there is any objection to any of them, of course, I shall not ask for their consideration. I ask unanimous consent that I may recur to those bills while the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], a member of the committee, and I are here, and take them up out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 929, being Senate Joint Resolution 144. I am sure there is no objection to the passage of the joint resolution. Will the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] object if we consider it before he takes up the District of Columbia bills?

The bill simply extends the time of the Railroad Retirement Board for a period of 60 days and authorizes an appropriation simply to enable the business of the organization to be wound up.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 144) to provide for the payment of compensation and expenses of the Railroad Retirement Board as established and operated pursuant to section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act of June 27, 1934, and to provide for the winding up of its affairs and the disposition of its property and records, and to make an appropriation for such purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have not had time to read the joint resolution. What does it provide?

Mr. WAGNER. It simply extends the time of the Board. Under the Supreme Court Decision the Railway Retirement Board was abolished. The law was declared unconstitutional. During the time the Board functioned it collected a number of records and a great amount of data, some of which must be transferred to other departments and some of which must be returned to the sources from which they were received.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would take about 60 days to complete this work?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; it has been estimated that it would take about 60 days to complete the work. The joint resolution authorizes an appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the joint resolution provide for the abolition of the Board at the end of the 60 days?

Mr. WAGNER. It provides that the Board shall continue for 60 days. In other words, it is now abolished. The joint resolution simply revives it for a period of 60 days.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have examined the joint resolution hurriedly and have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas the Railroad Retirement Board was established and organized as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government by and pursuant to section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act, which act has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be invalid; and

Whereas the Railroad Retirement Board in the performance of its duties has acquired valuable data, records, information, and experience which should be utilized in determining the policy of Congress regarding the subjects of employment by railroads and the retirement of employees of railroads; and

Whereas the Board has records of individual employments which are of great value and should be preserved, and has, in the course of its work, received valuable records and documents which must be returned to their owners after the information contained therein shall have been noted and photostatic copies where necessary, shall have been made: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Railroad Retirement Board as established in section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act (Public, No. 485, 73d Cong.) and the appointment and compensation of its members and the employment and compensation of its staff are hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed to all intents and purposes as if the provisions of section 9 relating thereto had on the day of their enactment been enacted as a statute distinct and separate from any other provisions of the Railroad Retirement Act aforesaid; and no member of the Board or of its staff shall be liable for any action heretofore taken within the terms of the authority sought to be granted by the Railroad Retirement Act.

SEC. 2. The Railroad Retirement Board as established by and pursuant to section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act and section 1 hereof is hereby continued for a period of 60 days from the enactment hereof for the purpose of liquidating its affairs; returning documents in its possession to those from whom they were procured and whose property they are, after recording therefrom such information as in its judgment should be preserved or making photostatic copies thereof, where necessary; arranging for turning over the records, papers, and property of the Board to such agency as the President shall designate; and making a report upon its activities and experience to the President for transmission to Congress.

SEC. 3. The Board shall maintain such offices, use such equipment, furnishings, supplies, services, and facilities and employ such persons as in its judgment may be necessary for the proper discharge of its duties.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $35,000 to pay to the Board and its employees for services heretofore rendered on, prior to, and subsequent to May 6, 1935, and for services to be rendered during the next 60 days after the enactment hereof, the compensation to which they would have been entitled for such services if the Railroad Retirement Act had been held constitutional, and to pay any expenses heretofore incurred and not yet paid and the expenses necessary in carrying out this joint resolution.

SEC. 5. The Board is hereby authorized and directed to refund to its past and present employees and to its members all compensation earned by them but withheld as employee contributions to the railroad retirement fund and deposited to the credit of said fund in the Treasury, and said fund is hereby appropriated and made available for such refundments accordingly.

The preamble was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMOKE NUISANCE IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy which has been extended by the Senate. I first invite the attention of the Senate to Calendar No. 975, being Senate bill 2034. This bill has received the consideration of the committee and the representatives of the various departments of the District of Columbia, and it has been unanimously reported.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2034) to prevent the fouling of the atmosphere in the District of Columbia by smoke and other foreign substances, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 1, line 3, after the enacting clause, to strike out:

That the emission of unnecessary smoke, noxious gases, cinders, or dust into the atmosphere within the District of Columbia is hereby declared to be unlawful and a menace to public health and safety.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That no person shall cause, suffer, or allow dense smoke to be discharged from any building, vessel, stationary or locomotive engine, or motor vehicle, place, or premises within the District of Columbia or upon the waters adjacent thereto, within the jurisdiction of said District. All persons participating in any violation of this provision, either as proprietors, owners, tenants, managers, superintendents, captains, engineers, firemen, or motor-vehicle operators, or otherwise, shall be severally liable therefor. The owners, lessees, tenants, occupants, and managers of every building, vessel, or place in or upon which a locomotive or stationary engine, furnace, or boiler is used shall cause all ashes, cinders, rubbish, dirt, and refuse to be removed to some proper place, so that the same shall not accumulate, nor shall any persons cause, suffer, or allow cinders, dust, gas, steam, or offensive or noisome odors to escape or to be discharged from any such building, vessel, or place, to the detriment or annoyance of any person or persons not being therein or thereupon engaged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 18, after the word "reasonable", to insert "classifications and", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make and promulgate reasonable classifications and regulations for the installation and operation of combustion and all other devices susceptible for use in such manner as to violate the purposes of this act, and the said Commissioners may from time to time alter, amend, or rescind such regulations and promulgate such amended or additional regulations as they may in their discretion deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 9, after the word "direct", to insert the words "the police department, the health department, or"; in line 11, after the words "service as", to strike out "inspector or otherwise" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "necessary"; in line 12, after the word "enforcement", to strike out "as they may deem necessary"; and at the end of the section to insert "Appropriations are hereby authorized to be made to carry out the purposes of this act, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to include in their annual estimates provision for the expenses incident to such purposes and for personnel subject to the limitations of the Personnel Classification Act of 1923", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be responsible for the enforcement of this act and may direct the police department, the health department, or any officer or employee of the government of the District of Columbia to perform such service as necessary in connection with such enforcement. Appropriations are hereby authorized to be made to carry out the purposes of this act, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to include in their annual estimates provision for the expenses incident to such purposes and for personnel subject to the limitations of the Personnel Classification Act of 1923.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall cause, suffer, or allow dense smoke to be discharged from any building, vessel, stationary or locomotive engine, or motor vehicle, place, or premises within the District of Columbia or upon the waters adjacent thereto, within the jurisdiction of said District. All persons participating in any violation of this provision, either as proprietors, owners, tenants, managers, superintendents, captains, engineers, firemen, or motor-vehicle operators, or otherwise, shall be severally liable therefor. The owners, lessees, tenants, occupants, and managers of every building, vessel, or place in or upon which a locomotive or stationary engine, furnace, or boiler is used shall cause all ashes, cinders, rubbish, dirt, and refuse to be removed to some proper place, so that the same shall not accumulate, nor shall any persons cause, suffer, or allow cinders, dust, gas, steam, or offensive or noisome odors to escape or to be discharged from any such building, vessel, or place, to the detriment or annoyance of any person or persons not being therein or thereupon engaged.

SEC. 2. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make and promulgate reasonable classifications and regulations for the installation and operation of combustion and all other devices susceptible for use in such manner as to violate the purposes of this act, and the said Commissioners may from time to time alter, amend, or rescind such regulations and promulgate such amended or additional regulations as they may in their discretion deem necessary.

SEC. 3. Enforcement of this act shall be upon information by the corporation counsel in the police court of the District of Columbia. Any person convicted of violating this act or any regulation of the Commissioners made hereunder shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $500 for each and every such offense.

SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be responsible for the enforcement of this act and may direct the police department, the health department, or any officer or employee of the government of the District of Columbia to perform such service as necessary in connection with such enforcement. Appropriations are hereby authorized to be made to carry out the purposes of this act, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to include in their annual estimates provision for the expenses incident to such purposes and for personnel subject to the limitations of the Personnel Classification Act of 1923.

SEC. 5. All provisions of the act approved February 2, 1899 (30 Stat. 812, ch. 79, sec. 5), which are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

ABANDONMENT OF RAILWAY STATION

Mr. KING. I invite attention, Mr. President, to Calendar No. 981, Senate bill 2830. The bill merely provides for the abandonment of a substation where only a few persons are accommodated, and the provision of substitute facilities and proper accommodations for passengers. It is unanimously reported from the committee.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2830) to repeal sections 1, 2, and 3 of Public Law No. 203, Sixtieth Congress, approved February 3, 1909, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "repealed", to strike out "and the substation and facilities therein provided for may be abandoned and discontinued without any further or other authority" and to insert certain words, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1, 2, and 3 of Public Law No. 203, Sixtieth Congress, approved February 3, 1909, are hereby repealed; and, upon the completion by it of the substitute facilities authorized by section 2 hereof, the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. is authorized, without any further or other authority, to abandon and remove the Seventh Street substation built and maintained by it pursuant to the requirements of said act of February 3, 1909, and to abandon the ticket agency and baggage accommodations maintained by it pursuant to the requirements of said act.

SEC. 2. That in lieu of the said substation and facilities maintained at the intersection of Seventh Street and C Street SW., in the city of Washington, the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. is authorized to construct and maintain on the train platform an enclosed waiting room for passengers, with convenient means of ingress and egress leading from and to the street level below.

SEC. 3. That the area in square south of 463 on the map of the city of Washington heretofore used for station purposes shall revert to the District of Columbia upon the completion of these improvements: Provided, That the said Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. shall construct and maintain thereon, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, adequate walkways to the adjacent streets.

SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA OFFICIAL BONDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2831) to amend (1) an act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; (2) an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia"; to regulate the giving of official bonds by officers and employees of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill merely provides for existing bonding provisions with respect to the officials of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "empowered", to strike out the comma and the words "any statute to the contrary notwithstanding", and at the end of the section to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved June 11, 1878 (20 Stat. 103, ch. 180), entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia", be, and the same hereby is, amended by repealing the provision "and shall, before entering upon the duties of the office, each give bond in the sum of $50,000, with surety as is required by existing law", and said section is further amended by adding at the end thereof: "The said Commissioners are hereby authorized and empowered to determine which officers and employees of the District of Columbia shall hereafter be required to give or renew bond for the faithful discharge of their duties and to fix the penalty of any such bond: Provided, That this power of the Commissioners shall not apply to officers and employees who receive, disburse, account for, or otherwise are responsible for the handling of money, and whose bonds are now fixed by law. The provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1909, and for other purposes', approved August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. 118, 125), relating to rates of premiums for bonds for officers and employees of the United States shall be, and are hereby made, applicable to the rates of premiums for bonds of officers and employees of the government of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved June 11, 1878 (20 Stat. 103, ch. 180), entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia", be, and the same hereby is, amended by repealing the provision "and shall, before entering upon the duties of the office, each give bond in the sum of $50,000, with surety as is required by existing law", and said section is further amended by adding at the end thereof: "The said Commissioners are hereby authorized and empowered to determine which officers and employees of the District of Columbia shall hereafter be required to give, or renew, bond for the faithful discharge of their duties and to fix the penalty of any such bond: Provided, That this power of the Commissioners shall not apply to officers and employees who receive, disburse, account for, or otherwise are responsible for the handling of money and whose bonds are now fixed by law. The provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1909, and for other purposes', approved August 5, 1909 (36 Stat. 118, 125), relating to rates of premiums for bonds for officers and employees of the United States, shall be, and are hereby made, applicable to the rates of premiums for bonds of officers and employees of the government of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 2. That section 1578, chapter LV, of the act approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1424), entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", is hereby amended so as to read:

"The surveyor shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before the Commissioners that he will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of his office, which oath shall be deposited with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 3. That section 1592 of said Code of Law for the District of Columbia is amended so as to read:

"The assistant surveyor shall take the same oath his principal is required to take, and may, during the continuance of his office, discharge and perform any of the official duties of his principal."

SEC. 4. That said Code of Law for the District of Columbia is further amended by repealing in its entirety section 1597 thereof.

SEC. 5. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senate passed Senate bill 2831, relating to official bonds. The House has passed a bill textually the same, and has transmitted it to the Senate. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed, and then I shall ask that the House bill be considered and passed, and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the House bill identically the same as the Senate bill which we have just passed?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which Senate bill 2831 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. I now move that House bill 7765 be be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the House bill be passed.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7765) to amend (1) an act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; (2) an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia"; to regulate the giving of official bonds by officers and employees of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2831 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2831 will be indefinitely postponed.

DR. RONALD A. COX

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2939) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Ronald A. Cox, which was read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill is reported from the committee by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] without amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the bill apply to only one person?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this man was licensed. When the law went into effect he was away from the city for a short time, and was entirely unaware of the change in the law. The bill provides that he may be licensed under the new law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to issue a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Ronald A. Cox, Washington, D. C., in accordance with the provisions of the first paragraph of section 24 of the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENT FOR ROADWAYS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7526) to amend the act approved February 20, 1931 (Public, No. 703, 71st Cong.), entitled "An act to provide for special assessments for the paving of roadways and the laying of curbs and gutters."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill is very simple. It merely provides that there shall be a date beyond which persons may not claim that they have paid assessments.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SEVENTIETH NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 201) giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the Seventieth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in the District of Columbia in the month of September 1936, and for other purposes, incident to said encampment, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a House joint resolution which has been passed by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was in section 5, page 6, to insert a proviso at the end of the section, as follows:

And provided further, That any such buildings, parks, reservations, and other public spaces which shall be used or occupied by the erection of stands or other structures, or otherwise, shall be promptly restored to their condition before such occupancy, and the said citizens' executive committee shall execute and deliver to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a satisfactory bond with a penalty of $10,000 to secure such prompt restoration and to indemnify the District of Columbia for all damage of any kind whatsoever sustained by reason of any such use or occupancy.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the Superintendent of National Capital Parks, subject to the approval of the Director of National Park Service, is hereby authorized to grant permits to the citizens' executive committee for the entertainment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the use of any reservation or other public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the seventieth national encampment, in the month of September 1936, which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injuries upon such reservations or public spaces, or statuary therein; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands and platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said citizens' executive committee and in accordance with plans and designs to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That any such buildings, parks, reservations, and other public spaces which shall be used or occupied by the erection of stands or other structures, or otherwise, shall be promptly restored to their condition before such occupancy, and the said citizens' executive committee shall execute and deliver to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a satisfactory bond with a penalty of $10,000 to secure such prompt restoration and to indemnify the District of Columbia for all damage of any kind whatsoever sustained by reason of any such use or occupancy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas at the close of the Civil War the Grand Army of the Republic marched up historic Pennsylvania Avenue while the spirited tramp, tramp, tramp of their feet became the Nation's marching song, and again in 1915, when their ranks were beginning to thin, the Capital City once more welcomed the Boys in Blue as their footsteps again resounded to the old battle tunes; and

Whereas the ranks of the 300,000 have dwindled away to hundreds, most of whom are in their ninetieth year; and

Whereas it is the greatest desire of their hearts to hold their seventieth national encampment in the Capital of their country in 1936, and march, for the last time, up Pennsylvania Avenue; and it should be our pleasure and privilege to invite them here and show respect to the last of our Civil War veterans, who, as our President in his last message to them said, "have lived to see the end of sectionalism and the final healing of the scars of conflict and the achievement of a true unity of national purposes": Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make such special regulations for the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, which will take place in the District of Columbia from September 21 to September 27, 1936, as they shall deem advisable for the preservation of public order and the protection of life and property, to be in force 1 week prior to said encampment, during said encampment, and 1 week subsequent thereto. Such special regulations shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers of the District of Columbia, and no penalty prescribed for the violation of such regulations shall be enforced until 5 days after such publication. Any person violating any of the aforesaid regulations or the aforesaid schedule of fares shall, upon conviction thereof in the police court of the said District, be liable for such offense to a fine not to exceed $100, and in default of payment of such fine to imprisonment in the workhouse (or jail) of said District for not longer than 60 days. This resolution shall take effect immediately upon its approval, and the sum of $15,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia, in equal parts, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this joint resolution, $1,000 of which shall be available for the construction, maintenance, and operation of public comfort stations and information booths, under the direction of said Commissioners.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the citizens' executive committee for the entertainment of the seventieth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to stretch suitable conductors, with sufficient supports wherever necessary, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination within the District of Columbia: Provided, That the said conductors shall not be used for the conveying of electrical currents after September 27, 1936, and shall, with their supports, be fully and entirely removed from the streets and avenues of the said city of Washington on or before the 16th of October 1936: Provided further, That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall see that the provisions of this resolution are enforced; that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public; and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized: Provided further, That no expense or damage on account of or due to stretching, operation, or removing of the said temporary overhead conductors shall be incurred by the United States or the District of Columbia: And provided further, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illumination purposes over any park or reservation in the District of Columbia that the work of erection and removal of said wires shall be under the supervision of the official in charge of said park or reservation.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized to loan to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of street decorations, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of decorating the streets of the city of Washington, D. C., on the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, 1936, such of the United States ensigns, flags (except battle flags), signal numbers, and so forth, belonging to the Government of the United States, as in their judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the encampment. The loan of the said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, and so forth, to said chairman shall not take place prior to the 11th day of September and shall be returned by him by the 16th of October 1936.

SEC. 4. That for the protection and return of said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., the said chairman or his successor in office shall execute and deliver to the President of the United States, or to such officer as he may designate, a satisfactory bond in the penalty of $50,000 to secure just payment for any loss or damage to said ensigns, flags, and signal numbers not necessarily incident to the use specified.

SEC. 5. That the Superintendent of National Capital Parks, subject to the approval of the Director of National Park Service, is hereby authorized to grant permits to the citizens' executive committee for the entertainment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the use of any reservation or other public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the seventieth national encampment, in the month of September 1936, which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injuries upon such reservations or public spaces, or statuary therein; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands and platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said citizens' executive committee and in accordance with plans and designs to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That any such buildings, parks, reservations, and other public spaces which shall be used or occupied by the erection of stands or other structures, or otherwise, shall be promptly restored to their condition before such occupancy, and the said citizens' executive committee shall execute and deliver to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a satisfactory bond with a penalty of $10,000 to secure such prompt restoration and to indemnify the District of Columbia for all damage of any kind whatsoever sustained by reason of any such use or occupancy.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to loan to the chairman of the medical department of the seventieth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in the month of September 1936, such hospital tents and camp appliances and other necessaries, hospital furniture, and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, drivers, stretchers, attendants, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as in his judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the encampment: Provided, That the said chairman, or his successor in said office, shall indemnify the War Department for any loss to such hospital tents and appliances as aforesaid not necessarily incident to such use.

SEC. 7. The Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to establish a special schedule of fares applicable to public conveyances in said District during the period aforesaid.

The preamble was agreed to.

MAINE AVENUE IN THE DISTRICT

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 280) for the designation of a street or avenue in the Mall to be known as "Maine Avenue" was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask that the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to recur to Calendar No. 986, being House Joint Resolution 280. I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] objected to that bill. Am I correct about that?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. That bill was amended in the committee so that the particular locality for the street or avenue was not designated, but it was said—

That in honor of the State of Maine an avenue of the city of Washington, D. C., of location and importance in keeping with dignity and prominence of that State to be selected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, with the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, shall hereafter bear the name of "Maine Avenue."

Mr. BULKLEY. I should like to have the joint resolution go over for one calendar call, and I shall be glad to help the Senator with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5809) to amend an act entitled "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia", which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 1, beginning in line 3, to strike out "That section 23 of the act entitled 'An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia', approved January 24, 1934, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to be lettered (k) and to read as follows: 'SEC. 3. Subsections'" and to insert "That subsections", so as to make the bill read:

That subsections (g) and (h) of section 11 are amended by adding at the end of the first paragraph of code the following: "All alcoholic beverages offered for sale or sold by the holder of such licenses may be displayed and dispensed in full sight of the purchaser."

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. This bill is to provide that a person who buys liquor at one of the places where liquor is dispensed may have it mixed in his presence instead of behind a hidden curtain, where he does not know what he is getting or how insanitary the conditions may be. The matter was argued at great length by the committee, and this was deemed a wise change in the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7235) to amend the act entitled "An act to make provision for suitable quarters for certain Government services at El Paso, Tex., and for other purposes", was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think we ought to have an explanation of the bill. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is not here. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MAILING OF THREATENING LETTERS

The bill (S. 2223) to amend section 1 of the act of July 8, 1932, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as to Calendar No. 919, there has been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads by the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] a companion bill, House bill 6717, Calendar No. 946. I therefore suggest, in the interest of time and the saving of what would otherwise be lost motion, that the Senate, if it is minded to pass the bill, consider House bill 6717 and indefinitely postpone Senate bill 2223. Am I correct in my statement, I will ask the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. A similar bill has been passed by the House.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill provides, among other things, that it shall be a crime to send threatening letters through the mail. It is one of the so-called "antigangster" bills. The bill, which was drawn by the Department of Justice, provides that anyone who opens communication through the mail with another threatening to kidnap, or to accuse a person of a crime, or to do him bodily injury unless he pays a sum of money, shall be punished. As I have said, if the Senate is minded to pass such legislation, we might consider the House bill reported by the Senator from Tennessee, being Calendar No. 946, House bill 6717, and postpone Calendar No. 919, Senate bill 2223.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6717) to amend section 1 of the act of July 8, 1932, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 2223 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection Senate bill 2223 will be indefinitely postponed.

WATER FROM GOVERNMENT MAIN AT CASCADE LOCKS, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2799) to provide for licensing the taking of water from the Government-owned main at Cascade Locks, Oreg.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I am confronted with the necessity of asking permission to offer a slight amendment to this bill, and, if the Senate will permit me, I should like to explain before offering the amendment the occasion for it. Cascade Locks until recently was an unincorporated town in Oregon. In order that it might provide for protection and that an agency might be created to use the water for fire protection, there was set up at that place the Cascade Locks Rural Fire Protection District, organized under the laws of the State of Oregon. The bill was introduced in order to give permission to this district to take water for fire protection purposes only from a main which the Government has for a long time maintained at that point. Subsequent to the introduction of the bill, the people at Cascade Locks proceeded with the organization of the city of Cascade, and a vote was recently had. I am now advised that under that vote the city has been organized, and is now an entity. The same people who asked for this bill now have requested that the bill be amended so that the right will run not to the Rural Fire Protection District but to the city of Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is the same community, and the same amount of protection will be afforded?

Mr. STEIWER. Exactly, and it is merely to provide that the right shall be vested in the proper authority. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, before the word "Cascades", it is proposed to insert the words "city of"; and on page 1, lines 5 and 6, to strike out "Rural Fire Protection District, organized under the laws of the State of" and to insert a comma, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to grant permission, on such terms as he may deem reasonable, to the city of Cascade Locks, Oreg., to make connection with the Government-owned water main at Cascade Locks and take water therefrom for use for fire-protection purposes only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AVIATION FIELD AT VALPARAISO, FLA.

The bill (S. 3018) to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire by donation land at Valparaiso, in Okaloosa County, Fla., for aviation field, military, or other public purposes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by donation approximately 1,460 acres of land at Valparaiso, in Okaloosa County, Fla., for aviation field, military, or other public purposes: Provided, That in the event the donor is unable to perfect title to any land tendered as a donation, condemnation of such land is authorized in the name of the United States, and payment of any and all awards for title to such land as is condemned, together with the cost of suit, shall be made by the donor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a statement regarding that bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3018. LAND AT VALPARAISO, IN OKALOOSA COUNTY, FLA., FOR AVIATION FIELD AND OTHER PURPOSES

This bill is recommended by the War Department. It merely authorizes the Secretary of War to acquire by donation approximately 1,460 acres of land at Valparaiso, in Okaloosa County, Fla., for aviation field, military, or other public purposes. The bill carries a proviso clause to the effect that in the event the donor is unable to perfect title to any land tendered as a donation, condemnation of such land is authorized in the name of the United States, and that payment of any and all awards for title to such land as is condemned, together with the cost of suit, shall be made by the donor.

There has been a need for some time of a range for aerial gunnery and bombing practice on the Gulf coast, and the Department in its report points out that a suitable site has been located on the property of the Valparaiso Realty Co., near Valparaiso, Fla. The owner has offered to donate to the United States the land in fee simple, or about 1,460 acres. This measure merely authorizes its acceptance for the purposes stated.

SAMMAMISH RIVER, WASH.

The bill (S. 2930) to provide a preliminary examination of the Sammamish River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Sammamish River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

NISQUALLY RIVER, WASH.

The bill (S. 2933) to provide a preliminary examination of the Nisqually River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Nisqually River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

CEDAR RIVER, WASH.

The bill (S. 2938) to provide a preliminary examination of the Cedar River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Cedar River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, MIAMI, MO.

The bill (S. 2950) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Saline, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Miami, Mo., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Saline, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Miami, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2321) for the relief of S. M. Price was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have an explanation of that bill. In the absence of the Senator who introduced it I will ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WALTER C. PRICE AND JOSEPH C. LESAGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2751) for the relief of Walter C. Price and Joseph C. Lesage.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the consideration of the amendment, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Did the postmaster have a bond?

Mr. NEELY. He did; but the penalty of the bond was not sufficient to cover the loss which the Government had sustained.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is not a bonding company bill?

Mr. NEELY. It is not. Its purpose is to relieve two innocent men who were improperly held responsible for the defalcation of a dishonest post-office clerk.

Mr. McKELLAR. As a rule, postmasters and their assistants are bonded by a bonding company, and the practice is very frequent, after a defalcation has occurred, that the postmaster or other postal employee comes forward and asks for the passage of a bill for relief, when the bill is not really for his relief but for the relief of the bonding company which signed the bond. That is not the case here, is it?

Mr. NEELY. It is not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I request that my amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On line 4 it is proposed to change the spelling of the name from "Lesage" to "Le Sage", and at the end of the bill to insert the following new section:

The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of Walter C. Price, former postmaster at Huntington, W. Va., with the sum of $10,428.24, which amount is charged against said account as the result of embezzlement of money order funds by Samuel T. Shawver, former clerk in charge of the money-order section at said post office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Walter C. Price and Joseph C. Le Sage."

MEMORIAL TO FOURTH DIVISION, AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) to provide for the erection of a suitable memorial to the Fourth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of the National Park Service be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the Fourth Division Memorial Association, American Expeditionary Forces, through Maj. Gen. George H. Cameron, United States Army, retired, president, or his successors in office, for the erection as a gift to the people of the United States on public grounds in the District of Columbia, a memorial to the Fourth Division: Provided, That the design and location for the memorial shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts: Provided further, That such monument shall be erected under the supervision of the Director of the National Park Service, of the Department of the Interior, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of said monument.

WIDOWS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES KILLED IN LINE OF DUTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2488) for the relief of the widows of an inspector and certain special agents of the Division of Investigation, Department of Justice, killed in line of duty, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", strike out "$12,000" and insert "$5,000"; and on page 2, after line 9, to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 each to the following-named widows of an inspector and certain special agents of the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice killed in line of their official duties:

LaVon C. Cowley, widow of Inspector Samuel P. Cowley, killed near Chicago, November 28, 1934;

Regina Caffrey, widow of Raymond J. Caffrey, special agent, killed at Kansas City, Mo., June 17, 1933;

Gladys Gage Surratt, widow of Rupert V. Surratt, special agent, killed near Landis, N. C., October 8, 1933;

Mary E. Baum, widow of W. Carter Baum, special agent, killed in Rhinelander, Wis., April 23, 1934; and Genevieve Hollis, widow of Herman E. Hollis, special agent, killed near Chicago, November 27, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain how this bill arises?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this is not my bill, but the Senator will see that it is for the relief of the widows of an inspector and certain special agents of the Division of Investigation, Department of Justice, who have been killed in the line of duty.

Mr. McKELLAR. One inspector and four of his assistants?

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is correct. I am offering an amendment to this bill to include the widow of a Secret Service operator who was killed in the line of duty on May 24, 1935.

Chief Moran, of the Secret Service Division, is favorable to this amendment. The amendment I desire to offer is to add the name of Ann Godby, widow of Robert L. Godby, operative in the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, who was killed in line of duty at Buffalo, N. Y., May 24, 1935; and if the amendment shall be agreed to, I will then move to amend the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the numerals "1934", it is proposed to insert "and Ann Godby, widow of Robert L. Godby, operative in the Secret Service Division, Treasury Department, who was killed in line of duty at Buffalo, N. Y., on May 24, 1935."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COPELAND, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the widows of an inspector and certain special agents of the Division of Investigation, Department of Justice, and operative in the Secret Service Division, Department of the Treasury, killed in line of duty."

DUWAMISH RIVER, WASH.

The bill (S. 2934) to provide a preliminary examination of the Duwamish River, Wash., with a view to control its floods, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of Duwamish, River, Wash., with a view to control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1633) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator from Louisiana secured consent that the bill should be passed over when reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that was the understanding, and the bill will be passed over.

STATIONS AND DEPOTS FOR ARMY AIR CORPS

The bill (H. R. 7022) to authorize the selection, construction, installation, and modification of permanent stations and depots for the Army Air Corps, and frontier air-defense bases generally, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the bill seems to involve a large sum of money. I wish we could have an explanation of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this bill passed the House of Representatives on June 5, 1935, my recollection is, without a dissenting vote. Under its provisions the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to determine in all strategic areas of the United States, including those of Alaska and our oversea possessions and holdings, the location of such additional permanent Air Corps stations and depots as he deems essential, in connection with the existing Air Corps stations and depots and the enlargement of the same when necessary, for the effective peace-time training of the General Headquarters Air Force and the Air Corps components of our oversea garrisons.

In determining the locations of new stations and depots the measure provides that consideration shall be given to the following regions for the respective purposes indicated: (1) The Atlantic northeast: To provide for training in cold weather and in fog; (2) the Atlantic southeast and Carribean areas: To permit training in long-range operations, especially those incident to reinforcing the Panama Canal; (3) the Southeastern States: To provide a depot essential to the maintenance of the General Headquarters Air Force; (4) the Pacific Northwest: To establish and maintain air communication with Alaska; (5) Alaska: For training under conditions of extreme cold; (6) the Rocky Mountain area: To provide a depot essential to the maintenance of the General Headquarters Air Force, and to afford, in addition, opportunity for training in operations from fields in high altitudes; and (7) such intermediate stations as will provide for transcontinental movements incident to the concentration of the General Headquarters Air Force for maneuvers.

Section 4 of the bill authorizes to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums of money as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the purposes of this act, including the expenses incident to the necessary surveys. The bill provides that provisions of section 1136, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 10, par. 1339), shall not apply to construction of aforesaid stations and depots. (This section of the Revised Statutes provides that where Army construction exceeds $20,000, detailed estimates must first be submitted to Congress, a special appropriation made, and authority granted for the construction.)

Mr. McKELLAR. Is this the proposal to build airports along the Canadian border about which the newspapers had something to say recently?

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill perhaps originated that discussion. There are no specifications here.

Mr. McKELLAR. It authorizes an appropriation of $110,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not think so.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me an appropriation of that large sum at this time ought to be carefully considered. It ought to be postponed and taken up when we have more time to discuss it. I hope the Senator will let it go over. I dislike to object to any bill the Senator presents, but I hope he will let it go over until the next time we call the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is mistaken about the amount involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. The estimated cost is $110,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill merely authorizes to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the purposes of the bill. It all remains for the Secretary of War to select the locations hereafter. It depends on the appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is another feature to be considered. The War Department has a large amount of money remaining, out of the big authorization of several months ago, with which it may build airports if it so desires. It seems to me, where the estimated cost of such a project is the enormous sum of $110,000,000, it ought not to be passed without careful consideration. At any rate, I shall be glad to discuss it with the Senator if he will let the bill go over at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, if the Senator desires to object, I can do nothing but yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator knows how much I dislike to object to anything he asks. I am very much devoted to the Senator and I dislike to object.

Mr. FLETCHER. I appreciate that. It is an important bill. It passed the House without a dissenting vote. However, I shall be glad to discuss it with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for letting it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

SAN FRANCISCO AND FORT BAKER MILITARY RESERVATIONS ROADS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2175) to grant to the State of California a retrocession of jurisdiction over certain rights-of-way granted to the State of California over certain roads about to be constructed in the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation and Fort Baker Military Reservation, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That there is hereby granted to the State of California a retrocession of jurisdiction over the rights-of-way covered by a certain grant from the Secretary of War to the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District, of California, dated February 13, 1931, to extend, maintain, and operate State roads across the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation and the Fort Baker Military Reservation, as heretofore or hereafter amended by the Secretary of War, subject to all of the terms and conditions contained in said permit as so granted and any amendments thereof as aforesaid. The land and premises over which such retrocession of jurisdiction is hereby granted shall be the whole of the rights-of-way so granted by said permit and any amendments thereof, throughout their entire length and width, and for the entire distance granted therein, together with the land crossed by any toll bridge that may be erected by such Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District to connect the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation with the Fort Baker Military Reservation, and embracing the said toll bridge with its approach roads over the rights-of-way so granted by said permit and any amendments thereof.

SEC. 2. Should the United States assume exclusive control and management of said bridge and roads, as provided in said permit and any amendments thereof, the jurisdiction herein retroceded shall be suspended and revest in the United States for the duration of such control and management. Whenever the State of California shall cease to occupy said rights-of-way and land for the purpose authorized in said permit and any amendments thereof, then the same, including all jurisdiction thereover, shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 3. The retrocession of jurisdiction herein granted shall not take effect until the same is accepted by the Legislature of the State of California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSAL OF OBSOLETE PUBLICATIONS

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 17) providing for the disposition of certain obsolete Government publications stored in the folding rooms of Congress, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a statement of certain noncurrent and obsolete publications now in the folding rooms of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, shall be prepared by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, respectively, and submitted to the Joint Committee on Printing, which is hereby authorized to dispose of the same in the following manner:

First. A printed statement of such publications shall be submitted to each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Resident Commissioner, and officer of the Senate and House of Representatives, and any Member or officer of either House having any of such publications to his credit may dispose of the same in the usual manner at any time before September 1, 1935.

Second. Upon the expiration of the aforesaid time the Joint Committee on Printing shall furnish to all Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, as promptly as practicable, a list of the publications herein referred to then remaining in the folding rooms, and thereupon such publications shall be subject to the order of any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, in the order in which they are applied for, for a period of 30 days after the day when such list shall be furnished by the Joint Committee on Printing, but no application for the transfer of these publications may be honored.

Third. The Joint Committee on Printing shall furnish a list of all such publications remaining in the folding room at the expiration of the last-named period to the various departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government at Washington, including the Superintendent of Documents, Smithsonian Institution, Library of Congress, National Archives Establishment, Bureau of American Republics, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and such publications shall be turned over to any department, independent office, or establishment making written request therefor and shall be allocated in the order in which their application is made, and all such publications which shall remain in the folding rooms for a period of 10 days after such list shall have been furnished to the departments, independent offices, or establishments aforesaid shall be delivered to the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, for such disposition as he may deem to be to the best interests of the Government.

Fourth. No publication which is described in the list aforesaid shall thereafter be returned to the folding rooms from any source.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EDWARD B. WHEELER AND THE STATE INVESTMENT CO.

The bill (S. 427) authorizing the reimbursement of Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. for the loss of certain lands in the Mora grant, New Mexico, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edward B. Wheeler, of Las Vegas, N. Mex., and the State Investment Co., of New Mexico, who were declared by the Supreme Court of the United States (United States v. State Investment Co. (1924), 264 U. S. 106) to be the owners, respectively, of certain lands in the tract known as the "Mora grant", located in San Miguel and Mora Counties, N. Mex., an amount to be computed by the Secretary on the basis of $2.20 per acre for every acre of land embraced within the claim of any bona fide entryman on such lands holding under patent from the United States or under any entry allowed by the Department of the Interior, the recovery of which lands by the said Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. is barred by the stipulation entered into between such parties and the United States on January 23, 1918. Such payment shall operate as a full settlement of all claims of such Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. against the United States or the owners of such lands for damages for the loss of such lands.

RAILWAY LABOR ACT APPLIED TO CARRIERS BY AIR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2496) to amend the Railway Labor Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, lines 15 to 22, to strike out section 203, as follows:

SEC. 203. The jurisdiction of the National Mediation Board is extended to and shall cover each and every dispute arising from any cause between said carriers by air or any of them and its or their employees, and the services of the National Mediation Board may be invoked in the same manner and to the same extent as though any or all such disputes were specifically mentioned in section 5 of title I of this act.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 203. The parties or either party to a dispute between an employee or a group of employees and a carrier or carriers by air may invoke the services of the National Mediation Board and the jurisdiction of said Mediation Board is extended to any of the following cases:

(a) A dispute concerning changes in rates of pay, rules, or working conditions not adjusted by the parties in conference.

(b) Any other dispute not referable to an adjustment board, as hereinafter provided, and not adjusted in conference between the parties, or where conferences are refused.

The National Mediation Board may proffer its services in case any labor emergency is found by it to exist at any time.

The services of the Mediation Board may be invoked in a case under this title in the same manner and to the same extent as are the disputes covered by section 5 of title I of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 16, to strike out section 204, as follows:

SEC. 204. Nothing in this title shall be construed to prevent any individual carrier, system, or group of carriers by air, and any class or classes of its or their employees, all acting through their representatives, selected in accordance with the provisions of this title, from mutually agreeing to the establishment of system, group, or regional boards of adjustment of jurisdiction not exceeding the jurisdiction which may be lawfully exercised by system, group, or regional boards of adjustment under the authority of section 3 of title I of this act; or, pending the establishment of a permanent national board of adjustment as hereinafter provided, to prevent said carriers by air and any class or classes of their employees, all acting through their representatives, selected in accordance with the provisions of this title, from mutually agreeing to the establishment of a national board of adjustment of temporary duration and of similarly limited jurisdiction.

And insert a new section 204, as follows:

SEC. 204. The disputes between an employee or group of employees and a carrier or carriers by air growing out of grievances, or out of the interpretation or application of agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions, including cases pending and unadjusted on the date of approval of this act before the National Labor Relations Board, shall be handled in the usual manner up to and including the chief operating officer of the carrier designated to handle such disputes; but, failing to reach an adjustment in this manner, the disputes may be referred by petition of the parties or by either party to an appropriate adjustment board, as hereinafter provided, with a full statement of the facts and supporting data bearing upon the disputes.

It shall be the duty of every carrier and of its employees, acting through their representatives, selected in accordance with the provisions of this title, to establish a board of adjustment of jurisdiction not exceeding the jurisdiction which may be lawfully exercised by system, group, or regional boards of adjustment, under the authority of section 3, title I, of this act.

Such boards of adjustment may be established by agreement between employees and carriers either on any individual carrier, or system, or group of carriers by air and any class or classes of its or their employees; or pending the establishment of a permanent National Board of Adjustment as hereinafter provided. Nothing in this act shall prevent said carriers by air, or any class or classes of their employees, both acting through their representatives selected in accordance with provisions of this title, from mutually agreeing to the establishment of a National Board of Adjustment of temporary duration and of similarly limited jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in 1926 Congress enacted what is known as the "Railway Labor Act." The bill now before us merely provides for the extension of the Railway Labor Act provisions to air pilots and mechanics engaged in the air service in interstate commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERS FOR GOVERNMENT SERVICES AT EL PASO, TEX.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, order of business 918, being House bill 7235, was called when I happened to be temporarily absent from the Chamber. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that order of business. I am sure there will be no objection when I shall have made a brief explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I asked that the bill go over on the ground that there was no explanation. I shall be glad to hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. The bill relates to the erection of a building in El Paso, Tex., for prospective use of the Government of the United States. The reason for this procedure instead of erecting a public building is that the building to be leased is located on a tract of land the title to which is in dispute between the United States and Mexico. The Government, of course, under the circumstances does not desire to erect a building on the tract, but it is provided in the lease that if the title should be found to vest in Mexico the lease shall be terminated. The Department desires the legislation, and it is agreeable to all parties concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7235) to amend the act entitled "An act to make provision for suitable quarters for certain Government services at El Paso, Tex., and for other purposes", was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend the act to make provision for suitable quarters for certain Government services at El Paso, Tex., and for other purposes", approved June 19, 1934, is amended to read as follows:

"That when the owners of the tract of land situated in the city and county of El Paso and State of Texas, more fully described as follows, to wit—

"Beginning at a point on the east line of South Santa Fe Street, which point is the intersection of the west line of block 21 of the Campbell Addition to the city of El Paso and the southerly line of the present levee now occupied as a right-of-way of the Rio Grande & El Paso Railroad; and which point of intersection is 66.82 feet northerly from the southwest corner of said block 21, the beginning point of this tract; thence southerly along the west line of said block 21, and the east line of South Santa Fe Street at 66.82 feet past the southwest corner of said block 21 and at 136.82 feet past the northwest corner of block 17 of the Campbell addition and at 188.82 feet past the southwest corner of this tract; thence easterly at right angles to the center of an alley 130 feet; thence northerly and parallel with the east line of South Santa Fe Street 124 feet more or less to the south line of the above-mentioned levee; thence in a northwesterly direction along the south line of said levee 135 feet more or less to the place of beginning, being part of lots 18, 19, and 20 in block 21 of the Campbell addition, and that part of Eleventh Street between blocks 21 and 17 having a width of 70 feet by 130 feet, and all of lots 11 and 12 in block 17 above referred to and the west half of the alley adjoining the lots herein mentioned. The property herein described has a frontage of 188.82 feet on South Santa Fe Street, a width of 130 feet on the south side, has approximately 124 feet on the east side, and on the north side 135 feet."

"(hereafter called the 'owners'), have agreed to erect upon such premises, or upon an equivalent area which has been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, a building of such design, plan, and specifications as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury as suitable for the use of the Bureau of Immigration, the Bureau of Customs, the United States Public Health Service, and the Bureau of Plant Quarantine; the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to negotiate, and, subject to an appropriation therefor, lease such building and such premises from the owners for a term of 25 years after such building is ready for occupancy at a fair annual rental, subject to the limitations of section 322 of part II of the Legislative Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, approved June 30, 1932. Such lease shall contain a provision for a cancelation of the lease in the event that the lots on which the building is to be constructed are determined, judicially or by agreement, to be lands subject to the jurisdiction of the United States of Mexico. In the event that such lands are so determined to be lands subject to the jurisdiction of the United States of Mexico and that as a result of such determination the owners or their assignees lose their title thereto and the lease is canceled, the United States shall pay to the owners or their assignees the fair value of the building at the completion of its construction (but not in excess of the actual cost of construction), less an amount equal to one-third of 1 percent of such cost or value for each month that the lease was in effect prior to such determination.

"SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated such amounts as may be necessary to pay the installments of rent provided for in such lease."

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT LAW

The bill (S. 3047) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright", approved March 4, 1909, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] a question about the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I am objecting to its present consideration.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad my colleague is objecting, but I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question about it.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. WAGNER. I ask that the bill go over today.

Mr. DUFFY. I have sat here and let the Senator from New York proceed day after day by unanimous consent, and I am willing to continue doing it. I merely ask him to withhold his objection a moment.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator desire to explain the bill?

Mr. DUFFY. In the first place, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] desires to propound a question and I want to make a very brief statement about the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no objection to that at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withheld temporarily.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether extensive hearings were held on the bill and if all parties in interest had an opportunity to present their views regarding it?

I ask the question because I am quite overwhelmed with protests from my State against the bill. There seems to be a feeling that it will work a great injustice; that it will deny to American authors certain rights to which they feel they are entitled, and that it is not a good bill and ought not to be passed. I do not profess to have any knowledge of it at all and I am simply reciting to the Senator what is coming to my desk in the way of protests.

May I ask the Senator what has been done about the matter?

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DUFFY. I yield.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, this bill came before the Committee on Patents. While that committee did not hold extensive hearings, it had a number of conferences with representatives of the various interests affected by the bill. The matter has been under discussion for a long time between the State Department and the Patent Office; and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] has been particularly in touch with the various negotiations, in the effort to see if a bill could not be framed which would satisfy the many conflicting interests. There are many complex questions involved. They are not easy to settle, and certainly the differences are not easy to reconcile.

There have been, heretofore, extensive hearings in the House; and those hearings, of course, were available to the Senate committee. I have asked the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] to take charge of the discussion on the floor, because he is more familiar with the bill than am I, since lately I have been necessarily engaged in the Banking and Currency Committee to such an extent that I have not been able to give the matter as much time as the Senator from Wisconsin has been good enough to give it. The Senator from Wisconsin is not on the Patents Committee, but he introduced the bill; and for that reason I will ask him to take charge of it on the floor.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New York that I was chairman of the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee which had hearings on the question of the adherence of the United States to the International Copyright Union. In a very large measure this bill is an enabling act. The Copyright Union Treaty, or convention, was reported to the Senate by the Foreign Relations Committee and is now on the Executive Calendar, although we had a gentlemen's understanding that it would be held on the calendar until the present bill could receive consideration by the Senate.

In the meantime, after the Foreign Relations Committee had held hearings where the various conflicting interests appeared, at the request of the Foreign Relations Committee an informal interdepartmental committee was formed, consisting of 2 members from the Copyright Office, 2 members from the Department of State, and 1 member from the Department of Commerce. They had 25 or 26 different conferences with all the various conflicting interests; and this bill is largely the result of the 25 or 26 conferences, where all parties had a chance to be heard.

I will say that authors will gain a great deal by adherence of the United States to the International Copyright Union. There is in this particular bill, however, one matter to which authors object; that is, we have eliminated the provision for $250 minimum statutory damages, which has been made a racket in this country by the organization familiarly known as the "ASCAP", the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers. The United States Government is now conducting a prosecution against that organization in a case which, I understand, was commenced in New York last week. The authors do object because the minimum of $250 statutory damages has been eliminated. On the other hand, the maximum has been largely increased, from $5,000 to $20,000, and the courts will give the authors full protection, but they will not be able to go into a bootblack stand or a little pool hall somewhere and hold up the proprietor for $250 as a minimum if this bill shall become a law.

There are many things in the bill which the authors very much desire, and of which they are very much in favor. Because the treaty is on the Executive Calendar, although it was ratified and then, at my request, restored to the calendar by unanimous consent, and because of the coming conference of the International Copyright Union, I am going, as soon as possible, to ask for consideration of this bill by the Senate. I cannot do so today in view of the objection which will be made by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me to make a statement, I hold in my hand a telegram from John Erskine, one of the most popular writers of the day; and I had a similar message from Gene Buck, who is at the head of the music writers.

Mr. DUFFY. He is the head of ASCAP.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. Erskine, in his telegram, says:

> I sincerely hope you will oppose copyright bill S. 3047. The bill gives foreign authors basic copyright without formality, but denies it to American authors. The bill seems to protect chiefly the commercial enterprises which live on the authors.

Of course, I am not competent to judge the merits of the matter; but I assume that the Senator will not press the bill today, and that we shall have an opportunity to look into it.

Mr. DUFFY. I think that should be done; but I desire to give notice that as early as possible I shall try to have the bill considered by the Senate, because we are holding up the Copyright Union treaty until this bill can receive consideration by the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if the bill is a meritorious one, of course, I have no desire to delay its consideration. I have received protests from a number of people in New York in whom I have very great confidence, who tell me that the bill is unfair to their profession. I did not, of course, wish to be discourteous to the Senator in making the objection. I thought he had in mind persuading me to withdraw my objection.

In view of these protests, not having had an opportunity to study the bill in detail, I shall have to press my objection today. I will confer with the Senator a little later on.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the bill goes over, I ask leave to offer a series of amendments to it, so that they may be pending when the bill comes back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received and printed.

Objection being made to the consideration of the bill, it will be passed over.

WILLIAM K. BELDIN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1103) for the relief of William K. Beldin, which was read, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of all laws conferring rights, benefits, and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers William K. Beldin shall be held and considered as having been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on June 16, 1925, as a private, Company G, Thirty-eighth Regiment, United States Infantry: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see that in this case fraudulent enlistment is charged. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I can give a very brief explanation on behalf of the Military Affairs Committee.

The charge was that William K. Beldin falsified when he enlisted in the Army, stating that he had not previously been dishonorably discharged. What happened was that while he had been in the Navy temporarily he had a dishonorable discharge; but, after the matter was investigated, Beldin was exonerated and was given the proper discharge, and the record temporarily made against him was changed. The Government paid him the money that he had coming to him, and then his record was cleared, as he contended at that time it was.

Technically, there may be said to have been a blot on the record until this matter was cleared up; but, as a matter of fact, Beldin was telling the truth, as subsequent events showed. The Military Affairs Committee thought, therefore, that it would be entirely proper to have this record changed so that it would not be held against him, because he was correct in his statement.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN EAGLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2990) to preserve from extinction the American eagle, emblem of the sovereignty of the United States of America, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, without being permitted so to do as hereinafter provided, shall take, possess, sell, purchase, offer to sell or purchase, transport, or export, at any time or in any manner, any bald eagle, commonly known as the "American eagle", alive or dead, or any part, nest, or egg thereof, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit possession or transportation of any such eagle, alive or dead, or any part, nest, or egg thereof taken prior to the effective date of this act, but the proof of such taking shall lie upon the accused in any prosecution under this act.

SEC. 2. That whenever after investigation the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that it is compatible with the preservation of the bald eagle as a species to permit the taking of specimens thereof for the scientific or exhibition purposes of public museums, scientific societies, or zoological parks, or that it is necessary to permit the taking of such eagles for the protection of wildlife or of agricultural or other interests in any place or locality, he may issue permits therefor under regulations which he is hereby authorized to prescribe.

SEC. 3. That for the efficient execution of this act, section 5 of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act of July 3, 1918 (40 Stat. 755; U. S. C., title 16, ch. 7, sec. 706), shall be deemed to be incorporated herein in haec verba, mutatis mutandis.

SEC. 4. That as used in this act "whoever" includes also associations, partnerships, and corporations; "take" includes also pursue, shoot, shoot at, wound, kill, capture, trap, collect, or otherwise willfully molest or disturb; "transport" includes also ship, convey, carry, or transport any means whatever, and deliver or receive, or cause to be delivered or received, for shipment, conveyance, carriage, or transportation.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and to incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests an amendment, on page 2, line 24, to insert the word "by", so as to complete the sentence. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 24, after the word "transport", it is proposed to insert the word "by", so that, if amended, it will read:

"Transport" includes also ship, convey, carry, or transport by any means whatever—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2203) to promote the development of Indian arts and crafts and to create a board to assist therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have had some objections suggested to that measure. I ask that it go over, though I will say frankly that I am inclined to favor the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is an administration bill.

Mr. KING. Yes; I knew that.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is one for which the authorities have been working for a long time. The committee were very strongly in favor of it.

Mr. KING. A number of Indians have spoken to me in regard to the bill. The Senator knows my profound interest in the Indians and in their welfare. I have been inclined to favor this bill, but in view of the request made, I ask that it go over until the next call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS TO VETERANS OF SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 6995) granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, their widows and dependents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several Senators have asked me to request that that bill go over for the day. I think one of the Senators has an amendment to offer.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I had hoped this bill might be disposed of today. The House Committee on Pensions held hearings on the bill. No amendments were suggested over there. The bill was passed unanimously by the House of Representatives. The Committee on Pensions of the Senate were called together, and unanimously reported the bill. I should have no particular objection to its going over if it could be made a special order of business of the Senate, for I feel that the bill could be disposed of within a period of 30 minutes to an hour.

Mr. KING. I will join with the Senator in asking for a special order; but the leader is not here at the moment.

Mr. McGILL. I have had no opportunity to take up the matter with the majority leader of the Senate, due to the fact that he has been absent from the floor for part of today, and I had no notice until just now that there would be any objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator that the bill be passed over temporarily and called up later during the day, when the majority leader will be here.

Mr. McGILL. We may not be in session very long. May we have it called again at the conclusion of the call of the calendar?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the session is getting very near the end, I hope; and if action is to be had upon this bill—and I think it should be acted upon—we ought to have it as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. McGILL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up at the conclusion of the call of the calendar and disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill's being passed over and having the Senator renew his application before we adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas that the bill go over until the end of the calendar and be brought up again?

Mr. McGILL. And proceeded to final disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHANGE IN JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF NORTH CAROLINA

The bill (S. 2513) to provide for a change in the judicial districts of North Carolina with respect to Durham County was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is the same as Calendar No. 950, being a House bill, which the clerk will report.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7374) to amend section 98 of the Judicial Code to provide for the inclusion of Durham County, N. C., in the middle district of North Carolina, and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2513 will be indefinitely postponed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3058) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the word "thereto", to strike out the words "or the rights of such creditors", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (n) of section 77B of chapter VIII of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended by the acts of February 5, 1903, June 15, 1906, June 25, 1910, March 2, 1917, January 7, 1922, May 27, 1926, February 11, 1932, March 3, 1933, and June 7, 1934, be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(n) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed or be deemed to affect or apply to the creditors of any corporation under a mortgage insured pursuant to the National Housing Act and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto or to the stockholders, creditors, or officers of any corporation operating or owning a railroad or railroads, railway or railways, owned in whole or in part by any municipality and/or owned or operated by a municipality, or under any contract to any municipality by or on its behalf or in conjunction with such municipality under any contract, lease, agreement, certificate, or in any other manner provided by law for such operation: Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not apply to or affect any corporation or the stockholders, creditors, or officers thereof, if not more than 20 percent of its operating revenue is derived from such operations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHOSHONE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2510) authorizing the western bands of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians, as defined herein, to sue in the Court of Claims, which had been reported from the Committee on Indians Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred on the United States Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, anything in the Judicial Code of the United States and amendments thereto to the contrary notwithstanding, regardless of lapse of time and the statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment for such net amount as may be found due on all legal and equitable claims of the Western Bands of the Shoshone Nation of Indians and the court shall determine as near as may be the boundaries and acreage of the lands described in article 5, under the treaty of October 1, 1863 (18 Stat. L. 689), after deducting the aggregate of any and all payments or expenditures for the benefit of said Indians, including gratuities, between June 26, 1866, and the date of filing petition in the court: Provided, That no expenditures for the benefit of these Indians made out of appropriations authorized by the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. L. 984), shall be considered as offsets.

SEC. 2. The claims of the said Indians under the provisions of this act shall be presented by petition or petitions setting out fully and distinctly all claims of the Western Shoshone Indians against the United States within 5 years after the passage of this act, or shall be thereafter forever barred. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Indians under contract executed in accordance with existing law. The departments of the Government shall give access to the attorneys so employed to the records pertaining to said Indians on file therein.

SEC. 3. The net proceeds of any judgment recovered shall be placed on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians at 4 percent interest per annum, and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per capita payments to said Indians: Provided, That the court in rendering judgment shall determine and set apart a reasonable fee for and to the attorney or attorneys of said Indians employed in the prosecution of said claims, not to exceed 10 percent of such judgment, if any, together with all reasonable and proper expenses incurred by the said attorney or attorneys in the prosecution of said claim.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can any Senator explain what this bill means? Does it mean another imposition on the Treasury?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is simply a bill to allow the Indians to go into the Court of Claims and establish claims which they feel they are justified in asking to have settled.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has not legislation been enacted heretofore which provided for that?

Mr. FRAZIER. Not for this particular group.

Mr. McKELLAR. There has to be a different bill for every group?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; there is a bill pending now before the Committee on Indian Affairs to set up a commission to handle all such claims. If that shall be enacted, such bills as this will be referred to the commission. This is the regular form of a Court of Claims jurisdictional bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Western bands of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians to sue in the Court of Claims."

MIDDLE RIO GRANDE CONSERVANCY DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1832) a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide by agreement with Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, a subdivision of the State of New Mexico, for maintenance and operation on newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., reclaimed under previous act of Congress, and authorizing an annual appropriation to pay the cost thereof for a period of not to exceed 5 years, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments, on page 2, line 6, to strike out " (Public, No. 169, Seventieth Congress, first session)" and to insert in lieu thereof the words " (45 Stat. L. 312–313) and as therein provided, and as provided for by the provisions of the contract executed by and with the Secretary of the Interior and the said district"; on page 2, line 15, to strike out the words " Pueblo Indian lands, provided the cost thereof shall in no event exceed the per acre cost for maintenance and operation on non-Indian lands of like character " and to insert in lieu thereof the words, " Pueblo Indian lands as may be irrigable during any particular year, provided the per acre cost assessable against the acreage of newly reclaimed Indian lands shall not exceed the per acre cost of operating and maintaining the district works for the irrigation of the total irrigable area within the district, including the now irrigated and newly reclaimed Indian lands: Provided, That any sums appropriated pursuant hereto shall be reimbursable to the United States: Provided further, That the district shall be required, by the agreement herein authorized to be executed, to deliver water without discrimination on that part of the newly reclaimed Pueblo lands on which the per acre charge or assessment has been paid: Provided further, That the provisions of the contract heretofore executed pursuant to the act of March 13, 1928, requiring the district to recognize the prior and paramount water rights for the approximately 8,346 acres of now irrigated Indian lands and of their exemption from payment of any operation and maintenance or betterment cost, shall be carried into and made a part of the agreement to be executed pursuant hereto ", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into an agreement with Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, a political subdivision of the State of New Mexico, to provide for operation and maintenance on newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands, not exceeding 12,600 acres thereof now owned by said Indians, in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., provided said lands have been benefited by improvements constructed under the act of Congress dated March 13, 1928 (45 Stat. L., 312–313), and as therein provided, and as provided for by the provisions of the contract executed by and with the Secretary of the Interior and the said district; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually for a period of not to exceed 5 years, such amount as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the cost to Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District of such operation and maintenance on said newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands as may be irrigable during any particular year, provided the per acre cost assessable against the acreage of newly reclaimed Indian lands shall not exceed the per acre cost of operating and maintaining the district works for the irrigation of the total irrigable area within the district, including the now irrigated and newly reclaimed Indian lands: Provided, That any sums appropriated pursuant hereto shall be reimbursable to the United States: Provided further, That the district shall be required by the agreement herein authorized to be executed, to deliver water without discrimination on that part of the newly reclaimed Pueblo lands on which the per acre charge or assessment has been paid: And provided further, That the provisions of the contract heretofore executed pursuant to the act of March 13, 1928, requiring the district to recognize the prior and paramount water rights for the approximately 8,346 acres of now irrigated Indian lands and of their exemption from payment of any operation and maintenance or betterment cost shall be carried into and made a part of the agreement to be executed pursuant hereto.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROGUE RIVER SURVEY, OREGON

The bill (H. R. 5774) to authorize a preliminary examination of Rogue River and its tributaries in the State of

TRANSPORTATION OF PRISON-MADE PRODUCTS

The bill (S. 2904) to prohibit the interstate transportation of prison-made products in certain cases was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation), or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, where said goods, wares, and merchandise are intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise in violation of any law of such State, Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof. Nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government.

SEC. 2. All packages containing any goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners, except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation, or in any penal or reformatory institution, when shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce shall be plainly and clearly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper, the name and address of the consignee, the nature of the contents, and the name and location of the penal or reformatory institution where produced wholly or in part may be readily ascertained on an inspection of the outside of such package.

SEC. 3. Any person violating any provision of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and such goods, wares, and merchandise shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and forfeiture of property imported into the United States contrary to law.

SEC. 4. Any violation of this act shall be prosecuted in any court having jurisdiction of crime within the district in which said violation was committed, or from, or into which any such goods, wares, or merchandise may have been carried or transported, or in any Territory, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, or the District of Columbia, contrary to the provisions of this act.

TRADE IN ARMS, AMMUNITION, AND IMPLEMENTS OF WAR

The bill (S. 2998) to control the trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think it will take more than 5 minutes to consider this bill, and therefore I ask that it go over.

Mr. POPE. I think it would not take 5 minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a very important bill, is it not? I hope the Senator will let it go over until I have a chance to examine it. It is too long for me to examine at this time.

Mr. POPE. Will the Senator object if we bring it up later in the day if we have time?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just let it go over for the present, and I will examine the bill and confer with the Senator about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

CATHERINE GRACE

The bill (S. 2879) for the relief of Catherine Grace was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let it go over for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to return to Calendar No. 963, being Senate bill 2879, for the relief of Catherine Grace. This is a claim of the widow of the American consul at Sheffield, England.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when did the practice grow up of having independent bills for these matters?

Mr. COPELAND. It has grown up from the fact that we have not done exactly what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator investigate the matter and report a bill which will be right and fair and just? I doubt very much whether the system which has grown up of having independent bills for these claims is a good one. I do not think so.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree fully with the Senator, and for 10 years I have had in the Senate, bills proposing just what he has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish the Senator would devote a little time to such a measure and have it enacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2879) for the relief of Catherine Grace, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Catherine Grace, widow of William J. Grace, late American consul at Sheffield, England, the sum of $4,500, such sum representing 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died at his post of duty on February 11, 1933.

NELLIE T. FRANCIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3574) for the relief of Nellie T. Francis, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nellie T. Francis, widow of William T. Francis, late minister resident and consul general at Monrovia, Liberia, the sum of $5,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall not object to this bill and the next one, but I think the policy which is being pursued as to these bills is a great strain on the Government, and I think there should be a general law covering such cases. At the next session I shall insist that we consider a measure in reference to such matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LILY M. MILLER

The bill (H. R. 7254) for the relief of Lily M. Miller, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED HERRICK

The bill (S. 491) for the relief of Fred Herrick was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH subsequently said: Mr. President, Senate bill 491, for the relief of Fred Herrick, has been called and went over under objection. A bill similar to this passed at a previous session. It is the most obviously fair measure on the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain it?

Mr. SMITH. The claimant in this case had a contract with the Government to cut timber in the forest referred to. He contracted to cut the timber, he built a railroad into the forest, he built timber roads, but the depression came, and he became bankrupt.

He did not cut any of the timber. The Government then sued for liquidated damages and got the $50,000 he had deposited. Then, out of the property this man had to abandon, and the timber he had to leave, the Government made a clear profit over and above everything of $52,000. The Department of Agriculture heartily recommends the passage of this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the trouble is that the record says that the Department is opposed to the bill.

Mr. SMITH. I will read the Senator what the Department told the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has the wrong matter before him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope I have.

Mr. SMITH. The facts I have stated are of record. When the man went bankrupt he released his holdings. The Government had all the property it had leased to him, together with the improvements he made; the Government had all the timber it had sold him, had his railroad, and the logging roads, and made, according to its own books, $52,000 on the project. It seems to me this man should be reimbursed for the liquidated damages he was called upon to pay, in view of the fact that the Government was the beneficiary by $52,000 over and above all expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Here is what the Department says about the matter:

> Upon the question of the enactment of this bill, this Department can make no recommendation.

Which is virtually a recommendation against the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, no, Mr. President! Under the law they might not be able to make a recommendation, but to the committee they did not hesitate to make it. Knowing the facts as the members of my committee know them, surely we in the Senate do not desire to quibble over a technicality when a disaster overtook a citizen of this country, and he had to abandon his lease from the Government, and the Government made money by the process. The Government did not lose money. In such a case the citizen should be reimbursed to the amount of the liquidated damages the Government collected.

Those are the facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would happen if we appropriated that money under this bill? The money would go to his creditors. He has gone into bankruptcy.

Mr. SMITH. It does not make a particle of difference to whom the money goes. If it was due him and his creditors, it is up to us to deal fairly with a claim which is as fair as is this one.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it is absolutely the duty of the Government to deal fairly; but the question is, Are we dealing fairly in taking this money and turning it over to Mr. Herrick's creditors?

I read from the report:

> On June 15, 1923, the Department of Agriculture through the Forest Service entered into a contract with Fred Herrick whereby the latter became the purchaser of certain timber in the Malheur National Forests in Harney and Grant Counties in the State of Oregon. The terms of the agreement provided for the time of the cutting and removal of the timber and required a deposit of $50,000 of Liberty bonds to be retained by the United States in satisfaction of liquidated damages in case of breach of contract.
> At the time this contract was entered into, Mr. Herrick was a wealthy man and a large operator, owning timber in several States, and expected to finance his operations through conversion of some of these assets. He expended considerably more than a million dollars in constructing a common-carrier railroad to this timber territory and erected a large modern concrete and steel sawmill and completed logging roads through the timber, some 50 miles in length.
> The lumber industry became depressed.

The lumber industry became depressed and the claimant did not succeed. Now he wishes to have the $50,000 restored to him. He never would have asked it if the contract had gone through. That was his contract. He failed in that, just as he failed in business. I do not see that the Government is in any way obligated to return the money.

Mr. SMITH. But the Senator must remember that the Government has been utilizing the improvements he put in, and he was not a beneficiary of them on account of the depression. God knows we have appropriated enough money to those who do not benefit the Government. We have appropriated enough money to benefit those who have not benefited anyone.

If I may continue to have the floor for a few moments, when I finish my explanation, if the Senator from Tennessee and other Senators do not think this is a just claim, I shall have no more to say.

This man in good faith leased this timberland from the Government. He made all ordinary improvements. Then the depression came, and he went bankrupt. The amount he had deposited by way of liquidated damages, of course, the Government acquired, according to the contract. However, in the resale of the timber the Government made a profit of $52,000, and all that is now asked is that the $50,000 shall be returned to Mr. Herrick.

It does not make any difference whether his creditors or his family get the money. Those to whom he was under obligation naturally have as just and honest a claim on his assets as his family itself. It makes no difference to me whether the $50,000 is turned over to his creditors or to his family. His family certainly enjoyed the $50,000 which his creditors had extended to him, and the creditors have just as much right to whatever the Government may have of his as has his family. In view of our liberality to others to whom we are pouring out money, it seems to me that a just claim such as this ought to be met.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement. I think the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] will not wish to object to the bill when he understands something more of the facts.

The United States Forest Service has a very large body of fine timber in the area involved in this discussion. It was desired to sell that timber on what is called a "sustained-yield basis." In order to put it on that basis, the United States found it necessary to control the right of the cut and supervise the whole operation rather than merely to sell stumpage outright and permit the purchaser to use his own means of removal of the timber.

A contract was made with Mr. Herrick at a time when I am sure he thought he was financially able to carry it out.

The depression, however, ruined him in all his operations. After he had expended very large sums of money in the development of the property, the building of the railroad, and the commencement of a sawmill, which he never completed, he became bankrupt, and actually went through the bankruptcy court, and was adjudicated a bankrupt. He was not able to proceed. The Government, therefore, in the protection of its own rights, still having possession of its timber, to effect the possession of its own rights and to prevent the Government's rights being involved in controversy with creditors, and matters of that sort, canceled the contract.

I personally fully approve that. It was done some years ago after I became United States Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was that done by agreement?

Mr. STEIWER. No; not by agreement. The Government exercised its right to cancel. I remember that the Chief Forester consulted the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and myself.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was because the contractor had not carried out his agreement?

Mr. STEIWER. Because he could not. The Government did not wish to be involved in controversy between him and his creditors. The Government exercised its right to cancel its contract and then readvertised the timber. I think the bid price, Mr. Herrick's price, was $2.50 a thousand. On the new sale and the new advertisements the same timber was sold for $2.86 a thousand. The Government, therefore, was better off than otherwise it would have been.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the sale gone through?

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, yes; to the purchaser.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has he paid the money?

Mr. STEIWER. He has made payment, kept his contract, and built a sawmill which cost a million dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did not the Department make a report on this matter?

Mr. STEIWER. It did.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we not have that report?

Mr. STEIWER. The committee has the report. I read the report. The report states these facts.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it did not recommend the payment of this sum.

Mr. STEIWER. The Department declined to recommend either for or against the payment; I do not know why. Sometimes, however, our departments take the position that legislation is a matter of policy, and that Congress should determine the policy.

Let me go a little further. The United States not only retained all its property but it has suffered no actual damage. It was entitled, however, as a matter of law, to the recovery of the penalties stipulated in the contract. Mr. Herrick is a very old man. I cannot tell the Senate his exact age, but I think he is more than 75 years of age. He is now living in considerable distress, and suffering from want. I cannot conceive that there is any moral justification for the retention of this money.

Mr. McKELLAR. Have any attorneys been employed? Ought there not to be a provision in the bill for the limitation of attorneys' fees?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I think it would be very well if there were in the bill a provision for the limitation of attorneys' fees. I do not know that there are any attorneys in the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like the Senator to let the bill go over, and let us see the report of the Department of Agriculture. If it is a just claim, of course it ought to be paid, or the money refunded.

Mr. STEIWER. I am sure it is a just claim.

Mr. McKELLAR. But there ought to be a provision in the bill with reference to a limitation of lawyers' fees.

Mr. STEIWER. I am sure it is a just claim. I have no objection to the usual provision about attorneys' fees. I do not know that any attorney is seeking to take his proportionate share of this money. I am entirely convinced that such a provision ought to be in the bill.

Before I conclude I may say also to the Senator from Tennessee that a similar bill was introduced at the last session, and a hearing was held upon it by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and both the subcommittee and the full committee at that time reported favorably, and the Senate passed the bill. It failed in the last days of the session in the House of Representatives. The bill was again introduced in this session, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], in order to satisfy himself, held it up, and there has been some little delay. He held it up, so he tells me, while he wrote a letter to the United States district attorney at Spokane, who had some connection with the bankruptcy proceeding. After the Senator had made inquiry in his own way he reached the conclusion that it was a just and fair claim, and, being a member of the committee, himself reported the bill favorably to the Senate. So it has been very fully examined by all concerned with it. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee does not wish to object to it, unless he desires to add to the bill the amendment he suggests. If that is proposed, I shall have no objection. The bill might go over, and we will prepare the necessary amendment between now and the next call of the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. Let it take that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

E. C. WEST

The bill (H. R. 4368) for the relief of E. C. West was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. C. West, of Dunn, N. C., the sum of $201.59 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for substitute-clerk hire paid by him from December 31, 1921, to September 30, 1922, while acting as postmaster at Dunn, N. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts and New Hampshire was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in the absence of the author of the joint resolution, I will ask that it go over for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

WILLIAM A. DEVINE

The bill (S. 2806) for the relief of William A. Devine was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Civil Service Commission is authorized and directed to pay, out of the civil-service retirement and disability fund, to William A. Devine, formerly postmaster at Madison, Wis., the sum of $812.23, such sum representing the payment made by him on October 2, 1926, to such fund for the purpose of receiving service credit for the time from August 1, 1920, to June 30, 1926, when, in fact, he was entitled to the maximum benefits of the civil-service retirement laws without making such payment.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1632) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by water carriers operating in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MOSES ISRAEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5393) for the relief of Moses Israel, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$2,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Moses Israel the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages suffered by reason of being struck and injured by a Government automobile which was driven by an employee of the Post Office Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8297) to amend so much of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1921, approved March 1, 1921, as relates to the printing and distribution of a revised edition of Hinds' Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representatives was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JACK PAGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 298) for the relief of Jack Page, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the date "November 1, 1898", to strike out "and that the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to issue to said Jack Page, an honorable discharge from said unit which shall recite that such service was rendered from May 1, to November 1, 1898", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Jack Page shall hereafter be held and considered to have enlisted in Company M, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Infantry, on May 1, 1898, and to have served until honorably discharged as a member of that organization on November 1, 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the pasage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CLAIMS OF GRAIN ELEVATORS AND FIRMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 72) authorizing and directing the Comptroller General of the United States to certify for payment certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this appears to be a measure of considerable importance. I think it should be discussed before action is taken on it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, due to the fact that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has been compelled to go home by reason of sickness in his family, I can say that on two previous occasions the Senate has passed measures identical with this, with the exception that in this joint resolution there is a provision that the compensation paid attorneys shall not exceed 10 percent. In addition to having previously passed the Senate twice, a similar joint resolution has also passed the House twice, but because of some ruling of the Comptroller General in neither instance was the joint resolution finally enacted. The joint resolution was reintroduced to meet the objections of the Comptroller General. It is of a technical nature, and if it is to be discussed thoroughly it cannot very well be done in 5 minutes, although it has been gone over thoroughly heretofore.

The caption of the joint resolution explains its purpose, namely:

Authorizing and directing the Comptroller General of the United States to certify for payment certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat in the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President.

There were many contracts authorized by the President. The large elevator companies were able to obtain settlement, whereas the small companies, the farmers' cooperatives, having claims as low as $10 and up to $800, the highest being, I think, $800, felt that the amounts in question were so small that they, as individuals, could not afford to litigate against the Government in order to collect them. So they have come here for redress.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the recommendation of the Department of Agriculture is favorable to the joint resolution.

Mr. NYE. It is.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator from Arkansas is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, at the beginning of line 12, it is proposed to strike out "25" and insert "10", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas it is provided in the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel (ch. 53, 40 Stat. L., approved August 10, 1917, and ch. 125, 40 Stat. L., approved March 4, 1919), wherein the President was authorized to determine and fix a guaranteed price, to be paid producers of wheat, and wherein the President was further authorized as follows:

"Whenever the President shall find it essential in order to carry out the guaranties aforesaid, or to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, he is authorized to make reasonable compensation for handling, transportation, insurance, and other charges with respect to wheat and wheat flour of said crops and for storage thereof in elevators, on farms and elsewhere";

and

Whereas the President by an Executive order (no. 3087), dated May 14, 1919, in pursuance of the power conferred on him by said act, did order as follows:

"I further find it essential and hereby direct that in order to carry out the guaranties made producers of wheat of the crops of 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, the United States wheat director utilize the services of the Food Administration Grain Corporation (now the United States Grain Corporation by reason of a change of name authorized by Executive order) as an agency of the United States, and I authorize the Food Administration Grain Corporation * * * to enter into such voluntary agreements to make such arrangements and to and perform all such acts and things as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of said act";

and

Whereas the United States Grain Corporation, in pursuance of said Executive order, and, for the purpose of carrying out and making effective the guaranteed price, made, and entered into, a certain contract, known as the "Grain Dealers' Agreement", with various independent and farmer grain firms and grain-elevator companies in Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Wyoming, and Oklahoma, and wherein it was agreed as follows:

"Fourth. In case the dealer (the elevator firms) shall be unable, after using every effort and all diligence to ship in any week such total of grain as makes the equivalent of at least 20 percent of the amount of wheat in his elevator and owned by him at the beginning of such week, the Grain Corporation shall pay to the dealer to cover insurance and interest for such week seven-twentieths of 1 cent per bushel on the wheat in the elevator owned by him at the beginning of such week";

and

Whereas the President, in an Executive order (no. 3320) dated August 21, 1920, did approve, ratify, and confirm all acts done or authorized by the said United States Grain Corporation in carrying out and making said guaranteed price effective; and

Whereas all said grain dealers (the elevator firms) under the terms of said grain dealers' contract, were required by said United States Grain Corporation to, and in accordance therewith each said grain dealer did, make prescribed written weekly reports to said United States Grain Corporation; and in due course there was duly and truly entered from said weekly reports upon the books of said United States Grain Corporation by said United States Grain Corporation as money earned by said grain dealers, and each of them, under the terms of said contract, and as justly due and truly owing to each said grain dealers from said United States Grain Corporation, the several sums of money, as reported by the Department of Commerce in its reports filed with the Secretary of the Senate, to which reports reference is hereinafter made; and

Whereas all the records, books of account, and files of the United States Grain Corporation were placed in the custody of the Department of Commerce by and pursuant to an Executive order (no. 4791) of the President, dated the 31st day of December 1927, and were in the custody of the Department of Commerce at the time of the making and filing with the Senate of the reports of the Department of Commerce hereinafter mentioned; and

Whereas on the 18th day of June 1929 the Senate of the United States duly adopted Senate Resolution 98 (71st Cong., 1st sess.), directing the Department of Commerce to furnish the Senate and file with the Secretary of the Senate the names and addresses of each person, firm, or corporation as they appear on the books and records of the United States Grain Corporation, who have, or appear to have, therefrom, a claim against the United States Grain Corporation or the United States, unpaid, in whole or in part, for such interest and insurance under and by virtue of said contract; and the respective amounts entered on said books and records as apparently earned by each said person, firm, and corporation under and by virtue of said contract; and

Whereas in pursuance of said resolution (no. 98) of the Senate, the Department of Commerce, subsequent to the adoption thereof and prior to the 14th day of December 1929, did furnish the Senate and did file with the Senate written reports wherein the Department of Commerce set forth the names and addresses of divers persons, firms, corporations, and grain dealers, and therein, further, did set forth opposite said names and addresses the respective amounts actually entered upon the records and books of the said United States Grain Corporation as accrued under the terms of said grain dealers' contract, to said persons, firms, corporations, and grain dealers; reference to said reports so filed being hereby made for greater particularity; and

Whereas it appears from said reports of said Department of Commerce, so filed with the Senate, that all the amounts and credits due from said United States Grain Corporation under said grain dealers' contract to the persons, firms, and corporations named in said reports still remain unpaid; and

Whereas said persons, firms, corporations, and grain dealers named in said reports of said Department of Commerce are now, and therefore have been, making claim for payment thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States, upon the filing with his office of an affidavit by any person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer named in said reports of the said Department of Commerce, so filed with the Secretary of the Senate, or by an officer of said person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, or the successor or legal representative of such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, stating that the person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer making said affidavit is the identical person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer named in said reports of said Department of Commerce or is the successor or legal representative of such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, and, as such, is entitled to receive payment of the respective amount stated in said report of said Department of Commerce as filed with the Secretary of the Senate and therein set opposite the several names of such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, shall, forthwith, certify to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for payment to such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, together with the reasonable and necessary expense incident to the administration of this resolution, in the office of the Comptroller General of the United States, out of any funds of the United States Grain Corporation now in the possession of the United States, or out of any funds in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective amounts stated in said reports of the Department of Commerce filed with the Secretary of the Senate and therein set opposite the name and address of said person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer making said affidavit or in whose behalf said affidavit is made; and in this connection and upon filing of said affidavit, it shall be taken as the fact that all conditions and acts necessary to authorize payment of said amounts set opposite the names and addresses of each of said persons, firms, corporations, or grain dealers named in said reports of said Department of Commerce have been duly complied with and performed by such persons, firms, corporations, or grain dealers; or if it appears hereafter from the books or records of the United States Grain Corporation, or said weekly reports, that any other or additional amounts were earned, or apparently earned, by the persons, firms, corporations, or grain dealers named in said reports of said Department of Commerce, now filed with the Secretary of the Senate, under the terms of said grain dealers' contract, and that said additional amounts remain unpaid; or if it appears from the books or records of the United States Grain Corporation or said weekly reports that any person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer not named in said reports of said Department of Commerce, now on file with the Secretary of the Senate, has earned or apparently earned, under the terms of said grain dealers' contract, and in the manner hereinbefore set forth, any sum, and that said sum now remains unpaid, the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to, and he shall forthwith, upon the filing with his office by any such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, or an officer thereof, or the successor or legal representative of such person, of an affidavit stating that the person making said affidavit is the identical person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer, or an officer thereof, or the successor or legal representative of such person named in the books, records, or weekly reports and as such is entitled to receive payment of said additional amount disclosed by the books or records of the United States Grain Corporation, or said weekly reports, and that said sum is unpaid, certify said additional amounts to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to said several persons making said affidavit or in whose behalf said affidavit is made, and upon the filing of said affidavit last mentioned it shall also be taken as a fact that all conditions and acts necessary to authorize payment of said additional amounts have been duly complied with and performed by each person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer making said affidavit, or in whose behalf said affidavit is made: Provided, That the amount to be paid by such persons, firms, corporations, or grain dealers to their attorneys as fees, exclusive of their expenses, shall not exceed 10 percent of the amount so paid to each such person, firm, corporation, or grain dealer hereunder.

SEC. 2. The resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President to ascertain, adjust, and pay certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest in wheat during the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President", approved February 4, 1929, as amended, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

FUNDS OF FEDERAL PRISONERS

The bill (S. 3120) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer certain moneys to "Funds of Federal prisoners" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the trust fund in the United States Treasury entitled "Funds of Federal prisoners", the sum of $685.62, which amount represents the loss sustained by said fund as a result of the failure of the State Savings Bank, of Leavenworth, Kans., in which part of said fund was formerly deposited. W. I. Biddle, formerly warden and special disbursing officer of the United States Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., and the sureties on his bonds as warden and special disbursing officer are hereby released from all liability on account of the loss sustained by the said fund.

GEORGE W. HALLOWELL, JR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2434) for the relief of George W. Hallowell, Jr., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$438" and insert "$159.63", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George W. Hallowell, Jr., sergeant, Ninth Squadron, United States Army Air Corps, the sum of $159.63 in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States of the said George W. Hallowell, Jr., for loss of certain personal property and tools on December 5, 1932, when an Army plane of which he was a member of the crew fell into the ocean as a result of the failure of the right motor while making certain speed tests pursuant to operations order no. 234, Eleventh Bombardment Squadron, Air Corps, March Field, Riverside, Calif., dated December 5, 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSTRUCTION OF PHILIPPINE CITIZENS AT THE MILITARY ACADEMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2399) to permit citizens of the Philippine Islands to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on line 8, after the word "regulation", to insert "and in such numbers", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands and pending the final and complete withdrawal of the sovereignty of the United States over said islands, and solely at the expense of said Commonwealth, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations and in such numbers as he may prescribe, to permit citizens of the Philippine Islands to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund" was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have the joint resolution go over. I do not recall that the Committee on the Library has discussed it, and I do not see the chairman of that committee present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1381) to amend the act approved February 13, 1925, entitled "An act to amend the Judicial Code, and to further define the jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of Appeals and of the Supreme Court, and for other purposes", was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think that a bill of this character ought to be explained. I do not know what the recommendation of the Department is. I have not had an opportunity of examining the record, and I suggest that the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DEPOSITIONS IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

The bill (S. 1382) to provide for the taking of depositions in criminal proceedings, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the testimony of any witness may be taken by any party in any criminal proceeding by deposition de bene esse at any time before trial and subsequently to the arrest of the accused, the finding of any indictment, or the filing of any information or complaint.

SEC. 2. Reasonable notice shall be given in writing by the party proposing to take such deposition or by the attorney for such party to the attorneys for every other party to the proceeding, which notice shall state the name of the witness or witnesses and the time and place of the taking of such deposition. The deposition shall be taken before any judge of any court of the United States or before a United States commissioner. Any person may be compelled to appear and testify as provided by this act in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify in court.

SEC. 3. If the deposition is taken in behalf of the United States, and if any defendant or defendants are in custody, the officer having custody of such defendant or defendants shall be notified of the time and place set for such examination, and shall produce the defendant or defendants thereat, and shall keep him or them in the presence and hearing of the witness or witnesses during the examination.

SEC. 4. Any deposition taken under authority of this act shall be transmitted to the court having jurisdiction of the offense in accordance with the provisions of section 865 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 641).

SEC. 5. The deposition, including direct- and cross-examination, may be read in evidence at the trial by any party if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that (1) the witness is deceased, or (2) is unable to attend the trial because of sickness or infirmity, or, (3) by procurement of any defendant, has avoided the service of process or otherwise has been prevented from attending the trial, or (4) is not within the jurisdiction of the court.

ST. JOHN RIVER BRIDGE BETWEEN MAINE AND NEW BRUNSWICK

The bill (H. R. 4505) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Maine and the Dominion of Canada to maintain a bridge already constructed across the St. John River between Madawaska, Maine, and Edmundston, New Brunswick, Canada, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SABINE RIVER BRIDGES, LOUISIANA AND TEXAS

The bill (H. R. 6988) authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 7044) authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 6, in Sabine Parish, La., meets Texas Highway No. 21, in Sabine County, Tex., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURGATOIRE AND APISHAPA RIVERS, COLORADO

The bill (H. R. 7870) to provide a preliminary examination of the Purgatoire (Picketwire) and Apishapa Rivers, in the State of Colorado, with a view to the control of their floods and the conservation of their waters was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAIVER OF JURY TRIAL

The bill (S. 2617) to amend the Judicial Code to permit defendants in criminal cases to waive trial by jury was announced as next in order.

Mr. McGILL. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I happen to know that the Senator from Kansas objected to this bill when it was before the committee, but at the last meeting of the committee the Senator from Kansas was not present, at which time the question was raised as to whether Congress could empower or authorize a defendant to waive trial by jury in a felony case and whether the Constitution would prevent his so doing. We obtained a letter from the Attorney General who explained that this bill is one which had been recommended by the conference on crime. He also submitted to us a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in which that Court held that the defendant may waive jury trial even in a felony case.

The bill if enacted would merely add, I think, to the existing law the protection to the defendant that the waiver must be made in person in open court, and a record made of the waiver. It could not be done by counsel. That would be an added protection and safeguard to the defendant. With that explanation, I wonder if the Senator from Kansas might withdraw his objection to the bill?

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, it is true that I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary at the time this bill was reported, nor had I been advised until now that there had been an opinion rendered to the committee by the Attorney General. I shall be very much interested in reading some of the decisions referred to by him, inasmuch as, if they hold as the Senator from New Mexico has indicated, they are contrary to earlier decisions which have held that in a prosecution in a felony case the accused is entitled to the right of trial by jury and that right cannot be taken away. I am opposed to this measure as a matter of principle.

My judgment is that if the courts are vested with this authority—and I am not questioning the integrity of the courts—the courts and prosecuting officers are quite likely to cause defendants, accused persons in felony cases to waive their right of trial by jury in order that a lesser penalty may be imposed in case of conviction. I object to the passage of the bill as a matter of principle.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGILL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read from article 3 of the Constitution. Of course the Constitution is largely an extinct document at the present time, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to this provision:

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury.

Mr. McGILL. That is where there is a trial.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. I read from amendment seven of the Constitution.

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

I wish to say that I object to the bill on principle.

Notwithstanding the opinion of the Attorney General, I think that the right of trial by jury should be kept inviolate in this country; I am opposed to this bill, and I hope it will not be passed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the matter is in controversy I shall object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, merely in reply to the suggestion with reference to the constitutional provisions, I desire to say that those provisions have been uniformly held by the courts to be for the protection of the defendant and that that right cannot be taken away from him. The bill does not attempt to deprive the defendant of any right whatever. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the state of the law which now exists is recognized, and the bill would throw another safeguard around the defendant. I think Senators who are objecting as a matter of principle are doing that which they would not desire to do if they understood the real purpose of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, for 150 years we have considered the right of trial by jury as a constitutional right. I do not think we ought to overrule that principle after 150 years of very satisfactory application.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been passed over on objection. The next order of business will be stated.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 29) to amend the laws relating to proctors' and marshals' fees and bonds, and stipulations in suits in admiralty was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3038) to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Rapides Parish, La., to the State of Louisiana for the purpose of a State highway across a portion of the Federal property occupied by the Veterans' Administration facility, Alexandria, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as no one seems to be interested in the bill I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2303) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, as amended and supplemented, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

REPATRIATION OF CERTAIN INSANE AMERICAN CITIZENS

The bill (S. 2369) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the repatriation of certain insane American citizens", approved March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1495), was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the application of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer to St. Elizabeths Hospital, in the District of Columbia, for treatment, all citizens of the United States legally adjudged insane in any foreign country, colony, or dependency, whose legal residence in one of the States, Territories, or possessions of the United States, or the District of Columbia, it has been impossible to establish. Upon the ascertainment of the legal residence of persons so transferred to the hospital, the superintendent of the hospital shall thereupon transfer such persons to their respective places of residence, and the expenses attendant thereon shall be paid from the appropriation for the support of the hospital.

Upon the request of any such patient, his relatives, or friends, he shall have a hearing in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia upon his mental condition and the right of the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital to hold him for treatment.

The President shall have power to enter into executive agreements with foreign countries providing for the reciprocal repatriation of insane persons, and for their transportation, care, and treatment.

COMPROMISE OF CERTAIN INSURANCE CONTRACTS

The bill (S. 1892) to amend the act authorizing the Attorney General to compromise suits on certain contracts of insurance was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sixth paragraph following the subtitle "Veterans' Administration" in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 283, ch. 101), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Attorney General of the United States is hereby authorized to agree to a judgment to be rendered by the presiding judge of the United States court having jurisdiction of the case, pursuant to compromise approved by the Attorney General upon the recommendation of the United States attorney charged with the defense, upon such terms and for such sums within the amount claimed to be payable, in any suit brought under the provisions of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, on a contract of yearly, renewable term insurance or Government-converted life insurance, which may be now pending or hereafter may be filed, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to make payments in accordance with any such judgment: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Veterans' Administration for all payments of insurance made in accordance with any such judgment: Provided further, That all such judgments shall constitute final settlement of the claim and no appeal therefrom shall be authorized."

INTEREST OF UNITED STATES IN BANKRUPTCY CASES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2744) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto", which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended, be, and is hereby, amended by striking out the last sentence of subdivision (e), clause (1), of section 77B, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "If the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder of the corporation seeking reorganization under this section, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to accept or reject a plan in respect of such interests or claims of the United States which shall be deemed to be affected by the plan. As long as the United States of America, or any agency thereof, or any corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States of America, is a creditor or stockholder of the corporation seeking reorganization under this section, no plan of reorganization which does not provide for payment in full of such interests or claims of the United States within 90 days after confirmation by the judge shall be confirmed in any proceeding under this section except upon the acceptance, as aforesaid, by the Secretary of the Treasury, certified to the court."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who introduced the bill, to explain the changes proposed to be made in the law?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall be glad to do so. The bill was introduced at the request of the Treasury Department.

There was a subcommittee of three or five members of the Judiciary Committee which considered the measure. My information is that they held hearings, and two witnesses were heard. The Department, as I have said, drew the bill. Of course, I approve it and think it is necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M'NEIL ISLAND LAND ACQUISITION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3059) to authorize the acquisition of land on McNeil Island, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is hereby authorized to acquire by condemnation proceedings all of that portion of McNeil Island which is not now owned by the United States, Gertrudis Island, and Pitt Island, all in the State of Washington, at a total cost of not to exceed $300,000.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this bill was drawn by the Department of Justice. It looks toward the acquisition of land on McNeil Island for the enlargement of the Federal prison. It has been examined by the Judiciary Committee and reported favorably.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES MEMORIAL FUND

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar 980, being the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Arizona that I objected to the consideration of the joint resolution when it was called because the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] was not present. The Committee on the Library, of which I happen to be a member, had the measure before it for consideration, and I think it better to have a conference about it before it is finally passed.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the able Senator is correct. I merely wish to say that the joint resolution passed the House after having been submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. As the House passed the measure it related to the acquiring of "legal literature." After it passed the House the Judiciary Committee of the House sent word to our committee that they would suggest, if the Senate passed it, that we strike out, on page 2, line 11, the words "legal literature" and insert the words "works on jurisprudence."

However, I accede to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ROBINSON. For the information of the Senator from Arizona, I wish to say that some time ago, at the request of a committee representing the American Bar Association, I introduced and had referred to the Senate Committee on the Library a joint resolution making disposition of the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund. That committee held hearings. A large number of witnesses appeared before the Library Committee of the Senate. I do not think the committee as yet has reached a conclusion as to what action should be taken.

The joint resolution to which I am now referring provided for the acquisition from the fund of portraits of the various members who have served on the Supreme Court of the United States, to be placed in the Supreme Court Building, and the purchase of certain scholarships from the fund.

For the reason that opportunity ought to be afforded to decide what is best to be done about the fund, I think the joint resolution now before the Senate should go over.

Mr. ASHURST. I join in that suggestion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to say that in the hearings before the Library Committee, at which I was present, not only was the entire measure introduced by the Senator from Arkansas, as he has stated, before the committee, but especially that part of it which referred to scholarships for deserving young Americans who desire to become lawyers and are not able to acquire an education was very strongly stressed; and there were many expressions in the committee in its favor. So I think the joint resolution should go over until the matter can be worked out.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to say that it is obvious that I could have no personal predilection, no set view, on the subject. The joint resolution came to the Committee on the Judiciary in due and regular course after it passed the House. So far as I am concerned, I think it is wise and proper that the various measures should be considered together. I certainly have no objection to this joint resolution going over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that that concludes the consideration of the calendar.

PENSIONS TO VETERANS OF SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, it was ordered that after the completion of the calendar the Senate should proceed to the consideration of House bill 6995, granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, their widows and dependents, and for other purposes, which bill the Chair now lays before the Senate, and recognizes the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL].

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, at the time the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into, when this bill was reached on the call of the calendar, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the majority leader, was not on the floor. It has been stated to me that he does not wish to have the Senate take up the bill at this time, but desires to have a few days in which to consider it. Under those circumstances it is not my desire to dispose of the matter today.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. The Chair has announced that it was agreed by unanimous consent that this bill should come up at this time. I was not present at the time the agreement was made. Does it mean that the bill will become the unfinished business at this time? What is the nature of the agreement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, from representations made to me after I returned to the Chamber I understood that there had been an agreement that the bill would be passed over to the end of the call of the calendar, and called again. I do not understand that any agreement was made to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McGILL. Only one Senator made any objection whatever at the time the bill was reached on the call of the calendar. I think the proposal made by me at the time has been correctly stated. However, I am not disposed to seek to take advantage of that situation. I should like, if I may, to have an understanding that the bill will be taken up for consideration at a very early date. I think it should be disposed of soon. The bill, I am informed, passed the House of Representatives unanimously.

Mr. McNARY. Why does not the Senator press forward with the bill now?

Mr. McGILL. I am ready to go forward. It is my understanding, however, that the majority leader prefers to have the bill go over for a time.

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire if there was a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the bill. We were proceeding under an agreement to consider unobjected bills on the calendar, and I did not understand that an agreement had been made to proceed with this bill this afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. I do not know anything about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that when this bill was reached in its order on the calendar an agreement was made to take up the bill immediately upon the completion of the calendar and dispose of it.

Mr. McNARY. Then, of course, the 5-minute rule would apply.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the bill go over for the present. I should like to have an opportunity of investigating it a little further.

Mr. McGILL. Would the Senator be disposed to——

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot now fix a time to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McGILL. I am not asking the Senator to fix a time, but I am asking him if he would be disposed to take up the bill at an early date.

Mr. ROBINSON. After I shall have investigated the bill I will advise the Senator.

Mr. McGILL. The bill merely reenacts the pension laws pertaining to Spanish-American War veterans and veterans of the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection as they existed prior to March 19, 1933.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that. I understand that the bill repeals all laws affecting the subject which have been passed during the past 2 years, and reestablishes laws which formerly existed. I should like an opportunity to investigate the matter. I understood that the bill would be passed over today, and I also understood that that had been done with the understanding that the bill should be again called at the end of the calendar.

I do not wish to be obstinate about the matter. All I am asking is an opportunity to look into it. An opportunity will be afforded to take up the bill.

Mr. McGILL. With the understanding that it may be taken up—I should like to have it taken up as early as possible—I do not wish to press forward at a time that is not agreeable to the majority leader.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 2582 be laid before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. That Senate bill 2582, the merchant-marine bill, be laid before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator will have to make a motion. That cannot be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that Senate bill 2582 be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator should move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I make that motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	La Follette	Pope
Ashurst	Copeland	Logan	Radcliffe
Austin	Costigan	Lonergan	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2582) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes.

LESSON OF OUR STEAMSHIP "LEVIATHAN"

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, the Leviathan, 907 feet 6 inches in length and 100 feet beam, the mightiest merchant vessel of the American fleet and one of the six greatest built by man, stands idle by order of the President for its permanent withdrawal from our ocean carrying trade.

Though it is the greatest ocean carrier owned by Uncle Sam, and though the contract for its operation by the company in which the President's personal friends are stockholders has not expired, the Leviathan, by Executive approval stands as idle as a painted ship on a painted ocean.

I have no desire herewith to discuss the testimony brought out by Senate committees. I do not mention the case of the Leviathan because of the peculiar circumstance that the company, as alleged by the former Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Ewing Mitchell, has been forgiven its debt for $1,720,000 due the Government in damages pursuant to the canceled contract, and not because this alleged "gift" to the company goes to beneficiaries who include Mr. Vincent Astor, owner of the White House magazine Today, and navigator of the yacht Nourmahal, which carries the President on his fishing trips.

My reference to the Leviathan is to point an economic lesson of national significance. It is this, that our great ocean carrier stands rusting in the harbor because of national policies which have destroyed the business of American carriers on the sea. The Leviathan stands idle because of economic policies which have destroyed the cargo and passenger demands of American business by sabotage of the industries that call for and yield cargoes and passengers. The Leviathan rides in idleness as a public warning of the sabotage daily wrought by political wreckers under the deadly policies called "new deal." It may well carry, nailed to its masthead, the words from the Old Book: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The people of the United States know what happened to the Leviathan when they look about them and note what has happened to their industries and employment, their home trade and foreign trade, their banks and utilities, their railways and farms and mills and mines—after only 2 years of this wrecking crew under the edicts of the new deal.

They know what happened to the Leviathan when they get the star-chamber tariff reports from the State Department, the Executive tariff-making machine, flooding our markets with foreign imports and destroying both our industries and export trade—destroying the jobs of the wage earners and the cargoes for our rails and ships.

They know what happened to the Leviathan when they hear of the 12,000,000 acres of American cotton plowed under by a fascist dynasty, thereby plowing under our greatest source of cargo exports. They read the story in the reduction of the American cotton crop from 13,000,000 bales to 9,000,000, and the curtailment of one-half our cotton-cargo exports. They read it again in the reduction of our exports of cotton cloth by the amount of 150,000,000 yards since 1932. They read it in the flood of cotton-goods imports carried in foreign bottoms—Japan alone bringing into American markets 8,000,000 yards in the first 60 days of 1935, or 10 times the amount brought by Japan during the entire year 1932.

They read the fate of the Leviathan in the sabotage of 6,000,000 pigs converted into useless fertilizer, though needed by the unemployed and hungry, and by the destruction of our pork exports carried in our ships abroad. They read it in the Treasury outpouring of corn-hog checks by which the Government has cooperated with drought, flood, and disease to cut down our corn crop of last year by over 50 percent to the hitherto low record of the "horse and buggy" days of 1882.

American farmers read the fate of the Leviathan when they read the Government reports of the Departments of Agriculture and Commerce, showing that under new-deal sabotage and star-chamber tariffs directed by the administration in violation of the legislative powers granted by the Constitution, our farm export trade has been destroyed and the flood of imports carried here in foreign ships has been stimulated, until the years 1934 and 1935 reveal this picture:

Wheat, including flour, for the fiscal year 1935: For the first time in the memory of any living American, this country, once the world's greatest exporter of both wheat and flour, practically had no exports, and showed imports of 8,000,000 bushels.

Corn in the fiscal year 1934–35: This country, which formerly produced the world's chief supply both of corn and corn-fed livestock products, has imported, this year, over 5,000,000 bushels, while exporting less than one-tenth of that.

Oats: Though in the 5 years, 1928–32, our oat crop averaged 1,200,000,000 bushels a year, our total exports in the past 2 years of the new deal have amounted to only 1,500,000 bushels in the aggregate, while our imports of only 7 months of the present fiscal year alone exceed 7,000,000 bushels.

Barley: Our barley production has been cut down 60 percent since 1932, and our exports cut down 75 percent, while our imports in the present fiscal year are more than double our exports.

Rye: Our rye crop of last year was 60 percent below the former 10-year average, and our exports during the present fiscal year beginning last July amount to a grand total of just 249 bushels, while our imports of rye during the present year and last year amount to 17,800,000 bushels.

Hay: By the combined effect of the A. A. A. and drought, including the sabotage of the livestock which makes the market for hay, our hay production has been cut down from 82,000,000 tons in 1932 to 56,000,000 in 1934, and our imports during the present fiscal year since last July have been 49 times our exports.

Butter: In the first 3 months of the present calendar year, this country imported 8,500,000 pounds of butter, or nearly twice as much as during the 3 years, 1930, 1931, and 1932, combined. Our butter imports in March alone rose to 4,928,000 pounds, or 80 times our exports. This butter came from the farthest corner of the earth, New Zealand, to make good our home supply reduced by 40,000,000 pounds through the combined effect of drought aided by the A. A. A. slaughter of dairy cows.

Cheese: Our cheese imports beginning January this year are coming in at the rate of 4,000,000 pounds a month, or 40 times our exports. Our cheese production in 1934 was 120,000,000 pounds less than the year before.

Potatoes: Potato imports in the crop year 1933–34 exceeded 2,000,000 bushels, or three times our exports, and the Government is now making contracts and paying money out of the Treasury to induce a still smaller production in aid of still larger imports.

Canned beef: In 1934 we imported from Argentina, Paraguay, and Uruguay canned beef to the value of $40,000,000 while paying out Treasury cattle checks and slaughtering 6,500,000 cattle to help drought cut down our beef supply in aid of South American imports, which already have more than doubled since 1932.

Hogs and hog products: Our exports of lard last year declined 148,000,000 pounds from the year before, and were less than half the exports of 10 years before. We are paying out corn-hog checks at the rate of several hundred million dollars a year from the Treasury deficit and have produced a pork famine by reducing our hog population one third; and yet the pretended emergency of the 1936 Presidential election calls for further pig sabotage and further corn-hog checks to prolong the pork famine until election day.

Volume of meat imports: In 1934 this country, which for years has led the world in export of meat products, imported 101,000,000 pounds of foreign meat, while paying out hundreds of millions at the expense of taxpayers to reduce the home supply. In sausage casings, imports from abroad reached last year 22,600,000 pounds, or 10,000,000 more than in 1932. Imports of beef products, followed by the slaughter of 6,500,000 American cattle, were nearly double those of the year before—demonstrating the increasing efficiency of the new deal in favor of production abroad and cargoes for foreign vessels.

Thus it is significant that in the same week that we get the news from the Government that the Leviathan, our largest merchant ocean carrier, is permanently withdrawn from ocean trade we get from the A. A. A. a pamphlet on current farm imports, which opens with the following significant sentence, so characteristic of Secretary Wallace, and we read:

> Agricultural imports into the United States have become a factor in the news of the day.

This "news of the day" regarding the rising volume of farm imports must be grand news to the farmers who carry a mortgage debt of $4,000,000,000 and pay out $250,000,000 a year in taxes.

It is a new deal for American agriculture, which in the fiscal year 1920 sold abroad farm products valued at $3,800,000,000—now reduced to around $500,000,000 with an excess of imports over exports in over half the entire list of staple products.

It is a new deal for American ships, which in 1920 carried American farm and mill exports valued at over $3,000,000,000, and today one-sixth of that.

It is a new deal in American shipbuilding, which dropped from 1,051 merchant ships built in American yards in 1919 to just 2 small ships in 1933; from 4,075,000 tons built in our yards 16 years ago to a bare 18,000 last year.

Under the new deal our export trade has dropped to less than one-third of that under the old deal of 6 years ago.

It is new deal in the history of our American merchant marine by reason of which a merchant marine with 4,000 ships less than 10 years ago lacks cargoes even for the ships we have.

Only one-third of the reduced ocean trade we have is carried in American ships even by the aid of subsidies. And now, when the International Mercantile Marine Co., which I understand is under British registry—notwithstanding that Stockholder Vincent Astor, lord admiral of the President's flagship Nourmahal, is presumed to be American—ties up the Leviathan at the dock it is awarded an extra subsidy, or corn-hog check of $1,720,000.

In short, the Leviathan is in the same case as the 12,000,000 acres of cotton plowed under, the 6,000,000 pigs converted into useless fertilizer, and the 6,500,000 cattle sabotaged to stimulate beef imports from Argentina, Paraguay, and Uruguay.

The Leviathan is in the case of the several thousand cotton mills closed by the processing taxes. It is in the case of the cereal mills that are closed by imports from Canada, and the cooperative creameries that are closed by butter imports from New Zealand, and the thousands of factories closed by imports from Japan.

The Leviathan is in the case of our banks and railways, our utilities and mines, commandeered or electrocuted by Cohen-Corcoran bills sent over here from the White House and railroaded onto the statute books by the threats of a $5,000,000,000 White House battleax.

Indeed, the Leviathan is in the case of this Congress, which is tied up to the White House dock and is unable to function as the Constitution provides, unable to pass a major bill not drafted by the White House, and unable to debate a bill under the normal rules of debate, and frequently not given a chance even to read the voluminous 100-page bills conceived by a brainless "brain trust" and drafted by Cohen, Corcoran, Frankfurter & Co. without regard for, and even in direct violation of, the express provisions of the Constitution.

In brief, the Leviathan is typical of the new deal on a Nation-wide scale. The 48 States of this Republic are tied up to the White House dock under orders not to function as States normally function under their own and the United States Constitution.

The Leviathan is ordered to a permanent retirement birth. When the President, in his first annual message a year ago, demanded that his temporary "emergency" powers be made permanent, he virtually demanded that Congress and the States should permanently retire from their constitutional business.

When, in the fall of 1933 and in January 1934, the President sent 4 Cabinet ministers and 8 bureau chiefs over to Delaware to create six Soviet holding companies having charters of "perpetual existence", he had apparently in mind to resolve all American private enterprises and industries into that condition of innocuous desuetude which in the case of the Leviathan stands for permanent retirement.

Thus the true issue of 1936, although the censorship of this administration on all avenues of communication may prevent the people understanding it, will be: Shall we have a permanent bureaucratic dictatorship here in Washington, and permanent retirement of Congress, the Supreme Court, the States, and the Republic? Shall the Republic become an idle Leviathan and dictatorship become the living Leviathan? Or shall American citizens join to restore America to Americanism and the Ship of State to its course under the Constitution?

Mr. President, I ask leave to print an industrial control report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

> Industrial control reports, issued weekly by the James True Associates, National Press Building, Washington. No. 103. June 22, 1935
>
> HOLDING DOWN THE LID
> Unfortunately, the big jolt of the week appears to be fading out. Monday there were hopes that the charges of Ewing Y. Mitchell would result in exposing the deplorable inefficiency in various departments. But the Senate committee has stamped out the spark before it reached the dynamite.
>
> Mitchell is absolutely honest and for many months has suffered disillusionment. He made the mistake of accepting the new deal as an honest program. The value of his charges is the resulting wide publicity regarding the dangerous maladminstration of the Steamship Inspection Service and the Aeronautics Branch of the Department of Commerce. Politically, his attack on the deal with Vincent Astor's shipping company confirms sinister suspicions in the minds of many.
> Unlike many honest men who have been thrown down the back stairs by the administration, Mitchell cannot be muzzled. He has personally assured us that he will continue his attack until it results in a complete investigation. Secretary Roper's allegation of inefficiency is a joke. Mitchell would not play both ends against the middle, and Roper needed his job.

Since the bonus veto, the administration has felt the need of winning support by favoring veterans. Mitchell's successor, J. M. Johnson, of South Carolina (Roper's State), is a veteran.

Mitchell's charge regarding Senator Cutting's death and the Morro Castle disaster forced Attorney General Cummings to order an investigation. The more serious the findings, the less the chances for a revelation. It looks like another whitewash, unless Mitchell has fired but a small part of his ammunition. A revealed scandal in one department would force inquiries into a number of evil-smelling conditions.

WHITE HOUSE CHANGES

Roosevelt appears to have gained some weight during the last 6 months, and there is a possible improvement in physical condition. He is plainly worried, and his attitude at press conferences has radically changed. He is petulant, intemperate, and occasional questions now receive inane replies. Much of the old urbanity is gone. A more critical attitude of an increasing number of correspondents is apparently resented.

NEW-DEAL MANAGEMENT

Contradictions and mental vagaries are beginning to fulfill our predictions. Certain prominent political leaders are said to realize the mental irresponsibility. Important Members of both Houses, after recent interviews, have expressed concern. This phase is serious and, in our opinion, cannot be kept under cover many months longer.

THE FAIR-HAIRED BOY

If bad blood between Secretary Ickes and Harry Hopkins boils over, as it probably will, Ickes will go. Although Ickes has been thoroughly and properly damned by industry for many of his policies and activities, he has done the better job. The bond that holds Hopkins to his job appears to be more than the affinity between fanatical minds intent upon the same insane venture. Despite Hopkins' howling against "politics" in F. E. R. A., insiders say that he stands well with Farley and has the support of the international influence behind the administration. It is possible that he learned enough of the "inside" to hold his job as long as he wants it, while connected with the New York State administration under Governor Roosevelt.

Nothing could indicate the motives of the administration more clearly than the favoritism shown Hopkins. Every county in the country has its F. E. R. A. scandals. It is estimated that more than 50 percent of the first billion and a half intrusted to Hopkins reached the hands of grafters and political spoilsmen. Officials of more than 40 States have demanded investigations. But Hopkins, not so long ago an obscure, red-radical social worker, remains in a most important post, a pampered pet of the administration.

SPOLIATION EVIDENCE

A number of affidavits and signed statements in our possession show that in the distribution of relief there is an unbelievable amount of criminal labor exploitation, graft, political favoritism, and thievery. The condition in Philadelphia appears to be typical of many cities. There a group of citizens recently presented evidence to all local newspapers; but the editors refused to disclose the truth to the public.

This week, the Pennsylvania General Assembly has considered a resolution (no. 110) for a complete F. E. R. A. investigation. It states that taxpayers are demanding that the light of publicity be thrown on the whole system of distributing public relief, "and that some system be devised to cull from the list those who abuse the aid extended to them and those who paint false pictures of economic conditions in order to fasten a dole system foreign to American traditions on the body politic * * *."

DEFYING THE CONSTITUTION

Clearly Roosevelt is following the advice of the international despoilers. It is generally accepted here that "Karl Marx" Professor Frankfurter and his legal kikes wrote the A. A. A. amendments. Although many protests have reached the Senate Agricultural Committee and the White House, denouncing the amendments and accusing Wallace of setting himself up as a Stalen, Roosevelt has repeated his "must" on the bill.

A prominent "new dealer" is reported to have declared to a manufacturer's representative, "We know the amendments are unconstitutional, but we shall pass the bill and make you like it until a case reaches the Supreme Court. What we'll do to you will be a plenty." The constitutionality of all "must" bills now before Congress is seriously questioned by all recognized authorities here.

CONGRESSIONAL TEMPER CHANGING

The deluge of protests from the public, assisted by the few Americans in both Houses, appears to have stiffened some weak, yellow backbones and injected a little courage in cowardly, servile congressional hearts. The obvious conviction of the administration is that with $4,880,000,000 it can buy the American electorate. With the congressional majorities, greed for patronage and power is slowly giving way under the bombardment of protests from the public.

Last Thursday the change was particularly evident. The House Interstate Commerce Committee turned down Roosevelt's "death sentence" for public-utility holding companies, thus checking his similar threat against holding companies in all industries. House Republicans revolted against "new dealer" gag rule and started a filibuster that blocked passage of the deficiency bill; this action is expected to assure discussion of all "must" bills in the future. In voting to extend emergency nuisance taxes 1 year the Senate Finance Committee probably has shelved Roosevelt's "soak the rich" program until the next session of Congress.

IS SOCIALISM ON THE WAY?

Not only by means of the A. A. A. amendments, but through other proposed legislation, the administration has attempted to force licensing on industry. A recent bulletin issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce approves a licensing system used by the Russian Government. The administration already has entered hundreds of lines of business, and under the Delaware corporations, is prepared to take over every industry in the country.

This is in full accord with the socialist program for which Roosevelt broke his preelection promises and junked the Democratic platform. And socialist communities are getting ready for the big day. Milwaukee, under a socialist mayor, furnishes a typical example. An ordinance to amend the Milwaukee charter has been read twice before the mayor and the common council, and referred to the legislative committee.

In part, this ordinance reads: "The central board of purchases shall have the further power to purchase from the Government of the United States or any Federal agency created by it, or the State of Wisconsin or any agency thereof, created by said governments for such purpose, without the intervention of a formal contract."

BIDDING IN THE DARK

If you sell the Government, or if you are interested in another attempt of the administration to force unconstitutional restrictions, write the National Association of Manufacturers, Investment Building, Washington, for a copy of Law Department Bulletin of June 14. This is an analysis of Circular Letter No. 100 to the heads of all departments and establishments of the Government, issued by the procurement division of the Treasury and Senate bill No. 3055. The N. A. M. finds this bill to have the identical defects of the N. I. R. A., held to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The association also points out that if passed in its present form the bill would not represent a congressional determination of minimum wages and maximum hours but would represent a delegation of blanket authority to the President to decide wage and hour issues in every case.

CRACKING DOWN ON CHAINS

Representatives of manufacturers and distributors are seriously discussing and preparing to lobby for or against H. R. 8442, recently introduced by Representative PATMAN in the House. This proposed legislation would make it unlawful "for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price or terms of sale between purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality", prohibits the payment of brokerage or commission to buyers, eliminates pseudo advertising allowances, provides a presumptive measure of damages in certain cases to protect independents, the public, and manufacturers "from exploitation and unfair competitors."

REVIVING THE BLUE BUZZARD

Fulfilling our prediction as to "right" gestures, Roosevelt has appointed a rather conservative personnel for the new N. R. A. and has shelved the reds and Jews. When N. R. A. was in a position to control industry it was dominated by communistic radicals, some of them aliens. Now the dead Blue Eagle will be stuffed and mounted by personnel obviously selected for its value as a "front."

An effort is being made to strengthen the N. R. A. with industry by borrowing power from the Federal Trade Commission. Thursday, members of the Commission spent sometime at the White House. Since the N. R. A. Supreme Court decisions, the organization has received a great many inquiries regarding the procedure of trade-practice conferences.

Roosevelt does not like the Commission, because it cannot be readily manipulated politically. He likes it less since the Court told him he could not fire commissioners. Insiders say that he will transfer the authority to hold trade-practice conferences from the Commission to the N. R. A.

If this change takes place it will be solely for political reasons and against the interests of industry. Roosevelt has announced that the N. R. A. will be used for "research" and to combat industrial propaganda. Trade-practice conferences will give it a perfect smoke screen behind which to harass industry with threats of investigation and political reprisal.

OUR HAT IS OFF TO THE SENATOR

According to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senator THOMAS D. SCHALL, fearless and relentless administration foe, recently had this to say: "Only one newspaperman in this country had the insight to see behind the Johnsonian barrage of smoke-screen antics. Strangely enough, the man who brought this communistic set-up to light (the Wilmington corporations) was a man whom the Nation's no. 1 windbag barred from his press conferences because he told the truth about the N. R. A.—or, at least, a small portion of the truth. This man was James True, who publishes a weekly digest of uncolored business reports for business men who do not accept the pap handed out to newspapers by the 300 press agents on the pay roll of the Government * * *."

THE JAMES TRUE ASSOCIATES, By JAMES TRUE.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2582, the merchant marine bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2582, the merchant marine bill.

Mr. WHEELER, Mr. BLACK, Mr. COPELAND, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have not had a chance completely and thoroughly to investigate this bill; but I desire to say that a very thorough investigation should be made of the wisdom of passing the bill, because, as I read the measure, it is inconceivable to me that the Congress of the United States will pass a bill containing the provisions found in this one.

The bill provides, among other things, for financial aid to the merchant marine. As I read the report on the bill, it would indicate that the President of the United States favors the bill set out; but if Senators will analyze the message which the President sent to Congress, I am sure they will readily agree that there is no paragraph in the President's message which would indicate in the slightest degree that he favors any subsidy such as that which is set forth in the bill.

We have had a great many governmental scandals in connection with subsidies, particularly mail and shipping subsidies. It seems to me this bill opens the way for the greatest scandals that have ever been perpetrated by any bureau or any department of the Government of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have before us at the present time a report from the Postmaster General saying that most of the present mail subsidy contracts are void; and he implies, if he does not say so absolutely outright, that many of them are fraudulent.

The Senator from Montana will remember that some years ago I had these contracts examined. I came to the same conclusion. I think they are all fraudulent and void except about three. They have not been canceled; and with that report coming in that they are fraudulent and void, or most of them are, the idea of Congress in that situation, before any adjustment is made, before the contracts are taken up, or certainly before their validity is determined, giving these very companies one of the most liberal subsidies in the world, seems to me to be absolutely inconceivable. I do not see how we could do it under the circumstances.

I have always been opposed to subsidies. I am opposed to them now; and I expect to vote against this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

I desire to call attention to the fact that the bill contains a provision for regulation, and also for carrying out both the executive and the legislative will.

In his message of March 4, 1935, to the Congress of the United States, the President said, among other things:

Legislation providing for adequate aid to the American merchant marine should include not only adequate appropriation for such purposes and appropriate safeguards for its expenditure, but a reorganization of the machinery for its administration. The quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative duties of the present Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce should be transferred for the present to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Purely administrative functions, however, such as information and planning, ship inspection, and the maintenance of aids to navigation, should, of course, remain in the Department of Commerce.

Of course, the bill does not purport to carry out the President's message with reference to that feature of the subject.

I desire briefly to call attention to a few of the provisions of the bill which I have hurriedly analyzed.

The bill creates another board of five members, with salaries of $12,000 a year each, and then provides that they may employ lawyers, experts, and so on. Then they are first to study and make an investigation of this whole problem. That would be perfectly proper if they stopped with the investigation, and reported back to a subsequent Congress; but the bill goes on and says what?—

The Authority is authorized and directed to consider the application—of any citizen of the United States as defined in section 38 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 802), for financial aid in the construction, outfitting, and equipment of new vessels, or any vessels obligated to be built under an existing contract with the United States or the reconditioning of vessels already built, to be used on an essential service, route, or line in the foreign commerce of the United States. If the Authority determines that (1) the service, route, or line requires a new vessel of modern and economical design or the reconditioning of a vessel already built, to meet competitive conditions or to further promote the foreign commerce of the United States, or if it is found after consultation with the Navy Department that the construction of such vessel is advisable for national-defense purposes; (2) the plans and specifications of the proposed vessel meet the requirements of commerce; and (3) the applicant possesses the ability, experience, financial resources, and character necessary successfully to operate and maintain such vessel in the proposed service, the authority shall, in accordance with the provisions of this act—

Of whom?—

Do what?—

(a) determine the difference between the domestic and foreign reconditioning cost of a vessel of the type proposed to be built, or the difference between the domestic and foreign reconditioning cost of a vessel of the type proposed to be reconditioned; (b) submit said plans and specifications to the Navy Department, which shall have the right to suggest such changes therein as it may deem necessary or proper in order that the proposed vessel may be adequate as a naval or military auxiliary and otherwise suitable for the use of the Government in case of national emergency or for the national defense.

(B) In case the said specifications shall be approved by the authority and the Navy Department, the authority may grant a subsidy of such amount as will equal, but not exceed, the difference between—the fair and reasonable cost of constructing, outfitting, and equipping or reconditioning of the said vessel in an American shipyard and the fair and reasonable cost of constructing, outfitting, and equipping or reconditioning the same, or an equivalent vessel, under—under substantially the same specifications in a foreign shipyard of equal standing.

What?—

Just stop and think for a moment what that means! We will assume, for instance, that the authority first ascertain the cost of reconditioning a ship in England. They find that the cost of reconditioning the ship in England is about so much money. Then they say, "What will it cost in an American shipyard?" Then the Government of the United States proposes to pay the difference between those costs. The bill does not say that they shall be ships of identically the same specifications but "substantially the same specifications." Do not make any mistake at all about it. When the specifications of one of these ships are changed, it will be like changing the specifications of a block of buildings in the United States, or a big business house. I myself have had some experience along that line; and I found that when I was building a house, if I changed the specifications in the slightest degree, a tremendous amount was added to the cost.

So there is no protection whatever. In this bill there is absolutely no protection, because it is provided that the specifications shall be substantially the same.

What does "substantially the same" mean? It means anything. It throws the gates wide open for all kinds of graft and all kinds of corruption to creep in, even assuming that the Government of the United States wanted to undertake to pay the difference and say, "We are willing to pay the difference between the cost in Great Britain and the cost in the United States." We would leave it wide open for them to say, "These are substantially the same specifications," and consequently we would have graft.

Suppose the shipping board should say, for illustration, "You can have the ship built for $5,000,000 in Great Britain, but it will cost $10,000,000 in the United States." Then the Government of the United States pays that shipping outfit $5,000,000 more than it ought to have to pay. But suppose the shipowner said, "We can get this ship built in Japan for $2,000,000, and it would cost $10,000,000 in the United States." Then the Government of the United States, instead of paying $5,000,000 extra, would pay $8,000,000.

There is nothing to provide that the difference must be the difference in wages between this country and Canada, for instance, nothing to provide that the difference must be the same as the difference in the wages between the United States and England, or the wages in Germany and the United States, but it says in a foreign shipyard of equal standing.

Nobody would deny the fact that there are shipyards in Japan which would be considered of equal standing with shipyards in the United States, because they are turning out ships, according to the reports we are getting at the present time, which are comparable with ships built in the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call the attention of the Senator to another difficulty at this particular point. So long as international exchange is a fluctuating item there is no way in the world by which we can tell for more than 24 hours whether the differential is five million, or eight million, or twenty million dollars.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course. Suppose the pound sterling should drop tomorrow, or that money should become cheap in Germany, or money should become cheap in Japan tomorrow, with the fluctuating currency. I submit that there is no possible way of telling what it will be.

We have talked about the difference between the cost of goods at home and abroad, and have said that we should impose tariffs based upon the difference. There is no one on this floor who knows anything about that matter but who knows that we cannot find out the actual cost of the production of goods in foreign countries. It is an excellent theory, but when we come to investigate the costs in foreign countries, we find that it is a physical impossibility to get the facts.

Are we to say, "Here are the specifications", and are we to let bids, and say to England, "You can bid on this", and then let an American firm bid, and then say that we are going to build the identical ship in American shipyards?

Of course, the British are not going to bid, and the Japanese are not going to bid, under those circumstances, because they are not going to the trouble of sitting down and figuring out their costs when they know that after they have done it the bids will be rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The average life of one of these ships is supposed to be about 20 years.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Therefore the original cost of the ship is spread over a 20-year contract.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So that the Government of the United States will be for 20 years at the mercy of a construction differential fixed upon one given day, at a time when international values are changing overnight.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If we happened to pick the unfortunate moment to make the contract, we would have simply mortgaged the Treasury for 2 decades.

Mr. WHEELER. Absolutely. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator says with reference to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is in favor of an adequate American merchant marine?

Mr. WHEELER. I am.

Mr. FLETCHER. Operated and owned by American citizens?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator recognizes that the American shipbuilder and the American ship operator are under certain handicaps with reference to costs, does he not?

Mr. WHEELER. I presume that is so.

Mr. FLETCHER. In other words, it costs more to build a ship in an American yard than in foreign yards?

Mr. WHEELER. I have been so told, and I assume it to be true.

Mr. FLETCHER. It costs more to operate an American ship than to operate a foreign ship, generally speaking.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. American operators pay higher salaries, and there are more expensive conditions for the crews and officers, and therefore there is a difference between the cost of operating a ship under our flag and operating a ship under a foreign flag.

How can the Senator expect that an American merchant marine can be built and maintained with such differences existing as to the cost of building ships and the cost of operating ships, and if we keep that in mind, how is that handicap to be relieved, and is it not necessary to relieve that handicap in order that we may have and maintain an adequate American merchant marine?

Mr. WHEELER. If that be true, what will we have if we enact this measure? In the first place, while I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, if we do not have greater scandals in connection with this measure, if it shall become a law, than we have ever had in the history of the United States in connection with shipping, then I miss my guess, and I do not want to see this administration involved in the unparalleled scandals which we would have under this measure, and I know the Senator from Florida would not want that to happen.

If the shipping interests are entitled to this kind of a subsidy, then there is not an interest in the United States that is not entitled to this kind of a subsidy, and this would be an opening wedge for all kinds of things to come before Congress. In my humble judgment, it cannot be justified upon any theory of trying to protect the American merchant marine. There are no safeguards in the bill to protect the Government of the United States. As the Senator from Michigan has pointed out, with the fluctuations in the currencies of the world, it is impossible to find out what the costs will be tomorrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would not that condition obtain at any time in our history? If we sit still and do nothing and wait for conditions to be stabilized all over the world, we will get nowhere. In the meantime, we require ships; our commerce and trade and national defense require ships, and there is every reason why we must have ships operated under our flag in all parts of the world.

Mr. WHEELER. This is what the President said in his message to the Congress:

> This lending of money for shipbuilding has in practice been a failure. Few ships have been built and many difficulties have arisen from the repayment of the loans.

Now, it is proposed that we lend the money, it is proposed that we continue the very thing which the President says has been a failure.

The President said:

> Similar difficulties have attended the granting of ocean mail contracts. The Government today is paying annually about $30,000,000 for the carrying of mails which would cost, under normal ocean rates, only $3,000,000.

Yet it is proposed in this bill that we give them a subsidy. In my judgment, though I have not checked up on the figures, it is proposed in this bill, after helping the builders to build ships, to pay probably 50 or 75 percent, or the Lord only knows how much is proposed to be paid, then it is proposed that the Government pay the differential on the operating expenses of the ships.

In addition to that, it is proposed that loans shall be made. If the Government of the United States is to do that, we had better take over the shipping of this country. I am not in favor of doing it, and I do not think it is necessary to do it; but if it is proposed to open up the Treasury of the United States on this basis, to let them reach their hands into the Treasury and take out this money; if we are first to build the ship for them or give them a subsidy for building it, then give them a subsidy for operating it, and then give them 80 cents for carrying one class of mail, and 8 cents for carrying some other class of mail, then, perhaps, the Government should take over the shipping.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just once more? Personally, I should rather not see any subsidy. I have always contended against subsidy. However, it has been our history to a great extent that we have provided subsidies. Subsidies have led to scandals. However, that depends very largely on the administration. I believe the statement of our policy, as announced in the Shipping Act of 1920 and in the act of 1928, is a wise policy, and is sound today.

It comes down to this: We must either grant some Federal aid to our shipping or resort to the other method which the Senator suggests, namely, have the Government own and operate the ships. It seems to me we are confronted with one or the other of these conditions.

Under the act of 1928, the mail-contract provision was in the nature of what was called a subvention, but really a subsidy; and I think that act operated very well indeed. Under that act we built a great many ships; we sold a great many ships and we continued operating ships. Of course, foreign trade and commerce dropped away, and ships were idle all over the world beginning shortly after the passage of the act of 1928. As the President says, it was not, however, so much a defect in that scheme or plan that caused it to fail and brought on scandals which have been connected with it; that condition was mainly due to the errors and mistakes in the administration of the act.

I think we might have perfected that act, perhaps, by correcting some things which experience has shown should have been corrected; but the proposition now is to do away with that subvention, or indirect subsidy, and get down to a direct subsidy. It is for Congress to say whether or not it is going to grant any subsidies to shipping. If we can get along without them, I should rather not have them; but it seems to me we shall have to help our shipping somehow. We shall have to help in shipbuilding and ship operating if we are going to maintain our status as a maritime nation worthy of the name, and serve our commerce and our national defense.

It comes down to the question whether we are going to do it by granting aid both to shipbuilding and to ship operation, or whether the Government shall have to take over the whole enterprise.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. The bill provides, first, that we shall provide a subsidy amounting to the difference between the cost of building in some shipyard abroad and in the United States. How are we going to find out what it costs to build an identical ship in the shipyards in Japan? It is a physical impossibility which we shall be up against in the first place. It just cannot be done. In addition to that, we say that we are going to give a subsidy of the difference between the cost of operating an American ship and the cost of operating a foreign ship. What foreign ship are we going to base it upon? Are we going to base it upon the coolie labor of China, are we going to base it upon the coolie labor of Japan, or on what Great Britain pays, or on what Australia pays, or on what some South American country pays, or what are we going to base it upon?

Under this bill, if I am a shipowner, I have a perfect right to come to the United States maritime authority and say, "I am entitled to the difference between the cost of operating my ship from San Francisco to Tokyo and what it would cost Japan to operate a similar ship." In the case of New York, if I am shipping to Tokyo, I can say, "I am entitled to the difference between what it costs me to ship from New York to Tokyo and what it costs a Japanese shipowner to ship from New York to Tokyo." When it comes to shipping to England, I am entitled to the difference between the cost to me and the cost to an English shipowner.

If I am going around the world, as some of these vessels do, upon what shall the difference in cost be based?

I say we have nothing whatsoever upon which to base these payments except the wildest kind of judgment on the part of the maritime authority. We talk about laws being unconstitutional; we talk about not giving authority to some of these boards and commissions which have been condemned; and yet it is proposed in this bill to do what?

Here is what is proposed:

> The authority may, upon such terms and conditions as it may consider proper, authorize the exchange of any vessel or vessels owned by the Government for a vessel or vessels documented under the laws of the United States owned by American citizens.

In other words, we are going to let this board trade with some shipping outfit, trade a vessel which belongs to the United States for some vessel which belongs to them.

It is further provided in the bill that—

> The authority may lay up or scrap or sell for scrapping said vessel or vessels so acquired, or may sell, charter, or otherwise provide for the operation of said purchased vessel or vessels in some other service or route for which the vessel or vessels may be suitable.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator asked me a question. He seems to think there is great difficulty about ascertaining the difference in the cost of production in foreign yards and in the yards of the United States. Of course I understand that the Senator feels as I do, that American ships should be built in American yards. I cannot see any great difficulty in respect to ascertaining—not to a cent but comparatively accurately—the difference between the cost of constructing a ship on the Clyde, for instance, and the cost of constructing it in this country. I do not see any difficulty in ascertaining the difference in the cost of operating the ship, because we can ascertain the salaries and the needful expenses; and I think the difference can be ascertained to within a few cents.

Mr. WHEELER. It is inconceivable to me that any organization or any bureau can possibly find out what it costs the Japanese to operate one of these ships between San Francisco and Tokio, or what they pay to their labor. With coolie labor, with depreciated currencies, with all these other things, it is impossible to ascertain such costs correctly. No matter how honest the authority might be, we should be putting an impossible task upon them, and we should be putting upon them a task which the American people would not stand for, and which they would overwhelmingly repudiate the minute it was known that anything of the kind had been put in operation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. What astonishes me—and I came here thinking subsidies were a good thing—is the way all the legislative committees I have had the opportunity to attend seem to believe that any dishonesty in subsidy ought to be accepted, and that nobody ought to be criticized; that one who criticizes rascality in subsidy is criticizing subsidy itself. I came to the conclusion that the two things were so inextricably involved that a man could not honestly vote for a subsidy.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sure the Senator will appreciate this provision in the bill, which appears on page 67:

> In case the said specifications shall be approved by the authority and the Navy Department, the authority may grant a subsidy of such amount as will equal, but not exceed, the difference between the fair and reasonable cost of constructing, outfitting, and equipping or reconditioning of the said vessel in an American shipyard and the fair and reasonable cost of constructing, outfitting, and equipping or reconditioning the same, or an equivalent vessel, under substantially the same specifications in a foreign shipyard of equal standing.

Mr. LONG. I can define what that means in language which the Senator can grasp: It means, "Let your conscience be your guide."

Mr. WHEELER. It says, not "the same specifications", but "substantially the same specifications."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I desire to call the attention of my friend, the Senator from Montana, to the fact that in the Munitions Committee it was determined, by the evidence there produced, that the Navy Department did not even know the cost of ships built in private shipyards for the Navy Department. The evidence clearly reveals that fact. I think the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who is on the floor, will verify what I state—that the Navy itself, with all its ability or presumed ability to get at the facts, was unable to advise the members of the Munitions Committee of this body what it cost to build a battleship or a cruiser in a private shipyard in this country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What the Senator from Washington has said is true. I want to add another thought. We have discussed the impossibility of arriving at a firm differential so long as there is no firm basis of international exchange. I call attention that the board, in addition to everything else—indeed when it starts this process—has to decide whether the new vessel is necessary to meet competitive conditions or further to promote the foreign commerce of the United States. It has to make that decision at a time when foreign trade is just as chaotic as is foreign exchange. We cannot decide today where or what the proper foreign trade line will be next year or the year after.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, it seems to me it is perfectly asinine to say that a board sitting here in the city of Washington should have authority to decide whether it is necessary to build a vessel with which to ship commodities to India because we want to have some of that trade. If they should decide to do it, then they must figure out what the difference in cost of construction will be at some shipyard, the Lord only knows where, whether Shanghai or Tokyo or Bombay or some place in Great Britain; but we may rest assured this authority will be dominated sooner or later by the shipping interests just as the old Shipping Board was. We have had scandals enough with the old Shipping Board and with subsidies to justify us in urging that we should not set up another board to have perhaps more scandals.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not a fact this is just another shipping board?

Mr. WHEELER. That is all. It is just another shipping board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The last Shipping Board throughout almost its entire history as a rule acted entirely in the interest of the shipping companies. So far as I know they never protected the Government's interests. The enormous contributions of the Government to the Shipping Board were frittered away and we finally caught them lending Government money, in one case particularly, at a rate as low as one-eighth of 1 percent interest, and I have been informed that even the interest was not paid.

An enormous amount of money was borrowed to build ships and the agreement was to pay one-eighth of 1 percent interest, but even that interest was not paid, to say nothing of any of the principal. I do not believe anything was ever paid back to the Government. When a shipping company got in a close place it changed its name and organized a new company, and received further benefits from the Government, but gave nothing in return. The last Shipping Board was for many years a scandalous organization all the way through. It was a stench in the nostrils of all honest people. I am opposed to the establishment of another shipping board, regardless of what its name may be.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. As I read the bill, on its face it appears to establish a board of five persons with apparent blanket authority to open the doors of the Treasury of the United States to an unlimited raid by private shipbuilders and private shipping operators. Since I have been in the Senate I believe I have not seen a piece of legislation which proposed to give five men such unlimited power as this bill proposes to give. There are no restrictions on the exercise of their judgment or on the exercise of their lack of judgment. If we are going to pass this kind of measure—and this is not said in a spirit of facetiousness—I should like to have my State enjoy some of the privileges, so that it might take money out of the Federal Treasury to help feed the poor there.

I do not believe the people of the country will ever have a piece of legislation proposed to them which is so flagrantly a proposal to raid on the United States Treasury. I cannot imagine Congress passing this kind of legislation. The records of the Black committee are so damning an indictment of this kind of business that at this time the bill constitutes a bold challenge thrown in the teeth of the hungry people of the Nation. We made multimillionaires overnight under the Jones-White Act of 1928. Men in my section of the country became multimillionaires almost overnight.

The Congress of the United States is doing a dangerous thing in flaunting this kind of a measure in the face of millions of people in the country who today do not know the meaning of economic security. We have no business to be doing this sort of thing. I do not know why the shipping business should not stand on its own feet altogether. There are thousands of little business men in the country who would not presume to come here and ask Members of the United States Senate to vote them a subsidy; and yet they have just as much right, measured by the standards of decency and fair play in business, to ask us to vote them subsidies out of the Treasury of the United States as have the shipping interests to come here and propose or suggest that we pass this kind of legislation.

When we get to the point where a shipping company, for hauling one letter across the ocean, receives sufficient to pay for the ship which hauled it, then the time has come to call a halt. It is time to call a halt before the people become so outraged because of this kind of business that they will send men to the Senate who do not entertain such views, which may not be a very happy day for some of the gentlemen who have enjoyed these largesses out of the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Following up the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington, I recall in the investigation we made of Shipping Board contracts that one of the companies had a contract to carry the mail from San Francisco to some point on the South American coast. Within a year it carried 3 letters at 6 cents and 45 pounds of parcel post at $2.94, making a total of $3. That concern was given a subsidy of $102,000 a year for 10 years by the Shipping Board of that day, approved by the Postmaster General of that day. That is just one of dozens of such instances which grew up under the granting of ship subsidies. Whenever we establish subsidies we establish graft, and we all know it.

Mr. WHEELER. We cannot separate the two.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; we cannot separate the two.

Mr. WHEELER. After providing that there shall be paid the difference in the cost of building a ship of substantially the same specifications, then the bill goes on to provide as follows:

Provided, however, That the said subsidy may be increased—

After giving the one subsidy to a ship company, it may be increased—

Provided, however, That the said subsidy may be increased by an amount approved by the Secretary of the Navy as representing the extent of the extra cost of constructing, outfitting, equipping, or reconditioning said vessel as a naval auxiliary, and the applicant may also be credited with the estimated present value of the increased cost of operating such vessel during its economic life by reason of such naval provisions, over the cost of operating such vessel for commercial purposes.

I would not say anything that would in the slightest degree injure the feelings of my good friend the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], but I must confess that when I read the bill with this provision I felt it was inconceivable that the Congress of the United States, and particularly the Senate, should for one minute consider passing a bill of this kind with the possibilities for the almost inescapable graft and corruption that is sure to follow in the wake of the passage of such a bill.

I do not believe, and I cannot conceive, that the administration would for one second favor a bill of this kind. It is inconceivable to me that the President of the United States, if he studied this bill, if he examined these provisions, would for one moment sanction or sign a bill containing provisions which would result in scandal such as he must know and everybody else must know would follow, if they have followed the Shipping Board's operations, of which the Senator from Tennessee has spoken.

This bill not only contains the provisions to which I refer but it is filled almost from beginning to end with similar provisions; and if one subsidy is not enough, the framers of the bill have piled another subsidy upon it; and if that is not enough, they have piled another subsidy upon it. There is simply one subsidy upon another. No Government board in the city of Washington could possibly withstand the pressure which would be brought to bear upon it if this kind of legislation should be passed.

I feel that we not only should not pass this bill but, as a matter of fact, that the bill should not be brought up for consideration at all at this time, when there is so much other legislation that is pressing. I feel that it is unfortunate to bring a bill of this kind before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have not examined the entire bill; but my recollection is that about 1922 the late Senator from Washington, Mr. Jones, introduced a ship-subsidy bill which probably did not go over one-third as far as this bill goes. If I remember correctly, I spoke for 8 hours and 23 minutes in order to defeat that bill, and it was defeated. Before I got through Senator Jones withdrew the bill, and it never came up again.

I have been against these subsidies for a long time. I think they are very, very bad; but even if they were good, as a general thing they could not possibly be good under the provisions of this bill. In saying that I mean no reflection upon the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], whom I love very much and admire very greatly. I hope he will not think our relations are in the slightest way affected. Ever since I have been in the Senate, for many, many years, I have invariably fought this kind of a subsidy bill, and I am merely carrying out that uniform policy of fighting subsidies. I believe they are wrong.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Tennessee I desire to say that I am much obliged to him for his kind words. Of course, this is not my bill. It is the bill of the committee which formulated it, and it did so according to the yardstick laid down by the President of the United States. So the Senator does not need to apologize to me. I am simply representing the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. This bill, then, was not drafted by the Senator's committee, or by him?

Mr. COPELAND. It was not drafted by me.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was it drafted by the Senator's committee?

Mr. COPELAND. It was drafted by the Merchant Marine Subcommittee of the Commerce Committee in conference with the similar committee of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House. This bill is a composite bill. It does not represent my thought.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very happy to hear it.

Mr. COPELAND. I am for the bill, and at the right time an effective answer can be made to every statement made by the Senator from Montana and by other Senators; but it is not worth while to do that now. It is for the Senate to decide whether or not it cares to consider a subsidy bill which has been asked for by the President. If the Senate does not care to do it, so far as I am concerned I shall be glad of it. I shall have more leisure. I shall be able to do many other things which will be less onerous than this particular thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will use his great influence in not pressing the bill at this late time of the session.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that he brought out, as have the Senator from Montana and other Senators who have spoken, the scandals of the past. In the independent offices appropriation bill of last year a provision was made that the mail contracts should be modified or canceled by the 30th of April of this year. It was then found that we could not get the bill ready by that time, so the time was extended until the 31st of October, because the President desired that some way might be found to cancel or modify those contracts, and not have our country involved in 42 lawsuits.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me say to the Senator that in my judgment there is danger only in 3 of the 42 lawsuits. There will be no trouble about the Government successfully defending the other 39 lawsuits, because the contracts are void. I hoped we might make some other arrangement on the subject, though not by way of extension of the contracts now in existence, for every one of them except three smells to heaven, and ought to be canceled. The Postmaster General has issued an order canceling them, and they ought to be canceled.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no, Mr. President!

Mr. McKELLAR. He has made a report saying that for the most part they are dishonest and corrupt, and that they ought to be canceled.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to say to the Senator from Tennessee, if I may, with the permission of the Senator from Montana, that I have very serious question if a half dozen of those contracts can be canceled.

Mr. McKELLAR. I examined them very thoroughly a number of years ago. I think it was 4 or 5 years ago that we had an investigation before our committee; and with the exception of one contract which I think was fraudulent in the beginning but which the Congress unfortunately ratified, and two others about which there was a doubt, I came to the conclusion that about 39 of them were fraudulent and void.

Mr. COPELAND. There may be a difference of opinion, of course. Nevertheless, under the provisions of law the President may determine what contracts he thinks may be modified or canceled. He then may offer the amount of money which he feels will liquidate the damage. Then the claimants are permitted to go into the Court of Claims; but just as surely as fate there will be 42 lawsuits, and when we get through we do not know how many millions may be involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment. I do not desire to enter into any controversy.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not going to enter into any controversy, but I wish to cite a precedent. We were told the same thing when the air mail contracts were canceled. We were told about the lawsuits that would follow, and I believe there were two or three, and I think one or two of them may be still in the courts. The Government, however, does not stand to lose anything by the cancelation of the air mail contracts, and they were canceled for exactly the same reasons that these contracts ought to be canceled. They were canceled for fraud in their make-up.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield further?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not going to undertake for one moment to defend what has happened in the past. That is over the dam so far as I am concerned; but we have an American merchant marine, and we desire to preserve it. Ninety percent of our vessels are over 13 years of age. Seven or 8 years from now we shall have no merchant marine unless we find a way to build it up. The shipping business is not like a railroad within our own country. It is an international business with which we are dealing; and, in my judgment, we shall have to choose between subsidies which represent the difference between the cost of American and foreign operation and subsidies to help in building the ships.

We have chosen to place American workmen upon the seas and to give them exactly the same privileges accorded American workmen upon land, such as an 8-hour shift, plenty of air space in their quarters, and wholesome food. Through the La Follette Acts, of which I myself approve, we have given the American seaman a chance to live, and to live decently. We cannot do that if we do not maintain our American merchant marine.

Senators may choose; they may wipe out all the laws which make for decency and fair treatment of American labor upon the seas; they may wipe out the American merchant marine; but, in my judgment, if we are to do right by our country, we will see to it that we have an effective merchant marine, and if any wise man here can rise in his place and tell us how that can be done except by the payment of subsidies, as proposed by the President in his message of March 4, he will be the wisest man in our whole country.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question, if I may.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I recognize that the Senator is very sincerely devoted to the principle of preserving a merchant marine with the aid of subsidies.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I am in favor of having laws to preserve the American merchant marine. If it can be done without subsidies, I shall be happy.

Mr. BONE. If subsidies be necessary; I will add that qualification.

I have a letter from my State enclosing an advertisement which appeared in a Seattle newspaper. It was the advertisement of a big chain store which is part of a national chain. It advertised coffee, cigarettes, a certain type of lard, canned milk, and one or two other items which I do not at the moment recall.

Mr. LONG. Louisiana molasses.

Mr. BONE. Perhaps molasses. Those articles were advertised at prices which my correspondent advised me were considerably less than the wholesale prices which the independent merchant had to pay for the same merchandise.

This big chain, organized with its headquarters in the East, advertising to the people, the merchants, and the business men of my State, is as much foreign to the population of my section of the country as is the Mitzubishi a foreign corporation to Puget Sound. It makes no difference to me who destroys me; I have no choice of master or executioner. If I am to be destroyed economically, I do not care whether it be a Jap or an American who does it. What I object to is economic or physical destruction.

So the independent merchant in my State has no choice of executioners. If he is to be destroyed, he might as well be destroyed by Japanese competition as to be destroyed by the competition of a gigantic chain store whose competition he can in no wise meet. And he cannot meet competition where the advertised price is far less than the price for which he can buy at wholesale, and he stares destruction in the face.

This is a somewhat roundabout way of getting to my question to the Senator from New York. Does the Senator from New York think that this business man in the State of Washington is entitled to be subsidized in order that he may meet the competition from the chain combine, and if he does not think so, is not this question in order? Is not that merchant in Seattle, or Tacoma, or Spokane, or San Francisco, this independent merchant, who the President says is the foundation of our economic life in this country, and a very important part of our economic life, as much entitled to protection against the ruthless competition of the chain combine as a shipper is entitled to protection against the competition of foreign shipping? I believe he is. If we are to subsidize at all I think the independent business man is as much entitled to protection against the chain combine competition as the shipper is entitled to protection against foreign shipping.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NYE. The point is made, and there seems to be general agreement, that other nations are able to build ships much more cheaply than we can in the United States. Since many of those nations owe the United States considerable sums of money, and since they seem to be unable to pay because of inability to send to the United States the things which the United States needs, it seems to me that there might be a chance now to afford to ourselves an adequate merchant marine and satisfy in part this indebtedness.

With this in mind I am offering the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read and printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The resolution (S. Res. 162) was read, as follows:

Whereas various European nations indebted to the United States, with the exception of the Republic of Finland, have ceased to make payment of their obligations to the United States; and

Whereas the United States holds the unconditional obligations of said nations, duly ratified by the parliaments thereof, agreeing to make payment of principal and interest of the amounts due the United States; and

Whereas it has been repeatedly stated that while said nations are desirous of discharging their obligations according to the terms thereof, exchange difficulties and lack of sufficient gold prevent payment in full in money, and that payment in goods manufactured or produced in said debtor nations is the only practicable method of payments of a large part of said obligations; and

Whereas the United States has an inadequate merchant marine, particularly as to modern passenger vessels; and

Whereas several of said debtor nations have recently built passenger vessels of the largest size and highest speed, of a type which the United States does not possess, but which it is desirable and necesary for the United States to possess; and

Whereas it is both possible and practicable for said debtor nations to build for the United States, in part payment of their debts, passenger and freight vessels of modern type, thereby employing labor and utilizing material in the countries of said debtor nations, and avoiding exchange difficulties arising from the transfer of money between debtor and creditor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to bring the facts above set forth to the attention of maritime European nations indebted to the United States, and invite them to build and furnish to the United States such number and types of passenger and freight vessels as may be mutually agreed upon, the value of said vessels to be applied in part payment of the obligations due to the United States from said nations.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, why does not the Senator include a provision that these vessels shall be operated by foreigners at the expense of foreign nations, so that American labor may be entirely put out of business?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I expected that the point would be made that this kind of a program would deprive American labor of the opportunity to labor, and I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that American shipbuilding yards have never been as busy as they are right now, building under naval contracts for which the Government is responsible. I think we need not be alarmed about that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I may ask a question, I should like to inquire whether this would be constitutional? [Laughter.] Has the Senator given that any attention?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Dakota ask to have the resolution referred?

Mr. NYE. I ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will yield for that purpose, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a convention, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Col. James T. Buttrick to be a brigadier general in the Marine Corps from the 14th day of May 1935.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry midshipmen to be ensigns in the Navy, revocable for 2 years, from the 6th day of June 1935.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alice L. Woolman to be postmaster at Coweta, Okla.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William E. Emick to be postmaster at Temple City, Calif.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the other nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John Galleher to be State director for Virginia of the National Emergency Council.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 26, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 25, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, only Thou art holy. Thou art the Infinite One, in whom there is supreme excellence. Centering in Thyself are purity, sacrifice, moral power, and affluence transcending everything of which we could possibly conceive. Blessed Lord God, kindle in us zeal, enthusiasm, and self-consecration that shall give us the divinest of all powers. Brood over our land; many there are whose morning sunshine is darkness; countless lives that should be happy are embittered and blighted by poverty, unkindness, and injustice; help them to see the bow in the clouds. We praise Thee that the mystery of love is profounder than the mystery of affliction, and Thou art love. Inspire us to walk out of the chapters of the Holy Bible and put into our daily conduct a power that restores and opens up the heart of God. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 805. An act for the relief of Luther M. Turpin and Amanda Turpin;

H. R. 1315. An act for the relief of Thomas J. Gould;

H. R. 1703. An act for the relief of Cletus F. Hoban;

H. R. 2708. An act for the relief of James M. Pace;

S. 1980. An act for the relief of Lewis Worthy and Dennis O. Penn;

S. 2253. An act to make better provision for the government of the military and naval forces of the United States by the suppression of attempts to incite the members thereof to disobedience;

S. 2367. An act to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes;

S. 2551. An act to make immediately available the unexpended balances of certain appropriations for the construction or reconstruction of roads and bridges in the flood areas of Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Kentucky, and Alabama; and

S. 2818. An act for the relief of Blanche L. Gray.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE AVENUE OF MEMORIES

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] at Medford, Mass., on Sunday, June 23, 1935, at the dedication of The Avenue of Memories.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] at Medford, Mass., on Sunday, June 23, 1935, at the dedication of The Avenue of Memories.

Comrade Chairman, Comrade Commander, comrades, and fellow citizens, Medford Post, American Legion has sponsored this occasion today for the purpose of paying a unique and signal honor to its departed comrades—men of the World War who paid the supreme sacrifice in the service of their country.

Today the veterans of this city and their fellow citizens are commonly united in one purpose, to dedicate to their hero dead a lane of trees, to be known as the "avenue of memories", each tree to perpetuate the patriotism of a Medford boy who sacrificed his life for his country.

It is strikingly in keeping with the traditional patriotism of the residents of Medford—in the historic county of Middlesex—that they should honor their heroic dead in such an appropriate manner.

For was it not here on this ground that so much transpired which led to the birth of a new freedom and gave to the world a new principle of government—a government controlled by the people and exercised for their common benefit? When the original Thirteen Colonies were struggling for the recognition of what they conceived to be their inalienable rights it was here in this historic county that a new leadership was evolved, a leadership destined to bring forth a new nation which was to blossom and to flower into world-wide supremacy.

Here in this county are recorded the first acts of the glorious struggle which led to our independence and nowhere were there more heroic and glorious sacrifices.

The spirit of the original settlers of this community, who so valiantly and unselfishly devoted their lives and property to the cause of freedom has hallowed this ground. It has been transmitted—not alone to their posterity—but also to those who came here from foreign shores to adopt this country as their own, and to their sons and daughters.

When, approximately a century and a half after our early struggle, this Nation—now grown to leadership among nations—through force of circumstances was plunged into a world-wide conflict, animated by the traditional patriotism nurtured here, the youth of Medford quickly responded to the service of their country. They mingled with their fellows from the four corners of this great Nation, to engage in the grimmest and most bloody holocaust in the history of civilization. Many of them were destined never to see their native land again. Their memories we honor today, and it is indeed a fine tribute to their sacrifice that so many of the citizenry of this community have assembled here to pay homage to them.

Our land is dotted with buildings, monuments, and temples in honor of our heroic dead of all wars, beautiful in architecture, ornamental in design, and wrought in enduring materials. But how beautiful the thought which inspired the planting of this row of saplings, each designated to commemorate the life of a fallen comrade. A few years and they will attain a luxuriant growth and this avenue will be transformed into a lovely sylvan lane. Living memorials, vibrant with life, the handiwork of the Creator Himself, to be nurtured by His life-giving soil, sustained and strengthened by the warmth of His sun. What is more conducive to reminiscence and contemplation than such a lane as this will be—shadowed by sylvan branches—a fretted vault and lengthy aisle of the cathedral of the sky. Here will be instilled in the hearts of the young who shall play here the principles of loyalty and devotion, and upon the hearts of those lovers who may seek its future sylvan beauty, will be impressed the price their forbears paid that they might enjoy its peace and serenity.

In such a place we may well conjure the thoughts of a soldier—tired, war weary, discouraged—pausing gratefully beneath the cooling shade of a tree and contrasting its God-given loveliness with the horrors of man-made war.

In the lulls between the fighting many a soldier must have dreamed and longed for just such a lane as this is to be, shaded by cool, tall trees, in peace and tranquillity—traversed by those he knew and loved—many long, weary miles away, across the heaving ocean. Joyce Kilmer, the soldier-poet, found his inspiration in trees and gave to us not only the example of his sacrifice but his splendid tribute to them, phrased in the language of immortality; and when, a short time later, he received his mortal wound and his eyes, closed forever in the sleep that knows no waking, perhaps there sounded in his ears the sweet symphony of his own words:

"I know that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree
A tree whose hungry mouth is pressed
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast."

But while we are gathered here to pay solemn honor to the memory of our departed comrades, it is singularly appropriate that we should dedicate ourselves to their unfinished task.

Today we are still engaged in a titanic struggle against the havoc of depression, although we are slowly but surely emerging from the numbing despondency of its deathly grip. We have witnessed the most complete economic and industrial collapse the Nation has ever known. We have experienced a great emergency, an emergency at least as great as any ever created by the devastating hand of war. Never before was destitution so wide-spread and universally experienced. Rich and poor, high and low, all have felt its withering grasp or seen its shadow cross their threshold. It has known no local aspects but has spread to every corner of our land, transcending our national boundaries, and, like some awful plague of old, swept the earth, in the intensity of its onslaught. While engaged in war we have at least known the identity and nature of the foe, but in our struggle against depression we have been harassed by a great unseen and unknown enemy.

The destructive causes of this great economic collapse were so insidious that they were not discovered until our racking illness had progressed almost to the point of economic and national death.

Within the last three decades our Nation underwent a period of tremendous industrialization and economic expansion, culminating in the period of the World War—when the United States changed from a debtor to a creditor Nation. During the progress of this great industrial development our Government consistently maintained a "hands off" policy but—with maternal care—furnished every protection to its infant industries, and, in many cases, aided by subsidizing their development.

But, while the offspring thus aided developed into an apparently robust maturity, it was only a surface healthfulness, for grave dangers lurked within, which in the startling growth from adolescence to virility had been all but overlooked. In place of the personal relationship of consumer and merchant, employer and worker, producer and distributor, there was developing an impersonal, intangible organization of industry and commerce. The rise of giant corporations so far removed workers from their employers that they became almost automatons. In place of the small business man who actively managed his business, there developed the remote control of business through sheer possession of money. The personal pride of man in serving, and serving well, his fellow man, gave place to the mere sale of services in return for an equivalent in dollars and cents. The spiritual satisfaction of service and work was lost in the scramble for money and material gains. Money became almost the sole object of all striving, and the humane, social, and spiritual values of our forbears were lost in the new order.

While there may have been some temporary material gains and advances accruing from this development, it gave rise to abuses and evils which far offset any of its benefits. The scorching pace in the race for power obtained through money and the control of money left little time for consideration of humane and social standards. Business ethics gave way to cutthroat competition. Child labor, sweatshops, overcapitalization, centralization of control in the hands of a few, excessive hours of employment, wage cutting, subordination of the man to the machine—in short, the evils had so intrenched themselves as to command the situation, The machine, which should have been the servant of man, now became his master and millions of American workers were reduced to economic serfdom and millions of others thrown out of employment.

Our Constitution was designed to promote the general welfare of all the people of the United States. Under its terms the people of this country have enjoyed and still are enjoying a greater measure of freedom and opportunity than is afforded by any other charter or instrumentality of Government conceived by the mind of man. But a constitution enacted to promote the general welfare of all the people can certainly not be held to be an instrumentality for the perpetuation of those evils most destructive of that welfare. But in our desire to perfect legislation to eradicate evils—the evils of our economic and social order, which are now apparent—we should not abridge any of those safeguards afforded our liberty by that great instrument.

During the past 2 years much has been accomplished to check the onslaught of the depression and foster a return to normalcy. Legislation was enacted—sometimes hurriedly—designed to remedy the evils which harassed our economic and social existence, and a sincere and humane effort has been made to provide to every man the opportunity of earning a living for himself and family and to attain a measure of security in old age and adversity. The situation called for speedy and decisive action. Perhaps mistakes were made. But it is beyond question that the benefits derived from this legislation were numerous and known to all.

A momentous decision has just been rendered by the highest court of our land, declaring the foremost instrument of the new recovery program unconstitutional and setting forth that certain other constitutional guaranties are inviolate. The doctrine of State rights, a doctrine always dear to the American people, has been sustained against invasion by national legislation. Our Government is a government of laws and not of men. It is the duty of all Americans to maintain it so.

However, we cannot consent to the view that the decision of the Supreme Court is the signal for business to again plunge into an orgy of destructive competition and ruthless labor policies. It means no such thing. Now that we have recognized those elements of the codes of fair competition which have proven to be beneficial, we cannot tolerate again the unsound and suicidal methods rampant before their advent. Certainly somewhere within the four corners of the Constitution there will be found some means whereby we may safeguard the American people from the ruthless exploitation of a favored few. We cannot believe that those men who set out to guarantee to all Americans life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness preempted us from accomplishing the very ends which they espoused, a people free from tyranny of any sort, whether it be political or economic.

Our own Commonwealth of Massachusetts has been a leader in the enactment of humane and progressive legislation. For many years now, it has had laws in its statute books which have prevented the employment of children in industry, regulated hours of employment, and established minimum wages, and other laws designed for protection of the safety and health of employees. But, by the enactment of these very laws, we have been placed in a disadvantageous position in industrial competition with those States which have little or no regulatory legislation of this nature.

During this session a bill was passed by the lower branch of Congress giving its consent to the several States to enter into compacts or agreements affecting the relationship of employer and employee. Here, it seems, may be a vehicle by which the known beneficial results of the new order may be achieved and perpetuated in conformance with the Constitution and the doctrine of State rights.

Of course, the formation of such agreements will depend upon an awakened public conscience and a persistent demand by the people of those States which have been backward in the enactment of such humane legislation.

It is the task of Congress and the people of the United States to solve this problem. Even now, in the Halls of Congress, a determined study is being made of the situation. Throughout the Nation statesmen and scholars are engaged in its solution.

But in the ultimate sense the solution can come only from the great body of the American citizenry. It is their will which eventually governs and determines the policies of our Nation. From their awakened consciousness is evolved the leadership to carry out progressive policies suited to their needs. Under our form of government theirs is the ultimate power to ratify or reject such policies as have been undertaken.

Through the agencies of the new order the people of the United States have been awakened to the destructive methods which have existed in our economic order. We have been lifted to higher standards. It is my firm conviction that an aroused citizenry will cling determinedly to the beneficial gains which have been made and will never permit a return to the dangerous and destructive conditions which threatened the very existence of our Government.

It is indeed fitting that those men who engaged in the World War should engage again in peace-time efforts in the cause of their country. Among them are to be found the leaders of their respective communities. The American people have always respected and honored those men who wore the uniform of their country in time of distress and emergency. They underwent the dangers and rigors of war and placed the disposition of their lives in the hands of the Nation. Over all hovered the shadow of possible death and all were baptized in the highest ideals of patriotism and love of country.

Our Nation is fortunate to have such an organization as the American Legion and similar veterans' organizations, composed of men who bore arms in its service. These organizations are ever vigilant to preserve the integrity of our institutions, our traditions, and ideals.

Comrades of the American Legion, you have dedicated today a beautiful and enduring memorial to preserve the memories of your departed comrades, a living tribute which will serve as a lasting reminder throughout your generation and generations to come of the unselfish, undying devotion of those men whom we have honored today. May God grant that just as these trees shall blossom and flourish from spring to spring, so, too, may our Nation prosper; and as their leafy branches spread their cool shelter, so, too, may our Government safeguard and preserve the liberty and happiness of its people, disseminating its beneficence with equal justice to all.

REPORT FROM RULES COMMITTEE

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Rules Committee may have until midnight tonight to file a report from that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Meridian (Miss.) Star, under date of Sunday, June 23, 1935, entitled "The Goal Is Near."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from Mississippi, as well as other Members of the House, know that we are not permitting editorials to go into the RECORD. For that reason I shall object.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for me to make this observation?

This is an editorial commemorating the five hundred and tenth hour of two young Mississippi boys who have been attempting to establish a nonstop refueling record. They are in the air now, making a contribution to science and patriotism.

Mr. RICH. I want to say that the RECORD will be in the air if we would permit all of these editorials to go in from newspapers. For that reason I must object.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 275.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 8555, a bill to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, and so forth. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. RANSLEY. There is no time desired on this side of the aisle.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 275, which I am calling up from the Rules Committee, provides for consideration of H. R. 8555, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. This is known as the bill providing for subsidies for the merchant marine. It is an administration measure to take care of the shipping interests of the Nation, and to take care of certain contracts for carrying the mail which have been canceled and which are up for readjustment.

It is an open rule, providing for 3 hours' general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and allowing full freedom of amendment. I shall not attempt to discuss the merits of the bill, because the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] and other members of the committee are much more familiar with it than I.

I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this rule, although I think it is obvious to the Membership of the House that it would be impossible to intelligently and orderly consider the bill and the subject matter of it in the amount of time allotted under the rule. I am sure it is a good bill because it comes from a great committee with a great chairman. That committee has given long, conscientious and faithful consideration to the subject and has conducted hearings which consumed about 1,200 pages of printed matter.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to being gagged, reasonably. I would like for it to be done in a sort of a decent manner, so that I can, to some extent, retain my legislative self-respect, though I am not particularly complaining about this particular matter. What I want to say at this moment in relation to this subject is to comment upon headlines in the Washington Post this morning, which serve notice that the House of Representatives will be asked to pass a tax bill in 5 days.

Mr. Speaker, I am willing to vote for a tax bill. I am willing to help levy taxes necessary to pay for the unusual and the emergency expenditures that we have been called upon to make, because I voted for those expenditures. If the President feels this is an opportune time to embark upon that program, I am willing to do it. I am willing to subscribe to the proposition that "those who have should give", and that people should contribute to the cost of government, reasonably in proportion to their benefits and their ability. I am not, however, going to vote for any share-the-wealth or soak-the-rich proposition, and I dislike being classed with those who advocate such proposals. I am somewhat amazed that the administration and our leaders have permitted their tax proposals to go labeled as a share-the-wealth scheme.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman knows, of course, that those are just newspaper headlines.

Mr. WOODRUM. Well, it is just newspaper headlines, and this is the headline in the newspaper this morning, serving notice, "President Rushes Tax Program—Leaders Seek Passage in 5 Days."

Who are the leaders? Who are the leaders of either branch of this Congress who are going to ask a national legislative body to pass such a comprehensive tax bill in 5 days? Now name them. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have reason to believe that there is no truth whatsoever in that story, and I may say, to pass a tax bill of that kind by the end of this week would be a good trick if we did it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; and it will not be done, either.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course it will not be. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I believe there are Members of this House on both sides of the aisle who will stand against any such asinine and ridiculous proposal, no matter who may suggest it. [Applause.]

In the first place, a careful reading of the body of the newspaper article does not support the headlines. I am absolutely convinced that the President of the United States never made any such suggestion, nor have any of the responsible leaders of the House made any such suggestion. My purpose here is to serve notice to the Congress and to my constituents that, so far as I am individually concerned, I am willing to stay here all summer, if necessary, to work out in an orderly manner a reasonable, proper tax program in order to raise the necessary revenue to run this Government; but if anybody undertakes to ram a tax bill down my throat in 5 days, I believe with 12 years' experience in Congress I know a few tricks, and it will not be done that quickly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. May I say on behalf of myself individually and so far as I have the authority to speak for anybody else that I coincide substantially with what the gentleman says. I have not been consulted in reference to any tax program. But I am confident there will be no 5-day rush legislation, as indicated by some newspapers. I believe headlines and newspaper articles of that kind are politically inspired for the purpose of creating trouble and stirring up strife in Congress and dissension throughout the country for partisan purposes. I feel that is the basis of it. I think there is really no truth in the statements.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am glad to have the gentleman's disavowal.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 2, line 3, after the comma, insert "and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I may say that this amendment covers a line that was dropped out inadvertently by the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8555) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEHLBACH) there were—ayes 79, noes 0.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 335, nays 14, not voting 80, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8555) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, with Mr. MAY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, of the time allotted to me I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN], to be disposed of as he may see fit.

I yield myself 25 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to pay a tribute to the members of the committee over which I have the honor to preside. When you consider the hearings on this bill and the time that was taken in the preparation of the measure you will realize the burden that has rested upon these men on both sides. They have attended the hearings, they have worked diligently day after day in trying to formulate a bill that would provide an American merchant marine. I may say with respect to those who did not agree with us that they have rendered valuable service in the formulation of the measure.

On March 4 the President of the United States sent to the Congress a message dealing with this subject, and accompanying this message was a letter from the Postmaster General, and also a report from the interdepartmental committee. We have considered this message in its entirety. We have also considered the reports. While we have not been able to present at this time many of the salutary things contained in some of these reports, they will be the subject of future legislation.

The hearings were held on March 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, April 30, May 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8, and almost continuously from the conclusion of these hearings up to the time the bill was reported, the committee has been in session considering the measure. We believe we have complied with the message of the President, and there will be found in the report a letter from the Secretary of Commerce to the effect that the Department of Commerce endorses this bill.

In two respects we have departed from the message of the President. I shall discuss them before going into a discussion of the details of the bill.

First, we have continued the Construction Loan Fund. The President suggested that it be eliminated. We gave most careful consideration to this proposed elimination, but we felt that in the interests of all of the ports of the country, in the interest of protection from monopoly, it was necessary to provide a fund which might be used as an aid in the way of loans for the purpose of construction.

This security is ample. I wish to call attention to the fact that in the beginning of the Construction Loan Fund there was originally authorized loans amounting to $148,000,000, of which $47,000,000 has been repaid. Of the outstanding loans to date of $101,000,000, 7 companies out of 34 are in arrears amounting to 3½ percent of the total loans outstanding. No losses have been sustained by the Government as a result of the construction loan transactions, and the Government today can take over the ships on which the loans have been made at any time there is default, and protection to the Government is afforded.

The other particular is with respect to the transfer of regulatory powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We felt it would be unwise at this time to make this transfer, first, because foreign commerce regulation has not been centered in the Interstate Commerce Commission; second, they are not familiar with the problems; and, third, in this period of transition from the policy that has been pursued in the past to the new policy we seek to inaugurate, we felt that this transfer should be at least held in abeyance.

Furthermore, in the testimony of Mr. Eastman before the committee on the water carrier bill—and I had expected to have a copy of that testimony with me—he stated that the insertion of the suggestion that foreign-commerce regulation should be transferred to the Interstate Commerce Commission was put in at the last hour, and that he did not know anything about foreign commerce or matters pertaining to its regulation, very frankly and openly admitting, so far as that was concerned, he was not acquainted with the details of that regulation. We feel, therefore, that this suggestion is possibly an eminently wise one to defer until there shall be a new set-up and further consideration.

Mr. Chairman, the President in his message distinctly said that he proposes to end the subterfuge of mail contracts as subsidies and he made distinct and definite recommendations.

Approached in this way a subsidy—

Said the President—

amounts to a comparatively simple thing. It must be based upon providing for American shipping Government aid to make up the differential between American and foreign shipping costs. It should cover first the difference in the cost of building ships; second, the difference in the cost of operating ships; and, finally, it should take into consideration the liberal subsidies that many foreign governments provide for their shipping.

This we have undertaken to follow.

The bill begins with a declaration of policy on the part of the United States, which is very slightly different from the policy that has been announced in the past; the policy announced in the 1920 act, the policy announced in the 1928 act, and the policy which we believe to be the true objective of this Nation if it is to keep its place on the seas, to provide adequate defense in time of war, and the promotion of foreign commerce in time of peace. Practically the only difference that we have made is that we have provided that our merchant marine shall be sufficient to carry 50 percent of the foreign and domestic water-borne commerce, outgoing and ingoing.

The importance of this measure is so great that we felt that there should be a board appointed by the President, composed of men peculiarly qualified to handle these important problems, and so we have provided a United States Maritime Authority.

They are men carefully selected, to be chosen by the President of the United States, and to be confirmed by the Senate. They are to be men who shall not at the time of their qualification and taking office be employed or hold any relation to any water carrier. They shall not be in the employ of or hold any official relation to any carrier by water or any person carrying on the business of shipbuilding, ship repairing, marine insurance, stevedoring, ship chandler, or forwarding or furnishing towboats, wharfage, docks, warehouse management, operating or other services of a like character in connection with any carrier by water, or own any stock or bonds of any such carrier or person, or be pecuniarily interested directly or indirectly therein.

Mr. DARDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. DARDEN. Would he be ineligible at the time of his appointment or could he divest himself of those relations after appointment?

Mr. BLAND. He must not be in any of these businesses at the time he is appointed. If there is any other particular concerning which it is felt that he would be impaired in the performance of his duty, there is afforded protection in confirmation by the Senate before he can receive this position. He can be removed at any time.

In the limited time I have, I cannot go into the full details, but one of the first duties to rest on the maritime authority is the adjustment of these existing ocean mail contracts.

The President, by an Executive order, or rather by section 5 of the independent offices bill in 1933, was authorized to examine all of these ocean mail contracts, and after hearing, cancel or modify them, if he saw fit.

Hearings were to be held, and those hearings have been held. We have the benefit of the hearings before the Black committee and the benefit of the hearings before the Post Office Committee, consisting approximately of 34,000 pages.

The President's power expired on April 30, or was to expire on that date. At the request or suggestion of the President that power was extended to October 31. In this bill we have extended the power to June 30, 1936.

But remember this, in considering this extension we have not taken away one iota of the power given by law to the President of the United States.

We say to the President that from this good hour he has the right to cancel or modify any contract which may exist; or, if he desires, he may call upon the Maritime Authority for assistance in adjusting these contracts so that the Government will be protected from losses in large sums. The President indicated that it was his desire for the extension to October 31.

Mr. Chairman, this Maritime Authority must be composed of good men, of skilled men, and men of unusual ability. They are taken from five regions, the Atlantic coast, the Pacific coast, the Great Lakes, the Gulf States, and the interior. Three of them must be from the majority party and two from the minority party. These men have imposed upon them the duty of working out the construction differential, of working out the operating differential, and of working out the various policies of the administration of this subsidy act. We have provided a construction differential which is paid to the shipbuilder during the construction of the ship. We have provided an operating differential to take care of the difference in cost between the operation of the American ships and the operation of foreign ships. The evidence is indisputable that the cost of building in the United States is greater than the cost of building in foreign countries. If we are going to have a merchant marine, that feature must be taken care of. Those differentials, those subsidies, are vastly better than the subsidy provisions under existing law. Under existing law the ocean mail contract includes the construction subsidy over a period of years. The operating subsidy is carried over a period of years. The construction subsidy under this bill is determined at the time that the ship is built. It is determined by the maritime authority.

It is determined what that amount shall be, what is the principal differential between the principal nations where the foreign competitors are and it is then settled once and for all as to the particular ship to be built. If there is a change in that construction differential in a subsequent year, as we hope there will be, whereby the differential between American shipbuilding and foreign shipbuilding is reduced, the Government gets the benefit of it, and it is not a subsidy running over a long period of years. As to the operating subsidy, it is determined year by year. It is determined at the end of the year, and is based on specified items. There must be taken into consideration the extra cost of operating, and only 75 percent of the estimated differential can be paid before the end of the year, with security to protect from overpayment. At the end of the year the amount for that year is definitely fixed by the maritime authority. If any question arises as to an improper amount, the party claiming more must go into the Court of Claims. Therefore, year by year the operating differential is raised or lowered in accordance with the facts of that particular year. The provisions we have made for operating differentials and for the construction differential are guarded by formulas determining how those subsidies shall be ascertained, and they afford no opportunity for the abuses that have existed in the past. They give no opportunity for the payment of salaries to lobbyists and for similar expenditures.

The President in his messages called attention to abuses in respect to stevedores, affiliated companies, associated companies, holding companies, and similar organizations. We realize that at times such companies may be necessary, but we have provided that they shall not exist except with the consent of the maritime authority, and that none of these contractors may participate in holding companies or be affiliated with them except where in exceptional circumstances the authority may permit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What about ocean mail contracts? Does the gentleman think this legislation will safeguard the Government better than in the past, with reference to the amount paid for carrying the mail?

Mr. BLAND. We have definitely provided in this bill that from this day, no ocean mail contracts can be entered into. While we have not definitely repealed that provision of the law, the only reason we have not done it is that we have felt there may be some provisions in the law that would be beneficial to the Government, so that it would probably be unwise to repeal the law. So far as granting ocean mail contracts is concerned, it is definitely provided in the bill that they shall not be granted hereafter. The only ocean mail provision is the requirement of preference to ocean ships such as exists in the law, and the mail shall be carried as before the ocean mail contracts.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Can the gentleman give us an estimate of what it is going to cost the Government to initiate and set up this program, say, for the first 2 years?

Mr. BLAND. That would depend entirely upon the number of ships to be built. Let us say that the differential as to a million-dollar ship is about $400,000, as between American cost and foreign cost. The interdepartmental committee estimates in respect to the 282 ships now in operation that the operating differential is about $11,000,000.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Does the gentleman mean to say that it will take an appropriation of only $11,000,000 to inaugurate this program?

Mr. BLAND. No. It will depend upon the ships that we are to build and operate.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the maritime authority determine the number of ships to be built, which will result in the amount of expense to the Government of the United States?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; the maritime authority.

Mr. DONDERO. Under this bill?

Mr. BLAND. Yes. First, an application for a ship must be made by the applicant. He must set out his financial standing. The authority can control that. Then when they have worked out the differential and they want bids on a ship, they call for bids from responsible shipbuilders. We have provided that those bids shall be accompanied by estimates and necessary information for the maritime authority to determine if they are fair bids. We have provided penal provisions against collusion between shipyards, with a heavy penalty against anyone giving any information to anyone else with respect to his bid. We have provided that the shipbuilder and the ship operator must keep his books in the form and under rules and regulations provided by the maritime authority. The authority may go to the shipbuilding companies and examine their books at any time; they can compel the production of those books and statements. The balance sheets, whenever called for by the maritime authority, must be submitted. The maritime authority and the applicant may reject any or all bids. These are only some of the safeguards, and I submit that with the safeguards we have thrown around these contracts, there could not be any possibility of collusion, assuming we have an intelligent and competent authority.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman kindly explain just what the status of the ocean mail contracts under this bill will be?

Mr. BLAND. The President has the power to cancel or modify them. If the President says, "I want to have these contracts considered by this maritime authority" and an effort is made to work out an adjustment between those contractors and the maritime authority, considering a settlement of the claims of the United States against the contractors and of the contractors against the United States, the maritime authority will undertake the adjustments, but the maritime authority can enter into no contract of settlement without the consent of the President. It must report back to the President what it has done, and the President then determines whether the adjustment may be made and a new contract entered into.

Mrs. KAHN. How about new contracts? How will they be awarded?

Mr. BLAND. New contracts are to be awarded by the maritime authority upon the basis of an application filed with the maritime authority and in the order which I have indicated. The authority will work out also the operating differentials.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman explain what authority the Post Office Department will have? Will the Post Office Department be called into consideration in connection with the issuance of new ocean mail contracts?

Mr. BLAND. We have no new ocean mail contracts.

Mr. MEAD. In the future, in the event new ocean mail contracts are granted, will the Post Office Department be called upon to pass upon them?

Mr. BLAND. No; there will be no new contracts under the 1928 act. All the Post Office Department does is to send its mail in any ship.

Mr. MEAD. Ocean mail contracts are eliminated?

Mr. BLAND. Ocean mail contracts are eliminated in this way: There is no express provision here for their termination, but the President can cancel them today if he wants to. We go farther than that. We say to the ocean mail contractor, "If you cannot work out an agreement with the maritime authority satisfactory to them and to the President, you cannot apply for any new contract under the act without the consent of the President of the United States."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. With respect to ocean mail transportation and contracts, up until 1928 mail contracts on a poundage or other basis were entered into between the ships and their owners and the Post Office Department, strictly on the basis of the value of services rendered. Under the act of 1928 mail contracts were instituted, and carried with them Government aid to the lines which secured those contracts. That has been wiped out by this bill with respect to mail carried and we are back just where we were before the act of 1928. We pay for the services that are rendered.

Mr. BLAND. Now, I do not want to consume much more time.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I am interested in the application of this bill to the Great Lakes. Does the term "coastwise shipping" apply to the waters of the Great Lakes?

Mr. BLAND. I do not know. I do not think so. I may be mistaken.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will Great Lakes shipping be affected in any way?

Mr. BLAND. I do not think so.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Could any aid be given to Great Lakes shipbuilders or owners under this bill?

Mr. BLAND. I do not think the ship operators would be entitled to it under this bill. Some of the lake people said they did not want to come in; others did. We thought that was a matter that should receive further consideration.

Mr. THURSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. In view of the fact that about one-third of the railroads are now in bankruptcy and it is predicted that another third will be in the same plight in a few months, does not this measure tend to take away freight and patronage from the railroads of the country?

Mr. BLAND. No. We are dealing with ocean-going shipping. The development of our merchant marine ought to help the railroads and certainly if we develop any further commerce.

Mr. THURSTON. Will some of these ships be diverted to the coastal trade?

Mr. BLAND. They cannot be diverted to the coastal trade except with the express consent of the maritime authority, in which event they must repay the construction subsidy and must lose their operating differential, and such ships can be operated only on a line where such vessel is needed.

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman understands the coastal lines have a preference in differentials and get a much lower operating rate?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; that is true. We do not give any operating differential.

Mr. THURSTON. But those ships can be diverted to the coastal trade if the authority so determines?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; under special circumstances where a vessel is needed for a particular trade. In that event it gets no operating differential and its construction differential must be repaid to the Government in proportion to the time it is in coastwise trade.

A question has been asked as to what it is going to cost. I cannot answer definitely, for that will depend upon how many ships we build; but, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to a very startling situation graphically depicted by these charts. This chart shows the situation of the American merchant marine today. At the top are shown vessels of 2,000 gross tons and over normally engaged in carrying goods and passengers in international trade. The order here is Great Britain, Japan, and the United States. The United States is third in tonnage; but, Mr. Chairman, tonnage means nothing unless you are going to use the ships for storage warehouses, or it means little; tonnage is only one of the factors that must enter into the building up of a merchant marine.

Next we come to the gross tonnage of vessels of 12 knots and over. In this list the United States stands fourth, the list being headed by Great Britain, with Germany second and Japan third.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Then we come to gross tonnage of vessels of 10 years of age and under; what is the position of the United States? The nations follow in this order: Great Britain, Germany, Japan, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, France, United States.

Mr. Chairman, we are facing the time when the American flag is going from the seas. These old ships must be retired soon. Twenty years is the useful life of a ship. If we are to continue in competition some of these old ships must be replaced. When old ships are replaced the operating differential is reduced considerably. When they are replaced it will be found that the operating differential in fuel alone will be considerably reduced.

What is the standing of the art of shipbuilding in the United States today? This chart shows shipbuilding as of March 31, 1935. The nations come in this order: Great Britain, Germany, France, Sweden, Japan, Denmark, Netherlands, Italy, and Spain. We find the United States at the bottom of the list, today, with only 18,473 tons of shipbuilding in the shipyards of this country, consisting of two tankers and a few vessels of about 400 or 500 tons each.

Do you want to preserve the American merchant marine, preserve it for national defense? It is departing from the seas and in a little while, with the age limit that is on it now, it will go. Our building must begin at an early date, or in 7 years we shall find nothing but old tonnage in the merchant marine.

There are other features of the bill to which I should like to call attention. One of the most important is the protection of life. [Applause.] We have raised the limitation of liability to $60 per gross ton of the ship. We used this as a minimum in the event of loss of life, and not the rule which prevailed in the case of the Morro Castle where the limit of liability was the value of the hulk and the unearned freight money.

We have done something for the seamen in this bill. We are providing that there shall be a 3-day watch for the sailors, so that conditions cannot exist such as existed in the case of the Morro Castle, when the sailors were off duty, and some of them asleep. Had the 3-day watch been in operation and the sailors been on deck, had been properly distributed in watches with an adequate crew, the fire might have been discovered earlier, or at least earlier protection afforded.

We have tried to safeguard against abuses, we have tried to safeguard against evils. We do not claim this to be a perfect bill. Reports are required to be made to the Congress. Operations under the bill come under the scrutiny of the Appropriations Committee and are subject to the scrutiny of our committee. We think we have provided reasonable safeguards. I have not by any means touched all of the main provisions, but let me say that this bill will result in the building up of the American merchant marine and will afford an opportunity for the seamen in this country that has never been afforded them before. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that I am in entire sympathy with the idea of building up the merchant marine. If we had had a merchant marine during the war we would not have had to have paid England enormous sums for transporting our men to France.

I understand amendments will be offered to this bill to protect labor, for instance, in the matter of minimum wages, which is not mentioned in the bill at the present time, and to protect seamen as to the service book, as they call it, which is used as a blacklist.

Mr. BLAND. The blacklist clause is out. The service book for which we have provided is along the lines suggested by Mr. O'Brien. No reference is made to certifying character, and that is the thing they principally objected to. That is not in this bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Do they not use the service book as a blacklist by putting such things in there as attempts of the seamen to form unions, and so forth?

Mr. BLAND. No; not under the provisions in this bill. We have followed Mr. O'Brien's suggestion and have not provided for a service book that will require such information.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield of my time 30 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] to be disposed of as he may see fit.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity of saying to the members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and especially to the distinguished Chairman and to the ranking Member on the Republican side, that I appreciate the fair treatment that has been received on the part of the opposition in the committee and on the floor of the House today. I want to state my position very clearly and very definitely in the beginning of this debate as being opposed to the pending legislation for reasons that will be set out in the course of the argument and the reading of the bill.

It will be recalled that last winter the President of the United States considered this subject to be of sufficient importance that he sent a special message to Congress to serve as a guide for the members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries as well as the Members of the House. It is this message of the President that I expect to consider before I conclude my remarks today, because it represents the viewpoint of the executive department.

Before doing so I desire to call your attention to a situation that exists at the present time. We are at present administering subsidies under the 1928 act. It is under title IV of which we have been paying the said mail subsidies that have occasioned such terrific scandals in the Post Office Department during the past few years. They have occasioned a sweeping investigation on the part of the Postmaster General of the United States, resulting in a report to the President of the United States, under an Executive order, mind you, pointing out the evils and the bad effects of the 1928 act and suggesting certain corrective measures that should be adopted by the Congress during this session.

Let us pause and consider the situation as it exists under the present law. We are granting subsidies today about as follows: We are paying under the provisions of the ocean mail contracts. We are supplying loans at low rates of interest, and previously we have sold ships at excessively low prices to operators in order that they might assume the vast trade routes that were developed under Government ownership during the war period. Furthermore, they assumed them at an unusually advantageous stage in the particular game in which we are interested.

Before I go into these various reports of the Postmaster General, the President of the United States, and other interested parties in this legislation, I want to take up briefly the situation as it exists under the bill today that is being proposed by a majority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and to which I have objected in the minority views signed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and myself, which minority report appears on four pages and a little more in the report, which I trust the Members will read before they vote on this bill. I want to remind you that under this act, if it is passed, we will set up a system of paying operating subsidies to the shipowners of America, in the first place. In the second place, we will set up a system of construction subsidies to the shipbuilders of the United States. In the third place, we will set up additional construction costs incurred for the benefit of the Navy, to be paid by the Government.

Fourth, we will increase the percentage of construction costs in loans to the owner at most reasonable rates of interest. Fifth, we are going to purchase old vessels from the owners at cost less depreciation, to be sold for scrap, the Government taking the loss thereon; in other words, making a scrap or junk dealer out of Uncle Sam in the face of the fact that the recent ship-subsidy legislation enacted in England provided that for every 1 ton of new shipping built by the Government 2 tons should be scrapped at the expense of the owner, not the Government and not the taxpayer.

Mr. Chairman, this is only the beginning.

Sixth, provides for an operating subsidy to the intercoastal operators, some twenty in number. If you stop and consider the fact they are going to provide a subsidy to those lines that are operating in intercoastal service where they touch a foreign port, that in itself is a subsidy.

Seventh, they are going to establish operating and construction subsidies that may be paid to two or more operators engaged in exactly parallel services to compete with one another at the expense of the taxpayer. That is another subsidy that will be paid.

They are going to pay a construction differential to the Pacific-coast yards and here, may I say to my distinguished friends from the Pacific coast who fought an able battle for that provision, that it is perfectly permissible when considered in the light of the features of the pending bill. If we are going to pay a subsidy, that is all right; the Pacific coast should participate and the shipyards on the Pacific coast should have the benefit, if we are going to have a subsidy system of some kind.

Eighth, under section 522 (e) of this bill an equalizing operating subsidy is going to be paid in case the subsidies paid under no. 1 as I outlined in the beginning are insufficient.

Ninth, we have another provision in this bill whereby we are going to provide for unfair competition of foreign vessels under section 1109. That in effect is no more or no less than a trade penetration, or, as has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Maine, a Treasury-penetration subsidy. The specific provision that was originally placed in this bill providing for that trade-penetration subsidy was stricken by an amendment which I introduced in the committee, but it has been written in again under section 1109 of the bill that I refer to at this time.

Mr. Chairman, there are a total of between 9 and 10 subsidies that are going to be paid under the existing bill, if adopted by the Congress of the United States, in spite of the fact that we have before us a graphic example of what has happened to the United States Government and to the taxpayers under a subsidy program for the purpose of building up an American merchant marine.

I select here the charts as presented by the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries a few moments ago and ask the Members to observe them. They indicate that in spite of vast expenditures we do not have an adequate merchant marine today. Under the 1928 act we have spent, let us say, in round numbers $119,000,000 in mail subsidies, and we may very possibly pay out in the future $188,000,000 more plus if the terms of this law are carried out as provided for in the existing bill before the Congress.

I mean by this that existing mail contracts can be continued under the present bill to their termination. I understand that difference, and the people of this country should understand that under the terms so provided it might be possible to pay out $188,000,000 to get the kind of a merchant marine portrayed on these charts out of operators who evidently do not have the interests of the American people at heart, and who have come before us in many instances saying that this legislation is, and will be, of great benefit to ship operators in this country, and one of them was none other than the distinguished gentleman from New York, the Honorable Ira A. Campbell, who was the fair-haired boy before the House committee and the Senate committee in support of the type of legislation that is being proposed in the American Congress today.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, I am not necessarily opposed to a merchant marine. I am favorable to an American merchant marine, but I say if the American Government is going to pay the bill, the American Government ought to get some of the benefits out of it, and not be left continually holding the sack.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 5 minutes.

Let us now take up this message of the President of the United States about which we have heard, and I want to remind you, as Members of the House, that the President has suggested some very fundamental things that he thinks should be included in this legislation, and as has been stated to you from the floor of this House, by the proponents of the bill are not in this proposed legislation, and at no time during the deliberations of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries on the bill that has been produced here, has anyone in the said committee dared to say that this is an administration bill, and it should be an administration bill when the President of the United States considers it of sufficient importance to send a special message to the Congress and outlines what should be done.

I say to you, in the first place, that the matter of construction loans, according to the President, should be terminated. These were his approximate words—that they should be terminated—and yet they are continued under this bill. The statement has been made that there are no losses or that no losses have been suffered under the Construction Loan Fund which has been in existence for some time.

This all depends on the way we look at it. In my opinion, when we have lent money to the American shipping interests for as little as one-eighth of 1 percent, this constitutes a loss to the American taxpayer on the Construction Loan Fund that ought to be considered. I know we have a minimum rate of interest in this bill, but I bring out this point to show you the altruistic attitude of the American operators who are supporting this legislation, and in fact are pressing for its enactment, the same crowd that handled the mail contracts.

Let us go a little further into the recommendations of the President. I want to remind you that he stated that in setting up provisions for subsidies for American shipping the Congress should provide for the termination of existing ocean-mail contracts. Termination of them, he said, not their continuation under the terms of this bill, possibly, with his permission, until they are at an end, costing the American taxpayers another $188,000,000 unless canceled by the President. No; not their continuation until the end, but that Congress should terminate the 1928 mail subsidies, and Postmaster General Farley concurred in this statement by sending to the Committee on Merchant Marine a letter asking for the repeal of title IV of the 1928 act. Title IV, mind you, provides for the mail subsidies, and yet they are continued.

I claim that this is a very decisive point wherein this legislation differs from the recommendations of the President, legislation based upon recommendations of the President formulated as a result of the investigations before the Postmaster General and before the distinguished Senate committee, headed by Senator BLACK. I would remind you, in connection with these very outstanding and decisive reports, that never at any time has our committee considered the matter of the Postmaster General's reports on the individual companies and the recommendations therein, except as the opposition to this bill advanced them and injected them into the RECORD. I would also remind you that the principal recommendations that have been considered have been those of the interdepartmental committee, and what about the interdepartmental committee? I will tell you about that.

Postmaster General Farley's reports on the individual companies were under Executive order from the President of the United States, and, furthermore, the report of the Black committee, which in many respects is exactly opposite to the recommendations and provisions of this bill, was a legislative committee set up by the United States Senate, and the interdepartmental committee was what? It was a committee appointed by the distinguished Secretary of Commerce, and the report of that interdepartmental committee was transmitted to the Congress by the President without recommendation, and yet this has been the guide post for the legislation that has been considered before our committee. I claim that the interdepartmental committee report is a good deal like a blind pig trying to find its way to the trough, in the face of the recommendations of the President of the United States, the reports of the Postmaster General, and also the distinguished Senate committee that has investigated and exposed the scandals with respect to the air and ocean mail contracts.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to go into the details of these reports, but it will be impossible for me to do so in general debate or until we get to the point where we begin the reading of the bill, at which time I shall take up some of these evils and some of these unfortunate conditions. I know that the present proponents of this bill have stated and will continue to state from the floor of this House that such evils as holding companies, such evils as subsidiaries, and such evils as we have examples of in the various reports that have been made to Congress have been eliminated, but they have been eliminated and then revived by a provision saying that the Authority may continue their existence and the handing out of subsidies to this particular type of business enterprise with the advice and consent of the authority. I say that according to the President of the United States and according to Postmaster General Farley they should be terminated, and this Congress should terminate them. [Applause.]

The pending bill does not properly safeguard the public interest and does not insure the development of an American merchant marine. It should therefore be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be notified when I have used 20 minutes. Mr. Chairman, if a person is absolutely opposed to Government aid for a merchant marine, there is no kind of a bill designed for the purpose, no matter how safeguarded and how circumscribed it may be, that will satisfy him.

A person opposed to Government aid of a merchant marine is opposed to a merchant marine, because every nation that maintains a merchant marine, or has for centuries maintained one, has maintained one with government aid, and there has not been in modern history, from the time of Christopher Columbus, a merchant marine that was not maintained by government aid. It is just that kind of a proposition that is accepted by the world.

If we are to continue to have a merchant marine, we have got to extend to it Government aid, just as Great Britain extends it, just as France extends it, just as Germany extends it, just as Japan extends it, and just as Italy extends it, and every other nation that has any kind of a merchant marine or a commercial fleet sailing under its flag. [Applause.]

Now, we have tried to devise Government aid by the means of using mail contracts under which we extended that aid, which is a device that has been used by the foremost maritime nations.

We have determined at the present time that that form of aid shall be withdrawn, and there is no use of discussing what happened as a result of legislation for that form of aid, because it is water that will shortly have gone under the bridge.

We provide in this bill that no mail contracts under the act of 1928 shall be entered into or an existing mail contract renewed. We have heretofore passed legislation that the President may have complete control over the mail contracts and may cancel them or modify them or do anything he sees fit to do with them.

This bill, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] that the mail contracts are continued as they have been in the past, puts them completely under and entirely up to the President. We renew in specific language the power the President now has over these contracts. We provide that in the event the President desires to modify or substitute, under the provisions of this bill, a different contract for the mail contract, or deal with them in any way he wants, or treat the mail contracts as basis for future negotiations, he may refer the question to the Maritime Authority created in the bill, which shall examine into all the circumstances and facts having any bearing on the situation, and then shall report back to the President, and the President thereupon makes his determination with respect to that mail contract exactly as he may do under the legislation passed by this House at his request.

The gentleman says that we may be subsidizing two or three parallel lines, operating in competition with each other. That is absolutely impossible under the provisions of the bill because in the first place no Government aid may be paid for the operation of a line if services which that line intends to render are already adequately handled; so, consequently, there cannot be two lines in one service getting Government aid. Another suggestion he makes is that there is nothing in here for the protection of seamen. Of course, there is not. We guarantee three watches, we give adequate compensation for the loss of seamen's lives as well as passengers, and also for bodily injury by raising the limitation of the liability of the shipowner, and that means crew as well as passengers.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. As I read the bill, there is no provision in it about fixing the rates of pay of the men who build the ships, in any way.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Of course, there is no fixing of wages in the bill, and as I understand the position of labor, the last thing they want to do is to have wages fixed by legislation.

Mr. KENNEY. They want the prevailing rate of wage, do they not?

Mr. LEHLBACH. We provide that the Government pay to the ship operator in a service which is necessary to maintain for our prestige on the sea and for the service of commerce, the difference between the wages in this country and the wages paid abroad. How on earth can an American profit by cutting down the wages of his employees on the sea?

Mr. KENNEY. Does not the gentleman think the contracts for the building of ships which the Government subsidizes in the future should contain a provision that the men who build the ships shall receive the prevailing rates of wages?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Those ships will be affected with a Government interest, and I believe that the same provision that now prevails in connection with Government construction will prevail here, namely, that wherever construction is carried on, the prevailing rate of wages will be paid to labor. That is the law today.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman is familiar with the contracts awarded by the Navy Department to the New York Shipbuilding Co. at the Camden yard, and I suppose the gentleman knows that no provision is made in those contracts for the prevailing wages; also, that the gentleman knows there has been a strike there which started on May 13 and still persists.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not want to discuss the Camden strike with the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEY. Nor do I; but I want to point this out: That this Congress raised that money through the public-works money which we appropriated, to put men to work, and evidently in that case it did not carry out its purpose, because that strike has lasted for over a month.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman wants to discuss that strike, I shall be glad to discuss it with him at some appropriate time, but not now in the consideration of this ship-subsidy bill.

Mr. KENNEY. My point is that in these contracts that are made, where the Government is putting money into contracts to build our merchant marine, we ought to take care of situations like that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. As a matter of fact, the wages paid in the Camden shipyards were the wages provided in the agreement made between the employees and the employers a year ago.

Mr. KENNEY. I understand they are not.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I cannot help what the gentleman understands, and I do not yield further on that subject. I am sorry, but my time is extremely limited. I am sorry I cannot go on. I do not want to be brusque with my friend, but I trust we will have an opportunity to discuss that fully sometime at his convenience.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to the construction differential, and with respect to the fact that it may be manipulated, of course, I assume that the President is not going to appoint seven crooks on the Maritime Authority. You have read the newspapers about the Normandie. We propose in this bill to pay the difference of what it will cost in America to build a ship and what it would cost an American to build the ship in a foreign yard. What did the French do with respect to the Normandie? They loaned the money to build the Normandie, and then they granted 150,000,000 francs annually, or about $10,000,000, at current rates of exchange for its operation. There is now pending and on its way to passage in the Chamber of Deputies in France a bill providing that the Government shall pay amortization as to principal and interest on the Normandie. In other words, the money that France in the first instance loaned to the French Line for the construction of the Normandie is to be paid by the French treasury and $10,000,000 is appropriated to operate that ship annually. So you have here the proposition of our competitor giving the Normandie to the company for nothing and paying the cost of its operation, and yet when we are to pay only the difference, due to our standard of living with respect to both the construction of the ship and the operation of the ship, and to pay her operators the difference between foreign cost and American cost, we are met with charges that we are trying to loot the Treasury, that we are trying to engage in all kinds of extravagances, fraud, and corruption.

There has not been a nation that has amounted to anything in this world in the last 400 years that did not carry on foreign commerce. Without foreign commerce a nation dies. Foreign commerce cannot be carried on without a merchant marine. That has been demonstrated by history. That is an axiom. Who opens the new markets for the products of a nation? The men who go down to the sea in ships open these markets, because they want to carry the goods. That is their business. As scouts for markets for our agricultural, our mineral, and our manufactured products, the merchant marine is necessary. It has been demonstrated by history that nowhere in the world can they operate without government aid. We would be foolish and unpatriotic and deserve to sink as a first-class nation if we did not do the common-sense thing provided for in this bill.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Is it not true that every maritime nation on the globe is subsidizing its ships at the present time?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Absolutely. It is also true that from the time the King and Queen of Spain subsidized Columbus, there has not been a first-class mercantile operation carried on anywhere without a subsidy. It is in the very nature of the enterprise. It is a quasi-public enterprise that must be carried on by private individuals, with the support and assistance of the Government.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] will refer to page 13 and the next three succeeding pages of the report, it gives the high lights of the subsidies, and they have been checked.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes. Present legislation by Great Britain grants a subsidy of £2,000,000 for the operation of tramp ships; a £10,000,000 loan for the replacement of all-cargo ships; £3,000,000 for the completion of the Queen Mary; £1,500,000 for working capital for the Cunard Co. and the merged companies. The White Star and the Cunard have merged, under Government supervision, with Government financing. Also £5,000,000 with which to complete a sister ship to the Queen Mary. In that way the Lusitania and Mauretania, by the Cunard Line, were built. The Government put up 100 percent of the cost of construction and amortized that loan over a period of 20 years, and then paid to the Cunard Line subsidies sufficient that they could take the subsidies from the Government and pay the Government for the loans with which they constructed the Mauretania and the Lusitania. In other words, the Government made a present to the Cunard Line of both the Lusitania and the Mauretania, and in effect they are doing so with the Queen Mary and with the proposed sister ship of the Queen Mary. We have not proposed anything of that sort.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. Did this country pay a subsidy before 1860?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is it a fact that this country had the second largest merchant marine afloat before 1860?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; and in those days a man owned his ship and sailed it, and his neighbors in Gloucester, his neighbors in Weymouth and his neighbors in Norfolk or in Egg Harbor or Atlantic were his crew. Shipyards were in various places along the coast, and there was no substantial differential in cost, because there was not that difference in the cost of employed labor then between the United States and its foreign competitors as there is now. There was not such a difference in the standard of living, and we are only asking the Government to make up the difference now.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And in those days the ships were built of wood.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman states that a large merchant marine and a large foreign trade go together. The gentleman does not want to state that a large merchant marine creates a large foreign trade?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It helps build it up.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman does not mean to say that if we had the largest merchant marine afloat it would break down these tariff barriers and give us more commerce?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It would have a great tendency so to do, because the ships are the scouts that open the markets.

Mr. BIERMANN. The people of northeastern Iowa want to sell pork to Germany. Germany has put a prohibitive tariff on our pork. The gentleman does not mean to say that if we had a tremendous merchant marine we could sell our pork in Germany, in spite of the tariff?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. If the gentleman has something that Germany will not buy, he cannot sell it to Germany, but unfortunately for the gentleman and fortunately for the rest of the country, the same circumstances do not obtain with every other commodity that is produced here.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] said, we had the wood and the naval stores, and we could build wooden ships cheaper than any other nation, before the Civil War.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes. In the building of the modern ship, 80 percent and more is labor. It is not only labor employed in the shipyard, but when they get the steel plates to make the hull of the ship they come from steel works; the iron that is processed into steel comes from mines; all the different materials that go into a ship reach back into the far reaches of our country; and it has been said that in the building of a ship, material and labor is procured from practically every State in the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, in his message to Congress on March 4, 1935, the President of the United States presented to Congress the question as to whether or not the United States should have an adequate merchant marine. He answered that question in the affirmative. In a vigorous message he enunciated as an integral part of the administration's national policy that the abuses, waste, and subterfuge which had accompanied the previous pouring out of vast sums of public moneys, with no substantial result except the enrichment of a few privileged insiders, should cease. He demanded that the American people should be given the opportunity to have and to use American ships. He called for legislation which provided not only for adequate appropriations to that end but also safeguards for their expenditure and, consequently, for a complete reorganization of the machinery for the administration of these public moneys.

It is my contention that the high and desirable purpose of the President is not fulfilled by the Bland bill; that, on the contrary, this bill not only perpetuates the flagrant abuses of the past but intensifies, magnifies, and aggravates them. There is no new deal in shipping if this bill passes. Instead it is the same old racket, played with jokers and aces up the sleeves of those who have received millions and given to the American people next to nothing in return.

No one contends that the Bland bill is an administration bill. The chairman of the committee specifically admitted that it is not an administration bill, as will be noted on page 885 of the hearings.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. During the hearing that was true. They were considering the original bill; but the perfected bill, which is materially different from the original bill, has received the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MORAN. I understand the letter of the Secretary of Commerce and I am going to refer to that later. I do not consider the letter of the Secretary of Commerce pointing out specific reasons why this bill does not abide by the President's desires as administration support.

Assuming that the Congress desires to make provision for a merchant marine, there are three possible methods: (1) Government ownership and operation, the first choice of the Black Senate Investigating Committee; (2) Government ownership and private operation, the alternative recommendation of the Black Senate investigating committee; and (3) subsidized private ownership and subsidized private operation, which is the fundamental principle of the Bland bill.

Let us examine the Bland bill. Members who have copies of the bill can follow this discussion, as the various parts of the bill will be considered in order.

TITLE 1

Title 1 contains the declaration of policy. It provides for private ownership and operation. As shown on page 3 of the Black committee report, the merchant marine we now have cannot fairly be described as "privately owned." When all mail contractors, except the industrial United Fruit Co., are considered it is found that the Government has "invested" by loans and ship-sale mortgages on contractor's vessels 1.39 times the stockholders' interest in their companies, not counting at all $120,000,000 paid by the Government as mail subsidies. Every conceivable form of subsidy has been advanced to private shipping interests—sale of Government vessels at gift prices, sometimes as low as 2 cents on the dollar; big loans at low interest, as low as one-eighth of 1 percent; and ridiculously extravagant mail contracts. These subsidies have been granted on the theory that they were needed to build up an adequate merchant marine to serve our foreign trade in peace time and as a potential naval auxiliary in war time. But the subsidies have not been used for that purpose. They have been drained off into the pockets of promoters—men who have been much more interested in high finance than in the high seas.

What has been the result of this policy? Read the majority report of the committee, which admits utter failure. The combined free resources of all presently subsidized companies is insufficient to build even one ship of the Manhattan type. As the Black committee report (p. 37) states:

> Those who are in theory to become the private owners calculate substantially as follows: 2 and 2 are 4; the Government should give us 2, and, inasmuch as we do not have the other 2, the Government should loan us that 2 also.

The Bland bill proposes to continue that system and make the Government contributions even more liberal, and, in face of those facts, states the object to be obtained is "private ownership and operation."

TITLE 2

Section 201 (b), page 4: This section qualifies a man for appointment to the United States maritime authority, if he has no present interest in ships or shipping, and forbids him to have such interest in the future so long as he is a member of the board. But it does not concern itself, as it should, with the past. This section does not prevent a man's resigning from the pay roll of a steamship company or shipyard on one day and assuming duties with the authority the next day. The Black committee significantly recommended that such interests within the 3 years immediately preceding an appointment should disqualify. If this authority gets loaded up with the wrong men, the Teapot Dome scandal will be a Sunday-school picnic compared to this proposition, with the authorities made available under this bill.

TITLE 3

Section 302 (b), page 12: This section provides discretionary cancelation of mail contracts. In his message the President said:

> Congress should provide for the termination of existing mail contracts as rapidly as possible.

You notice he said "Congress." That is what Congress should do. This bill does not do it; and, therefore, is in conflict with the message of the President.

Under section 303 (a) of this title 3 (p. 12), private negotiations are contemplated, as evidenced by the wording of previous prints of the bill significantly omitted. Private negotiation opens the door to fraud.

Section 402 (a), page 15: Under this section Uncle Sam becomes a junk dealer. Evidently it is contended that it is all wrong for the United States to own modern ships, but it is perfectly all right for the United States to buy "obsolete" ships and then junk them. Note the permission in line 1 on page 16 to apply an obsolete ship as a "trade in" on a new ship.

Section 501 (a), page 16: Under this title there is nothing to prevent the payment of subsidies to industrial giants that transport their own products in their own ships. It is certainly impossible to justify the disbursement of taxpayers' money to aid a huge oil, steel, or any other industrial corporation in the transportation of its own products in its own vessels. Let no Member think that is merely a theoretical possibility; on the contrary, exactly that thing is being done right now under existing legislation.

Under this section it will be noted that there is nothing to prevent subsidizing more than one line on the same route. Certainly no valid purpose can be served by subsidizing lines which compete with each other.

Section 502 (a), page 19: In this section construction loans are granted. In his message the President said that Congress "should terminate the practice of lending Government money for shipbuilding." The President has stated his views in the clearest of language. This bill conflicts with the President's view in this all-important respect. It becomes increasingly clear why the administration has not placed its stamp of approval on the Bland bill.

Section 502 (b), page 19: Under this section a construction-differential subsidy is provided to be paid, being the difference between American and foreign cost. The ascertainment of this difference is an impossibility; the Black committee report states:

> In the judgment of your committee, it is impossible to prescribe the exact formula for the computation of foreign construction costs. This conclusion is borne out by the testimony of Alfred H. Haag, Chief of the Division of Shipping Research of the United States Shipping Board Bureau, Department of Commerce, before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives on May 6, 1935, when he stated that he knew of no method by which this cost should be determined.

Material costs, overhead, distribution of overhead to individual ships are all impossible to ascertain; this plan assumes the possibility of a United States Government agency examining the books of foreign shipbuilding lines in a foreign country. (The experience of the Tariff Commission shows the futility of such an effort.) Yet this is the basis upon which this construction subsidy is to be computed.

Section 502 (c), page 20: Let me translate this section by presenting an example, as follows:

Assume that it costs to build a certain American cargo ship	$1,000,000
If differentials are as alleged (see p. 13 of report on Bland bill), foreign cost would be	600,000
Determining that the construction subsidy to be paid in cash to shipbuilder is	400,000
Government loan offered in addition (75 percent of foreign construction cost of $600,000)	450,000
Total grant and loan by Government (85 percent of American cost)	850,000
Applicant pays only 25 percent of foreign (15 percent of American cost)	150,000
Which may be met by a trade-in of an obsolete ship for which the Government will get next to nothing, and thus for little and perhaps no cash outlay whatever, gets a ship costing	1,000,000

Under present legislation an applicant's initial cash outlay would be $250,000 of the cost, but under this bill he would stand only $150,000 of the initial cost of a million-dollar vessel, and under the trade-in there could be no cash outlay. This is certainly a strange answer to the President's recommendation that "Congress should terminate the practice of lending money for shipbuilding."

With the Government putting up at least 85 percent of the money, and perhaps the full 100 percent, you see in full bloom that type of spurious Americanism and individualism and private initiative which enable these ship operators to let the taxpayer buy their ships and pay most of the cost of operating them while they wave the flag, pocket the profits, and argue that Government ownership is bolshevistic and un-American.

Section 505 (b), page 23: Under this section it is permissible to pay a construction subsidy for ships used in the coastwise trade, which have no foreign competition whatever; yet the argument for the subsidy is foreign competition. No foreign ship is allowed to engage in American coastwise trade, so no construction subsidy should be allowed. Let these high-powered individualists who prate about the glories of private ownership stand in line over at the R. F. C. and get their money on a business basis, and take their hand out of Uncle Sam's pocket.

Section 522, page 27: Here is a juicy plum. First, these ship operators who consider Government ownership bolshevistic are provided with 20-year operating subsidies. I realize the section is worded "not exceeding 20 years", but in Government administration maximums become the regular order. This section provides, as in the construction subsidy, that the differential shall be determined by the difference in American and foreign costs, a determination previously proved unascertainable.

But notice paragraph (e). If it is determined that the subsidy is inadequate, it can be increased. But if it is determined, under experience, to be more than adequate, can it be reduced? Oh, no. The only adjustment permitted is upward.

And notice paragraph (c). The operator can cancel the arrangement by 60 days' notice if he does not find it profitable. It does not seem possible that such a contingency should arise. Now, what about the Government? Under section 524 the Government can cancel only for "repeated and intentional" violation. The chance to prove "intent" is well known to every attorney. Under section 524 even the fines provided for violations of contract can be remitted; anyone who knows the record of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamship Inspection knows what that means.

No ship operator could have written a more one-sided agreement all in his favor than sections 522 and 524 of this bill.

Section 527: Section 527 starts out bravely to meet the scandals caused by connected holding companies, affiliates, and subsidiaries, as pointed out in detail by the Black committee report, and then concludes by making their use by contractors as discretionary with the authority. If Congress refuses to demand this reform, you may be sure the authority will not. Women and children first has always been a rule of the sea, but this is the first time that the able and astute gentlemen who have been so successful in milking the Treasury have managed to apply this wisdom to the financial aspects of shipping by having their wives and children as the dummy stockholders in these profit-absorbing subsidiaries.

Section 534 (a) (2): This paragraph is ingenious. On the face of it, it limits salaries to $25,000. If it accomplished that purpose, the natural question would be, Why should men receiving this dole and bounty from the taxpayers be allowed to receive such salaries? But it does not accomplish what it purports. All a contractor needs to do is to accept no salary on the books of the contracting company and then he is perfectly free to continue the present practice of receiving a tremendous salary from affiliates or holding companies, who may draw their revenues from the contracting companies and thus from the taxpayer.

Section 534 (b): Under this section the authority has discretionary power to permit an operator to use foreign-flag ships. The expenditure of the American taxpayers' money to aid in operating foreign ships certainly will not build an American merchant marine. Foreign-flag ships also mean low wages and depress wages on American ships; that is why foreign ships are used.

Section 537 (p. 39): Under this section American insurance should be required. When foreign insurance is bought the plans of our ships, including naval arrangements, such as gun-turret emplacements, become known to foreign nations, as the plan of the ship is given to foreign insurance companies. To prevent exorbitant charges by American companies, the present Government fund should be made increasingly available.

Section 602 (p. 40): All through the bill you will find references, as in this case, to the allocation of some authority to the Secretary of Commerce. The scattering of these powers to the four winds should not be permitted, as it permits high-priced lobbyists and "fixers" to play one Government agency against another, to the disadvantage of the public. Oh, yes; there are real high-priced lobbyists in this game; on page 898 of the hearings you will see where one Washington group of companies paid to lobbyists and attorneys $754,158.20 for the years 1928 to 1933. This is no mean, common, ordinary crowd that we are trying to hold away from the Treasury of the United States. These people admitted—in fact, bragged of the fact—that they spent $150,000 to get the 1928 Merchant Marine Act through Congress, as will be noted on page 683 and 684 of the hearings.

TITLE VII

Section 701, page 43: This section vests regulatory functions in the same agency that will determine subsidy payments. This is not only economically and administratively unsound, but violates the President's recommendation in his message, from which I quote:

> The quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative duties of the present Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce should be transferred for the present to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Here is another important conflict with the recommendations of the President.

Section 703 (a), page 45: This section creates another new agency, which is absolutely unnecessary; it handles matters which could easily be taken care of by an aggressive authority personnel. This proposes one more of those joke interdepartmental committees, on which subordinates serve, and which produce no result except the expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

Section 801, page 46: The bill devotes nearly three pages to the welfare of the American seaman, and with what result? Although the main excuse for an operating subsidy is the so-called "American standards", necessity of higher wages and better living conditions, and so forth, there is no provision in this bill for adequate wages. There is no minimum wage provided. The Farley reports are filled with illustrations, during the last few years, of wages cut, and men thrown out of work on account of lack of manning scales; these two schemes are estimated to have taken away from labor over $2,000,000 a year during the last 4 years. Well, what does labor get out of this bill? Nothing but a service book, which labor representatives tell us is a blacklist. Certainly no one interested in labor could ever vote for the archaic Dark Age theories contained in this bill.

Section 1102, page 62: If you do not read anything else in this bill, read section 1102. Here is a subsidy of no limits, and the cost is unknown. Here is our old friend the trade-penetration-subsidy idea; it should be called "Treasury penetration." In this section there is no provision for operating ships now owned by the United States—remember the Government now owns 288 ships and operates 40 of them on four trade routes to England, France, South America, India, Australia, and China—because they were not "taken over by the United States" as required by this bill.

Section 1103, page 63: This section provides the transfer of appropriations to continue the present mail contracts, all but one of which were obtained without competitive bidding in direct violation of law, in spite of the President's statement that these contracts should be terminated.

Section 702, page 65: Just read paragraph (b) and see what nice difficulties Uncle Sam will have taking over these ships that he does, but does not own, in event of war; this paragraph requirement of "fair actual value" without standards of determination, is productive of controversy and favoritism. Certainly there should be a maximum figure in the contract. Certainly the purchase price from the Government should be that maximum.

Section 1106, page 67: This section legalizes deferred rebates—a distinct detriment to, and discrimination against, the small shippers. Again the little fellow is squeezed to death.

Section 1109, page 68: I plead with every Member to read this section 1109; let me quote it:

> The authority shall have full power and authority to use any funds not specifically designated for other purposes to give in such manner as it deems desirable aid and support to the holder of any contract under this act, in meeting any unfair competition or practice by any foreign vessel or vessels.

Think that through! First, we are building the ship and advancing 85 percent of the cost, and allowing a trade-in of some old tub by the operator. Second, we arrange to pay the operator the difference between foreign and domestic operating costs. Third, the gift available under section 1102. And last, as if all that is not enough, an additional subsidy without limit or restrictions, and no guard against favoritism. Translated, this section invites every ship operator to drive a truck up to the Treasury and load it full of the American taxpayers' money and come back for more as often as he likes.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, it is my sober and considered opinion that the Bland bill could not have been more beneficial to the private operators than if they had written the bill themselves. When lobbyists like Ira Campbell are permitted to make suggestions as to what is to go in the bill, it is no wonder that we have such a bill before us.

For the sake of the American people, whose interest is entrusted in our hands, let us vote down this bill, and thereby serve notice upon this ship-operator crowd that they cannot influence the American Congress to rob the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States recently appropriated one-half billion dollars with which to bring our Navy up to treaty strength and to replace obsolete and antiquated vessels with up-to-date and more speedy vessels. This was done, not because we are a warlike Nation, but because with so many thousands of miles of coastline an adequate Navy to meet any emergency is necessary for its protection and for the security of the Nation as a whole.

In time of war or other emergency, however, our Navy can only be as effective as our merchant marine will permit it to be. Our merchant marine is auxiliary to the Navy, but it is essentially a part of the Navy in time of national emergency. The merchant marine must be sufficient at all times to meet any demands which may be placed upon it by the Navy. Its vessels must be sufficient in number, sufficient in speed, and sufficient in operating personnel. The truth of the matter is that under present circumstances, with the present average speed limit of the vessels of the American merchant marine, it could not efficiently serve our Navy. The merchant marine is simply a link in our chain of national defense, and that defense can only be as strong as its weakest link.

For almost a century we have been notoriously weak in the proper care of our merchant marine. When Theodore Roosevelt sent the American Fleet around the world in 1907, our merchant marine was so inadequate that it was necessary to employ Scandinavian vessels to assist in that enterprise. When we entered the World War we had to hire and pay whatever price was asked for the ships of our allies to transport American goods and troops. Goods and merchandise of American production were piled high on every wharf and dock in the country. Out of that expensive experience grew a realization that something must be done to aid the American merchant marine. The result of this was an indirect subsidy under the guise of mail contracts. This has been unsatisfactory and has led to much justified criticism.

On the other hand, every major maritime nation on the face of the earth subsidizes its merchant marine because of its necessity as an important part of national defense. The time has now come when we must do likewise. We have utterly failed under the old method to keep our merchant marine modernized. We have failed to replace outworn vessels. Of our entire merchant marine, the United States has only built 11 percent since January 1, 1924, while Great Britain has built 42 percent; Germany, 38 percent; France, 25 percent; Italy, 28 percent; and Japan, 21 percent. With 89 percent of our merchant marine composed of ships over 11 years old, economy in their operation and fair competition with the ships of other nations is almost futile. Likewise, they cannot hope to adequately serve our Navy in time of national emergency.

If the United States is ever attacked by a foreign foe it will be at some point along its thousands of miles of coastline. It is therefore essential that three things be borne in mind as necessary to our national defense. They are, first, an adequate Navy; second, an adequate merchant marine; and third, adequate shipyards distributed throughout our entire coastline capable of caring for any need.

Within recent weeks, charges have been made in some quarters to the effect that this bill has been written by representatives of the shipping interests or others having a personal gain motive. I have attended every hearing and every meeting of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in its deliberations and state unequivocally that nothing could be further from the truth. This bill is the result of careful study after long and exhaustive hearings extending over more than 7 weeks and during which time representatives of the shipping interests and shipbuilders, as well as of labor and independent organizations interested in the protection of life at sea, appeared before your committee to furnish information.

This legislation is not simply a subsidy bill. It has other features of paramount importance to the American people and American seamen. Title X of the bill deals with the limitation of shipowner's liability. It completely revises the law on this subject as it relates to both passengers and crew and gives them greater security.

The Morro Castle was a 10,000-ton ship. When it was destroyed its owners received some four and one-half million dollars. There were 167 lives lost and it is reported that 100 more were permanently injured. Under present law the total liability of the steamship company to not only the 100 injured but to the heirs of the 167 lost amounts to only $20,000. Under this proposed legislation their liability would have been $600,000. A shipowner will naturally take greater precautions to prevent such calamities if his liability is greater.

Likewise, this bill will provide much-needed legislation in behalf of American seamen. At the request of the president of the International Seamen's Union I introduced H. R. 7290. Many of its provisions have been incorporated into this merchant-marine bill. For example, section 11 of H. R. 7290 seeks to amend section 4351 of the Revised Statutes, dealing with seamen's discharge certificates. Section 803 of the merchant-marine bill now being considered, includes a much more effective provision covering the subject than does my bill, H. R. 7290.

The suggestion has been made that vessels and routes in our foreign trade be taken over under Federal ownership. It would be inconsistent to put any branch of our merchant marine under Federal ownership unless we take over all of it. Vessels entering into coastwise and intercoastal commerce are interchangeable with those entering into foreign commerce. If vessels entering into foreign commerce are to be placed under Federal ownership then we should also place our coastwise and intercoastal vessels under Federal ownership.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, if our merchant marine is to be placed under Federal ownership and operation, so should our rail and other common carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. My own disposition is to generally favor public ownership and operation of public utilities, but I cannot support any proposal which will provide for only taking over a part of our transportation system and not take it over in its entirety. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Iowa made a very able and scholarly analysis of the pending bill. I fear, however, that his discussion of the bill was based very largely upon what has occurred in the past and what was disclosed by the Black committee, and, incidentally, by the very careful investigation that was made under the auspices of the Postmaster General, into the operation of subsidies.

There is absolutely no question but that the operation of the subsidy principle in America has been very unfortunate, and that those who were the beneficiaries of it were definitely untrue to America and untrue to anything except their own pockets. I have spoken here on the floor before in favor of what I call a vigorous nationalism—a nationalism which takes into account first the needs of America. It is my belief that with a gross expenditure of $800,000,000 for shipping, America should have her place today on the sea, but America has not got it because those who were the beneficiaries of these subsidies definitely violated the pledge they made to the Government when they accepted these benefits.

In this connection, I want to say that I have great faith in the integrity of this committee. I am a member of the committee. During the period of the hearings on this measure, unfortunately, I was ill and unable to attend and become familiar with some of the problems presented by this bill.

It is my hope that the corrupt acts so feelingly referred to by the eloquent and able gentleman from Maine will never occur again. If they do, in my judgment, someone should be shot summarily at dawn.

This bill is a workable bill. The principle of subsidy, of course, is a part of the statute law of every nation today, and no flag can fly on the seas unless there is a heavy subsidy. The case of the Normandie was referred to today, the new ship which recently docked in New York on her maiden voyage from France; and another illustration was given by reference to the Queen Mary, built by the Cunard Line on the Clyde.

This bill makes definite provision for the creation of a maritime authority and gives it complete jurisdiction over this whole question. The future of the American flag on the seas, the future of the American merchant marine both as to ships and personnel, depend on the integrity and character of this authority. The gentleman from Maine is right when he says that this bill is susceptible of as grave abuses as were present at Teapot Dome. Its administration depends entirely upon the Americanism and the integrity, technical and civic, of the men appointed by the President to this authority. If they are not under the control of the Shipbuilding Trust, which I condemn just as vigorously as does the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Iowa, if they are true to their trust and are selected for character and ability to carry out the spirit of this bill, then, indeed, will the American flag have its place on the seas.

One thing I regret is that the bill does not stress fully enough the question of personnel. Ships without American crews do not fill the bill. One of the functions of ships built by subsidies is to develop an American personnel. The beneficiaries of these subsidies have been untrue to America in this respect. Under proper encouragement I can visualize high-school boys from the inland States coming to the seacoast to work on these ships, high-school graduates, who can work up to the officer grade. This is the type of merchant marine personnel we wish to develop. I do not mean to question the character of the young men who live along the coast; my purpose is to emphasize the thought that American youth should be recruited into the merchant marine.

So, while acknowledging the evils of the past and the viciousness of past raids on the Treasury which are without parallel, I say that with this bill creating, as it does, this authority, giving the President the power to appoint the members of this authority, with the advice and consent of the Senate, is a step in advance. If this power is exercised with care, and if the money changers, the corrupt shipbuilding group, the four floors of vice presidents which are in some of these merchant marine organizations, will cease to exist, and we shall have an American merchant marine built on merit. All this is in the lap of the President; and I may say in this connection that I do not believe there is any man in America who loves the sea or knows the sea better than the President himself.

I have no sympathy with those who criticize him for going on the sea, even under the palatial auspices of the Nourmahal because it gives him health, it gives him vigor, and he loves it. He has it in his blood. He wishes to see the American merchant marine developed. He will sign this bill if you send it to him.

Mr. Chairman, I say that this bill, assuming that the personnel is selected with care, and assuming they are spiritualized in the interest of America and removed from the influences of these corrupt groups, is a step in advance and insures a merchant marine which will place the American flag on the seven seas. In this connection I wish to stress anew the necessity for personnel, which is just as important as ships themselves. The question of personnel has been largely ignored in the past. The sailors on the sea are just as important and just as necessary to the supremacy and standing of America as are the ships themselves. I stress this phase with all the power I have at my disposal.

There are, of course, in America men who know every phase of this question. There are in America men who know the technical side of it. There are men in America who have the ability, the knowledge and the integrity to give adequate service to the Nation. Such appointments will correct the conditions existing in the past where officials in the steamboat and related inspection services have been more or less under the influence of some phases of the corrupt Shipbuilding Trust.

Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill with the reservations I have noted. I am for the bill because I know this committee has worked faithfully with the public interest in mind in connection with the writing of this legislation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 19 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, but a Member is not entitled to speak on a bill in general debate more than once.

Mr. WEARIN. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I believe under the rule a Member is not entitled to speak in general debate more than once on a bill, either in Committee or in the House, but I have no objection. I may be in error.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman is correct in one sense of the word and an objection may be raised.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have no intention of raising an objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct about the rule. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may proceed for 19 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, in considering finally the subsidy legislation that is before the Congress, may I remind the members of the committee of some very significant things that should be kept in mind.

In the first place, I would have the Members of the House keep definitely before themselves the fact that the experience of the United States Government in the operation of the merchant marine under the 1928 act has been most disastrous. It has been disastrous from the standpoint of a lack of faith and evidently a lack of willingness on the part of the ship operators to cooperate with a program for the purpose of building up the American merchant marine. In the face of this fact we must also recollect that the Congress today is faced with the situation of having the same group of operators, the same interests that desired the 1928 act, and they have abused their privileges under the 1928 act, asking this Congress for the legislation that is being proposed here today as a program for the advancement and the development of an American merchant marine. We have no greater assurance as we deliberate here today that they will keep faith with the American people any more under this act, if passed, than they did under the 1928 act.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. What would the gentleman propose in order to keep our merchant fleet on the ocean if this act fails?

Mr. WEARIN. I will answer the gentleman's question in this way. If the pending bill is defeated, there is a resolution that I have introduced this morning providing a method of cancelation of the mail contracts under the 1928 act and a proper protection for the United States against those self-same operators recovering against the United States to the extent of securing damages for the incompleted portions of their contracts. That is the first portion of the reply. Secondly, the gentleman from Maine who preceded me this afternoon pointed out to the House that under this new act we are in effect through the payment of a construction subsidy loan paying in the neighborhood of approximately 85 to 88 percent of the cost of the ships that are to be built.

Following that we incorporate in this bill a provision that permits the same shipping interests to turn in the old ships—or, in other words, the junk that is navigating the seas—as part payment for new tonnage. As pointed out by the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], who stated that our American merchant marine was depreciating and going downhill, we permit them to turn in these old ships as part payment and the first payment on the new merchant marine. We permit them to turn them in for what may prove to be the first payment that is due the Government as a result of the building of a new ship. There is nothing to prevent that amount making up the full first payment on their construction loan, and, following that, it is not inconceivable that the operating subsidies might possibly exceed or at least equal the amount of the payment due on the ships. The result of this situation might mean a new merchant fleet for practically no cash outlay on the part of the operators.

Mr. HARLAN. Is that not substantially one of the systems Germany is using at the present time?

Mr. WEARIN. Germany has a system of subsidies, but they have been utilizing them with greater success than the American Government has ever been able to operate under a subsidy, as demonstrated by the 1928 act and the failure of the American operators to cooperate with our system. If we are faced with the problem of furnishing, we will say, anywhere from 80 to 88 percent of the money invested in these ships, what is the difference between ownership on the part of the man who has the largest investment and the operation of those ships by private operators on a lease basis, which would protect the public interests far better than any provision with reference to the establishment of a costly series of subsidies, as is provided in this bill?

Mr. MORAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MORAN. In section 521 appears the date April 1, 1935. Will the gentleman explain why that particular date, April 1, 1935, is in there instead of the former date of February, as appears in the old act?

Mr. WEARIN. As I understand this provision, it was inserted in the bill in order to permit such ships as the Belgenland, which has been renamed and placed under the American flag at a very recent date, to operate under the provisions of this subsidy and secure the benefits therefrom. That situation is certainly something that cannot be referred to as one of the benefits of this act when you can transfer a foreign ship operating under a foreign flag to the American flag and operate it under a subsidy program as provided in the proposed subsidy bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If a line is operating and has not enough vessels to take care of the business offered, does the gentleman think it is better not to allow a ship to be included that can take care of the overflow and send that trade to foreign ships, or, temporarily, to use such ships to hold the overflow and save the commerce for America when the new ship is built. That is the situation.

Mr. WEARIN. In answer to the gentleman's statement, I will say that in my judgment it would be far better, if we are going to develop an American merchant marine, to build ships in American yards, to operate under the American flag, and under no conditions transfer foreign ships to the American flag in order to profit at the expense of the taxpayers.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Of course, but I am talking about a temporary situation. You cannot build such a ship overnight. It takes 18 months to build such a ship.

Mr. WEARIN. That is no reason why you should transfer the benefits under this bill provided by the American taxpayers over to some foreign-built ship. It is a bad principle to be injected into this legislation.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman again begs the question.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Would not the ideal solution be Government ownership and operation, and then we would have a real American merchant marine?

Mr. WEARIN. I may say in answer to the gentleman it would be far superior to our having an equity in these ships that amounts to 80 or 85 or 88 percent, and having the balance paid to the United States Government with obsolete ships, under which we would be holding the sack.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MORAN. Section 1101 provides the usual authorization for appropriations. Can the gentleman tell the House how much the Bland bill will cost the taxpayers of this country?

Mr. WEARIN. No; I cannot, and I may say to the gentleman from Maine that no one else would dare be so presumptuous as to try to tell the House what this bill will cost the American taxpayers, either in the form of construction subsidies, or in the form of operating subsidies, or in the form of penetration subsidies provided under this proposed measure.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say there is no limitation upon the amount that may be appropriated under the terms of this bill?

Mr. WEARIN. There is no limitation upon the amount the authority may recommend or grant if it has the funds.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Am I not correct when I say that in the acts of 1920 and 1928 there was a maximum that could be appropriated under those acts?

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman is exactly correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And there is no maximum fixed in this act?

Mr. WEARIN. There is no such maximum fixed, and, furthermore, there is blanket authority given to the authority to proceed toward the conclusion of construction subsidies and operating subsidies without any definite limitation upon the amount.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. CROWE. At the beginning of the World War American ships carried approximately 10 percent of the products of America that were shipped and then the World War came along and we spent $3,000,000,000 building ships. Does the gentleman want to see the same thing obtain or would the gentleman rather take a few chances, if necessary, to build up a proper merchant marine?

Mr. WEARIN. I may say to the gentleman that I have never, at any time, said to this House I was opposed to building up a merchant marine, but I am certainly opposed to building up a merchant marine with the aid of a construction subsidy which the President has committed himself as being opposed to, with the aid of a continuation of title IV of the 1928 act, which will permit the provisions of mail contracts to continue to their termination, if the President desires them to do so; in other words, passing the buck to the President to cancel them. I certainly am not in favor of building up an American merchant marine in that manner.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The President, so far from saying he was not in favor of a construction subsidy, has explicitly recommended a construction subsidy. The gentleman has read his message and ought to know this and ought not to misquote what the President states.

Mr. WEARIN. I have read the President's message. I have not misquoted him, and I fully understand that he asked the Congress to take those things into consideration. He said definitely that the United States Congress must stop this business of lending money for shipbuilding.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is an entirely different question from a construction subsidy. The President in express language has recommended a construction subsidy.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman has not read the message the same way that I have.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to an article in The Nation, which specifically analyzes the President's message and states that the President asks that subsidies be paid openly and not through building loans and mail contracts, but that they cut out these building loans and mail contracts.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. O'MALLEY. So the President does not ask for a construction subsidy.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman states that this bill is open and that there is no limit on the amount that will be appropriated for the building of ships. Is there any limit to the amount that will be paid for the processing tax and other benefits to other classes in the country?

Mr. WEARIN. I think the gentleman's question is entirely beside the point, because processing taxes are being levied for the purpose of paying benefits to the American people, while, certainly, the lending of money to the shipbuilders is for the purpose of benefiting a particular class of people who have not demonstrated their friendliness toward the American spirit in developing a merchant marine, nor have they cooperated in achieving such an end.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. MORAN. Has any farm program yet been presented to the Congress, in answer to the last question, whereby the Government would purchase a worthless farm from the owner and then lend to the owner 88 percent of the cost of a new farm?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes; just that program.

Mr. WEARIN. Certainly not. I must now conclude my remarks.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield for just one more question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the amount of appropriation contemplated annually under the terms of this bill?

Mr. WEARIN. The bill does not provide for an appropriation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I understand it is not an appropriation, but what is the amount contemplated, and I am asking this with respect to the amount the Treasury will be called upon to pay.

Mr. WEARIN. No one knows, and I do not think we even dare estimate the cost of the operation of this act. The sky may be the limit.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am simply wondering what the program is.

Mr. WEARIN. There is no limitation. Now, I decline to yield further. I want you to keep before you these facts. The President of the United States sent a special message to Congress requesting us to pass merchant-marine legislation, and made definite suggestions that we stop loaning money for shipbuilding and consolidating regulatory features for the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that we should terminate the practice of furnishing subsidies provided under the 1928 act. We have not provided for the definite termination of contracts, but we have passed the buck to the President of the United States, who must take the responsibility.

I call your attention to the fact that the remedies proposed by the Postmaster General in his report to the President of the United States have not been taken into serious consideration by this Congress in passing merchant-marine legislation.

I would remind you also that the committee has been guided in the preparation of the bill by the interdepartmental committee's recommendations, which were not prepared under an Executive order, but were submitted to Congress by President Roosevelt without recommendation.

I want you to keep this thought before you: That the matter of construction subsidy, the matter of operating subsidy, and trade-penetration subsidy provided for in this bill may rise to almost any height, with no definite assurance that we are going to have a merchant marine when we get through.

We have no more definite assurance in this bill that the 1928 act for a merchant marine will be any better 10 or 20 years from now, in spite of the unlimited expense herein authorized. [Applause.]

In conclusion, I desire to offer the following comment on the majority report on H. R. 8555.

SO-CALLED "GOVERNMENT OPERATION"

The following sentence is taken from page 3, paragraph 2:

> It may bring back Government ownership and either Government or private operation of some of these lines and so result in a return to those conditions which existed after the war when annual appropriations for the Shipping Board were something like $40,000,000, and sometimes more, with no permanency in sight.

The inference from the above is that it cost the Government $40,000,000 a year to maintain the same lines now operated by mail contractors. The facts are the Government had over 2,000 ships after the war, many of which were obsolete from the outset. A great percentage of these appropriations referred to above was expended for liquidating purposes and in the maintenance of an inactive fleet of which there are still approximately 280 vessels. Moreover, after 15 years, private ownership has not been obtained. Some 40 ships, owned by the Government, are still operated in essential foreign services not covered by mail contracts under liberal operating agreements.

In regard to the cost of operating the so-called "essential foreign-trade services", most of which are now operated by mail contractors, the records show that it cost the Government $115,000,000 to operate all of its services from 1923 through 1935. Only one of the lines included in this loss represented direct Government operation; the other lines were operated under some form of percentage agreement, where all the operators received the profits and the Government stood the losses.

Some of this money went for development or pioneering "trade penetration" purposes, and at the same time, managing operators on practically no capital realized net profits of an amount estimated to be over $10,000,000, while the Government was losing $115,000,000. As unfair to the Government as this form of operation may have been, it has proven less costly than operation under the mail contracts. Under the existing 43 mail contracts, the Government stands to expend approximately $320,000,000 over a period of 10 years. Thus far, these mail contractors have invested only approximately $59,000,000 of their own money in new vessels, and if the contracts remain in force and they construct all the vessels actually required under the contract, it is doubtful if their total expenditure in new vessels during the period of the mail contracts will equal $100,000,000. Suppose it does equal $100,000,000? Deduct this sum from the $320,000,000 and there will be an operating cost to the Government of $220,000,000 over a period of 10 years as against the $115,000,000 expended during the 12-year period of the iniquitous managing-operator agreement system.

FOREIGN SUBSIDIES

A considerable amount of information has been given regarding foreign subsidies today, however too general to be of any value for comparative purposes. It is, no doubt, true that other countries aid their merchant marine. There is no evidence, however, that they are anything like as recklessly extravagant as has been proposed for American operators under the pending bill. Moreover, it is believed that a careful investigation of subsidies in most of the foreign countries will show that where the government loans a sizable sum for construction purposes, or otherwise aid their merchant marine, it not only exercises a strict control but puts government men on the board of directors and, believe it or not, they recapture all excessive profits.

Another thing might be pointed out: A great percentage of the aid extended in some of the foreign countries is used for the construction, maintenance, and operation of superliners of which we now have none in operation, and there is no specific provision for superliners under this act.

DEPRECIATION VERSUS SURPLUS

Much has been said in favor of permitting the operator to retain all profits, even though excessive at times, that he might build up a surplus for the construction of new vessels. Under the liberal terms proposed by H. R. 8555, there is absolutely no necessity for creating a surplus for construction purposes since the operator depreciates his vessels on a 20-year life basis and includes such depreciation as a part of his operating expense. All that is necessary for him to do to repay the Government the construction loans extended over 20-year periods and to set aside sufficient money to make the down payment on a new vessel (assuming he starts off with a new vessel) would be for him to set aside currently in a special fund the amount of the depreciation actually allowed in operating expense.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, a rejuvenated merchant marine has been the ideal of America ever since those glorious days when American clipper ships entered into the lines of trade and absolutely dominated the seas of the world.

Then there came a period when we turned inland to develop the great national resources that were incomparable in this land. The opportunities on shore were so rich that the gains from the sea were insufficient to hire the youth, on the one hand, and the capital on the other.

The romance of the unexplored West was more potent than that of the seven seas.

Free land, abounding opportunities, a fortune for the taking—these were what drew our youth and our capital from the seas.

Naturally, as a result of the tremendous development that took place as a result of the opening of the great West our seagoing proclivities declined materially.

A lesson was taught to us during the World War of what it means for a great nation to be devoid of the necessary shipping facilities to handle commerce under any contingency that arises. As a result of the decline of our merchant marine we were forced to pay foreign nations immense sums of money to transport our troops to Europe, and I hope to God we will never have to do anything of that kind again; but also I hope to God that if we do we will have the necessary ships to transport them without being dependent upon any other nation.

The eloquent gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] said that this bill has no limit as to the amount that will be granted. The amount that will be granted will depend upon the number of ships that are constructed and the number of ships that are operated. Necessarily you could not put a definite limit upon that. The number of ships operated will depend upon the number of ships needed to carry the commerce of the country, and naturally the number of ships constructed will be the number of ships needed to fill that need. We have given subsidies to every other class, with perhaps one exception, and we are trying to do that now—with the processing tax to take care of the farmer. There are home loans to take care of the home owner and all kinds of loans to take care of insurance companies, banks, railroads, and all the rest; and now, when we are going to need a merchant marine, and when all the indications are that we will need one to carry our commerce, we ought to have a merchant marine to carry it.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Speaking of the number of various classes in the United States, how much of the amendment suggested by Andrew Furuseth, the president of the International Seamen's Union, is carried in this bill?

Mr. FORD of California. I could not say as to that, but if we do not have a merchant marine of any kind, no kind of a grant to the seamen will be needed.

Mr. COLDEN. That is what he says?

Mr. FORD of California. That is the answer.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Wherein is this subsidy act an improvement over the act of 1928?

Mr. FORD of California. I do not know that it is an improvement, but it will be handled by a different group and probably administered more carefully.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I should not like to see a repetition of the 1928 matter.

Mr. FORD of California. I do not believe we will have such an administration.

It seems to me that a merchant marine capable of handling American developed traffic is necessary if the American merchant is to enjoy anything like equality with his foreign competitor.

If this is not true, no one opposing this bill has presented facts or figures to the contrary. Most of the opposition argues for Government-owned ships. That is a desirable end. I doubt, however, that it is the step we are wise in taking at this moment.

Let me assure the advocates of Government-owned ships that whenever the time comes for that step I am with you. In the meantime let us protect American ships, American ship workers, American sailors, and American merchants.

That, my friends, is my philosophy. On that philosophy I appeal to you for support of this bill

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time, 25 minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, when ancient man found that certain things would float on water some genius, possibly cousin to the inventor of the wheel, gathered together floatable objects and used them to help him cross streams, ponds, and lakes that blocked his progress to some desired goal.

The earliest navigation was on rivers and the oldest records we have are concerned with Egypt and the Nile on which, nearly 5,000 years before Christ, boats were made of papyrus reeds woven in the style of an elongated basket and smeared with pitch within and without in order to make them waterproof. The Egyptians had no forests from which to obtain wood, but later on from the time of the first navigational experiments the Egyptians imported wood, probably from the coasts of Phoenicia and made their ships of wood, using papyrus, stiffened by slats, for sails to augment the sweeps, or oars, previously used.

Coeval with the Egyptians the inhabitants of the lands fronting on the Euphrates and Tigris Rivers turned to these watercourses for transport of persons and goods. Herodotus relates that the general custom of those along the upper reaches of these rivers was to build a framework of osier withes—that is willow branches—and cover them with skins, which in turn were coated with pitch, of which there was a plenitude in that region. Carried down the river by the current these early traders brought their produce to Nineveh and Babylon, sold or bartered it there, and then knocked down their coracle, as the bowl-shaped boats they used were called, loaded the whole on the back of a donkey which had been brought down in the coracle for this purpose, and made their way back overland to their homes.

The earliest occidental navigators of the open sea were the Phoenicians, especially those of Sidon and Tyre. They struck boldly out on the waste of waters in wooden vessels probably fabricated from the cedars of Lebanon. These early navigators of Philistia used first one bank of oars and sails and then added another, and possibly two more banks of oars, manned by captives, although the final perfection of the bireme, the double-banked vessels propelled by oars and sails, is given by credit to the Greeks long before the time of Pericles. It is tradition that Cadmus, a Phoenician, landed on the peninsula of Greece before the Dorians and Ionians came down from the north and took over the land, and not only gave the earliest inhabitants of the Hellenic Peninsula the alphabet but also inducted them into the arts of navigation.

The Greeks took their lessons well and soon were building ships that were used centuries before the Christian era to found colonies in Magna Graecia, the present Sicily, and on the south of the Italian Peninsula. So we find that the navigation of river courses and small lakes was the first attempt of man at water transportation, and that this gradually expanded through the centuries into marine transport on the Mediterranean, the Adriatic, the Tyrrhenian, the Aegean, and the Black Seas. Of navigation on the Red Sea, the Gulf of Persia, the waters of the great bays, and seas of the Orient, we have little record, but it is certain that such was accomplished by the natives of those regions.

Ancient vessels connected with ancient caravan routes and river mouths at strategical points along the coasts, such as the present Smyrna; olden Issus, far older than the famed Damascus; Gaza, various ports on the delta of the Nile, of which Alexandria became the most famous; Arsinoe, at the head of the Gulf of Suez. The rivers and the caravan routes performed the functions of modern railroads and brought the produce and products of the hinterland to the coast. The interior prospered because it had outlet to the sea through its coastal harbors; the coast prospered because the deep waters of the earth opened up highways over which the goods of one country could be rowed or sailed to another country and there bartered for that country's goods or sold, and these products brought home again for another sale.

Brigands raided the caravans on land; pirates looted the vessels at sea, but despite these levies by lawless force, trade prospered. Corinth sent the bronze to Athens and the Ionian settlements along the coast of Asia Minor, to Media, Persia, and Rome for armor and statuary. Tyre brought Corinth the tin that made possible the bronze alloy from copper and took factored bronze in exchange—the famous "aes Corinthia" or bronze of Corinth and brought the fine ladies of Corinth the fashionable Tyrian purple, that beautiful dye of the ancients that smelled so terribly in the making and looked so beautiful in the wearing.

Mr. Chairman, I could unfold a most fascinating tale of the merchant marine of ancient nations and the intriguing story of the development, step by step, of vessels capable of taking and holding the seas and of trade between all the civilized and barbarian nations of the days before Christ, but time does not permit.

At the head of the Adriatic Sea, which lies between the long boot of Italy, thrust deep into the Mediterranean, and the present Yugoslavia, Albania, and Greece, for centuries 11 streams swept down to the shores of this sea great quantities of alluvial soil from the mountains and piedmont that crown the head of the Adriatic. Due to an easterly flowing current, this silt was formed into long banks of alluvial mud, called "lidi"—lido in the singular. On these banks fishermen settled, and the first commerce of the ambryotic Venice was with fresh and salted fish to the mainland nearby.

The Goths, Huns, and Lombards overran the Alps, and to escape them the inhabitants of the cities of the mainland at the head of the Adriatic fled to the mud banks and lagoons offshore. This was in the fourth century of our era. There were 12 low mud-bank islands, and the settlers from the mainland formed themselves into lagoon townships and, in time, chose tribunes to represent them in the growing form of republican government.

The aboriginal inhabitants were absorbed by the mainland folk. Trade turned from the local barter with the mainland to the open Adriatic and, league by league, spread over the Mediterranean, up the Dardanelles, and through the Black Sea and across the southeastern Mediterranean to Egypt and the Red Sea, and thence to the Orient.

Venice prospered through her eastern trade until she became the great maritime nation of her times, but her supremacy was to be challenged by another Italian city, Genoa the Superb, built not on mudbanks but on the footing of high hills at the head of the gulf of the same name which tops the Tyrrhenian Sea, on which the "boot" of Italy fronts. Genoa itself is from genu—the knee—and well describes its location at the top of the "boot."

Genoa and Pisa first fought for trade and Genoa defeated Pisa. Then the Venetians and Genoese clashed over the riches of marine commerce and were each alternately victors and vanquished until the battle of Chioggia, in which the Venetians finally were victors. Genoa's trade had penetrated as far as the Euphrates and there the Italian city had erected strong fortresses for the protection of her commerce.

Out of the city of Lisbon, in the then weak nation of Portugal, in 1497 sailed Vasco da Gama with four vessels, instructed by Emmanuel the First to find a sea route to the eastward to India and China. Da Gama rounded the Cape of Good Hope and continuing his northeastward course reached Calicut in India. Later, with 10 ships, Da Gama sailed again to Calicut and in revenge for the treatment of the Portuguese he had left to establish a factory on his first visit bombarded Calicut and then swept onward to Cochin-China destroying everything he could that he found at sea. Calicut, from the cloths of which we get our name of calico, must not be confounded with Calcutta, which was not in existence then, being founded in 1690 by Job Charnock, of the English East India Co.

The discovery of an easterly all-sea route to the Orient by the Portuguese crippled the caravan-vessel routes, part overland, part seaway, of the Genoese and Venetians. An all-water route was cheaper than a mixed land and sea route. Furthermore, the crusades had endangered the western caravans that fell into the hands of the Saracens. Vessels were laden at the prime port and unladen at the home port or vice versa and a single shipment was made of goods instead of many transfers en route. To the Portuguese, rather than any other of the nations of the Middle Ages is due the discovery of the great value of all-water, long-distance transport of passengers and goods. Lisbon prospered as Genoa and Venice declined.

Much else of historical interest, for which we have not time, occurred between this period and the time of Elizabeth of England and Philip II of Spain, in the next century. With this "woman of England" and this "man of Spain" came the conflict for the control of the western ocean—the North Atlantic—and the sea routes to the New World and around the Horn to the Pacific, the Indian, and the China waters and their rich coasts. Elizabeth and Philip would have little more than academic interest for us were it not for the fact that the victories of Drake, Howard, Hawkins, and other English captains over the Duke of Medina Sidonia, in command of the Armada of Spain, closed the Continent of North America to further expansion by Spain and opened up English colonization of the eastern coast of North America above Florida, from which grew the British Colonies in North America, out of which developed the United States of America, based on English law and customs, and speaking the English language.

Had the Lord High Admiral of Spain, in any one of four engagements, been able to inflict a decisive defeat of the Lord High Admiral of England, and then to join with the Duke of Parma in the low countries—the Netherlands and Flanders—and together land victorious troops on English soil—Spain had the best infantry in Europe at that time—the very name infantry coming from Infante—the royal title of princes of Spain—the whole course of American history might have been changed and England herself become an appendage of Spain as had Naples and Sicily, Peru and Mexico.

Man proposes—God disposes. The storms of the skies, rather than the artillery of the English, scattered the Armada. Elizabeth Tudor herself was gracious enough to give Providence credit though she had two medals struck to commemorate the victory, one of which showed the Armada in flight and bore the inscription "Venit, vidit, fugit"—"They came, they saw, they fled."

English Elizabeth fostered merchant-marine commerce by instigating navigation acts for the protection of English mariners, by giving new charters to merchant adventurers, and organizing and financing new companies. She secretly upheld the piracies of Drake and Hawkins while she apologized for their buccaneering in public. From 1558, when the red-haired daughter of Henry VIII and Anne Bullen, or Boleyn, as we know her today, came to be Queen of England, until her death in 1603, she forwarded the dreams of her father, Henry VIII, and grandfather, Henry VII. The first of the Tudor dynasty obtained concessions for English cloth merchants in the Netherlands and increased trade with Scandinavia. Allying himself with John of Denmark, Henry VII broke the monopoly of the Hansa cities and gained free trade with Denmark. Venetian caracks had brought the goods of the Mediterranean to Southampton or Sandwich, but Henry Tudor concluded a treaty with Florence by which that republic opened its ports to English vessels, and the Venetian monopoly of trade with England ceased. English ships began to carry English goods north, south, and east.

John Cabot, a Genoese, settled in Bristol, fired by the exploit of his fellow Genoese, Columbus, got authority in 1497 from Henry VIII to sail the western sea and set up the English banner on all lands he might discover. Cabot ranged the North American coast from Labrador to the mouth of the Delaware—a great heritage for England, but one that was to lie latent until more than a century later under the Stuarts. Cabot received £7 sterling for his discovery.

Portugal had found Brazil and the route around the Cape of Good Hope to the Indian and west and south Pacific Oceans. Francis Drake for England had entered the Pacific around the horn. The Hollanders had found the route to the Orient. Spain was busy with the looting of Mexico, Central and South America, and under Philip had taken the Philippines. Trade was the base of all these exploits. The Spice Islands were in the thoughts of every mariner skipper. The famous Spice Islands were sought because there was to be obtained the condiments that would preserve and make palatable the stale and often putrid meat of the times, and that had marvelous medicinal powers, according to the beliefs of that day.

In all of this the three first Tudors, the two Henrys, and Elizabeth had much hand. Thwarting Spain here, checkmating Portugal there, blocking the Dutch elsewhere, overcoming the advantage of the German Hansa cities in the trade with the Continent of Europe and the circumnavigation of the globe by Francis Drake in the Golden Hind.

Under Elizabeth the English East India Co. came into being in 1600. Its original object was to compete with the Dutch East India Co., which had obtained a monopoly of the trade with the Spice Islands and had raised the price of pepper from 75 cents to $2 a pound, though the shilling of Elizabeth's time was worth much more than the quarter dollar of our time in purchasing value. For 258 years the English East India Co. monopolized English trade with all lands and islands lying between the Cape of Good Hope in Africa and Cape Horn in South America—that is, according to the charter granted by Elizabeth to "the governor and company of merchants trading into the East Indies"—and in the early days interlopers were liable to forfeiture of their ships and cargoes. James I granted subsidiary licenses to private traders induced thereto by the great profits of the trade, but in 1609 he renewed the East India Co.'s charter "forever."

France, Denmark, Scotland, Spain, Austria, and Sweden, also established East India companies and traded their home products for, or bought for cash the spices, silks, gems, and other valuables of the Orient. East India merchantmen became the finest ships that plied the seas, down to the advent of the American clipper ships in the early part of the last century. Cromwell renewed the East India Co.'s charter and Charles II made it his especial concern granting five charters to the company. I have dealt at length with certain aspects of English marine history because it was the root from which sprung American merchant marine. From the first, England subsidized her shipping. Not by outright gifts of money but by granting monopolies of trading rights to her mariners with the prospects of huge profits for private capital and joint stock capital in the beginning. This was an indirect subsidy and it was the foundation of England's greatness at sea. Over a long period of years, one by one she crushed or weakened her rivals in trade.

The wars with the Dutch, the Danes, the Spaniards, the piracy of Elizabeth's time, and the privateering, a polite term for piracy, of the Stuarts, and the alleged free trade of later monarchs had only one object—the expansion, with profit, of England's trade over the seas, north, west, south, and east.

American shipping had its origin in the seaports of the peninsula of Penzance. The names of the cities and towns in New England, the middle colonies, and Virginia show the love in which the early immigrants held their English homes. Plymouth, Bristol, Falmouth, Biddeford, Barnstable, Bridgewater, Weymouth, Dorchester, Portland, Southampton, Exeter, Truro, towns east of the Hudson and well known, indicate the early immigration to the American shores and the establishment of colonies by the men and women of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, and Dorset, and it was the descendants of these men and women who built the early vessels of the merchant marine of the American colonies of Great Britain; and their descendants, in turn, aided by others, who built and manned the fishing, whaling, and trading fleets of New England.

Ships and the seas were in their blood and the same Atlantic Ocean that washed the shores of New England also bathed the strands of Old England, and called to them to venture forth on its broad highways as it had called to their forbears in the times of the Tudors and Stuarts.

Privateers and pirates are often confused in the modern mind. Privateers were privately owned vessels armed with cannon which sailed under the commission and flag of some recognized government. They might be called the militia of the sea. Another class of privateers consisted of vessels either owned or chartered by a colonial government. Their mission was to capture the ships and cargoes of any enemy, either factual or assumed. Pirates carried no commissions from any recognized government, but preyed on the vessels of all nations indiscriminately without regard to war or peace. Privateers sometimes turned pirates deliberately. Sometimes they became such technically by overlooking or misinterpreting the laws and usages of the seas. Both privateers and pirates became the equivalents of the land robber barons on the sea.

Privateering was really a sort of commercial venture. Skippers and crew worked on a sharing-in-prizes basis and were not paid regular wages. Privateers were an important adjunct to the naval operations of the American Revolution and of the War of 1812. They raided British commerce carried in British merchant ships. Privateering fell into dis-repute finally. Pirates claimed to be privateers and privateers denied that they were pirates. So Europe abandoned privateering under the Declaration of Paris of 1856.

American vessels built on the coasts of Maine, Massachusetts, Narragansett Bay, Long Island Sound, the Hudson, Delaware and Chesapeake Bays, and even farther south, ventured on voyages across the Atlantic and back as well as along the coast. They traded agricultural and forest products of the Colonies for industrial products of England and Europe.

Fishing increased along the banks that lie off the shores of New England as far as the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. A hardy race of mariners developed there, and there are authenticated cases of fishing vessels driven by northwesterly gales in record time to the coasts of Ireland, England, and the Spanish Peninsula. Then came whaling.

Nantucket, Marthas Vineyard, New Bedford, Fairhaven, and Salem became the home ports of a series of fleets of whalers that ranged far and wide, from the Arctic to the Antarctic in the Atlantic Ocean, and up the Pacific to Bering Sea and the Arctic Ocean. Whaling trained seamen of fine quality for the merchant marine in the first half of the last century, and whaling brought at least $500,000,000 to the strong boxes of New England, much of which later was invested in clipper ships and sea-borne trade.

At the end of the eighteenth century France evolved a fast vessel of war along new lines. Intended for a convoy for merchant ships this new, swift type of vessel was also built for ocean commerce by France. England copied the French design, but it remained for American designers of naval and merchant vessels to evolve an entirely new type of sailing-vessel hull, sail rig, and mast stepping which became known as the "frigate type", of which the Constitution, Constellation, United States, Ranger, Lexington, and Saratoga were the prototypes. These vessels of war were slim hulled with clean runs aft, heavily sparred and canvassed, carried a cloud of sails forrad—forward—were quick in stays, ardent on the helm, and highly maneuverable at sea or in tight waters. The frigates of the 1790's were the parents of the clipper ships in the merchant marine service of the United States in the first half of the nineteenth century. Commerce learned from war and improved on its teacher.

The North Atlantic, the South Atlantic, and the Indian Ocean were common routes to the new steamships a little over a hundred years ago. From the Savannah to the Civil War, the new steamers were challenged by the full and medium clipper ships. England had plenty of coal and iron and little forest; America had few developed coal and iron mines but did have great forests. England pinned her faith on coal and iron, and the United States cleaved to hardwood hulls, great pine masts and spars and canvas. It was the conflict between beauty and utility, and utility won.

England built the Britannia, a paddle-wheel steamer, in 1840. The Great Western Railway of England built the first single-screw, iron-hull steamer in 1843, and the screw-propelled ship gained 3 knots an hour in speed over the paddlers. The seagoing world was astonished when the American Collins Line built the Arctic, in New York, in 1850, and she made the startling speed of 12½ knots an hour!

The Collins Line operating from New York and Boston to England from 1840 to 1856 was subsidized by the Government of the United States. When the Government in 1856 ceased subsidizing this line, the entire merchant marine of our Government collapsed.

The discovery of gold in California did more than enrich the pioneer miners and their backers. The names of Flood, Fair, Mackey, are known to many, but the names of the men and women who crossed the plains, the Rockies and the Sierras to reach the gold coast are buried in history. The great plains between the Alleghanies and the Rockies were the haunt of the Indian and the range of 20,000,000 bison, or buffalo, as they are improperly called.

Railroads were extended into the new territories. The eyes of the East were turned toward the fertile plains. The seacoast, Original Thirteen States, sent their sons and daughters westward and the empire of the sea was abandoned for the land empire of the West. Money that had financed clipper ships was poured into the coffers of the new railroads. The Federal Government heavily subsidized in money and great strips of marginal land the iron rail transport.

Seven railway systems received 81 percent of these land grants; and five systems, the Northern Pacific, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific, Santa Fe, and Chicago & North Western Railroads, received 79 percent of the Federal land grants, which amounted to a total of 129,947,000 acres, and from various States additional grants of 48,424,000 acres, making a total of Federal and State land grants to railroads of 178,371,000 acres. The value placed upon this immense acreage was the extremely reasonable one of $1 an acre computed on the average price received in the sale of Government lands in the 20-year period from 1851 to 1871. In addition to these grants the railroads also received about 600,000 acres of right-of-way grants generally in the proximity of or within the limits of cities and towns and additionally various other forms of financial aid. The price of $1 an acre does not in any way indicate the price per acre received by the railroads on a resale to settlers at later periods. Some of the land given away in order to forward rail transportation now sells for as much as $2,000 an acre. It must be remembered, however, that the railroad in some instances carried Government troops and property free of charge and in other instances at half the normal charge for such transportation.

In addition to the land grants, the railroads sold securities in the shape of bonds and their variants and stocks to municipalities, States, and private investors, and of this money represented today by the refunding, but not the payment, of these security debts runs into a standing funded debt of $12,000,000,000, to which must be added ten billions of money received from the sale of stocks estimated at par value. A total of $22,000,000,000 present-day valuation.

The railroads have certainly been well cared for financially by the Government and by private investing.

As the railroads gained in power and scope of operation the merchant marine declined. Confederate gunfire destroyed most of the beautiful full clipper and medium clipper ships, the ownership of which was mainly held in the Northeastern States, mostly in New England and New York.

In order to place the merchant marine on an equality with railroads, it would be necessary for Congress and the investing public to put in $200,000,000 a year, not counting interest, to provide the equivalents of the twenty-odd billion of the railroads.

Since the export and import ocean transportation of the United States represents about 10 percent at its best of the land transportation, the merchant marine should have received in this period $2,000,000,000, which figure could have been reached by an annual appropriation and investment of twenty millions a year.

Before the outbreak of the Civil War the United States had a merchant marine tonnage of 5,600,000 tons; England had a merchant marine tonnage of 5,900,000; the rest of the nations had 5,600,000 tons of shipping. Before the Civil War 75 percent of the export and import cargo of the United States was carried in American ships; this dropped to 8 percent in 1914 at the outbreak of the World War. With the start of this last disastrous conflict the European Allies withdrew all their shipping to their own purposes. American cotton was left in the fields unpicked, or stored in warehouses because there were no American ships to transport it abroad. The same thing was true of wheat and other commodities, except, in such cases where these commodities were required by the Allies for their own use.

When the United States entered the war, we had no vessels to transport troops and material and our Government had to rely upon foreign shipping, for which it paid a high price to England and France and later to Italy to transport troops and personnel.

In a belated effort to provide ships for its own war needs the United States spent $3,500,000,000, most of which went into wooden ships, which later were found to be absolutely unsuited for the purpose, involving a total loss of the money spent for these archaic structures.

For the transport of men, munitions, and material overseas and their return, the United States Government paid out to foreign governments or their nationals the astounding sum of $110,000,000.

Had this amount been paid to American shipping interests instead of to the foreign countries, who later repudiated their debts to the United States, American shipping would have been ably financed and our flag today would be flying over an efficient and competent American merchant marine. [Applause.]

From 1789 to 1860 American-built, manned, and owned ships carried the products of this Nation to all the ports of the world. There was a steady growth in our sailing merchant marine, mostly vessels of wood, of which we had ample supplies in our abundant forests. Oak, hickory, pine—and nothing devised by man in metal could equal the suitability of Maine pine for masts and spars. England had few forests but ample coal and iron. Iron for ships and coal for fuel. So naturally the Britons turned to the steamship as their means of carrying ocean-borne commerce. Americans also built steamships, and their efforts climaxed in 1840 in the Collins Line, which for 7 years gave keen competition to European steamships. The Collins Line was helped by the Federal Government through a mail subsidy. When this was withdrawn, about 1856, and the Collins Line lost two vessels, the line went into bankruptcy, and that was the end of that competition.

The destruction by the Alabama and other Confederate privateers of Federal shipping almost cleared the oceans of the American flag. Shipping had been highly profitable to the seaboard States, notably New England, and these profits were turned to the development of the great West. Coastwise trade still held its own but the deep sea was practically abandoned by Americans.

The Europeans were not idle. The heavily settled nations on the northwest of Europe clung to the sea. It was their route to world commerce. They had no great interiors to develop and the only export market for their surplus goods was by way of the sea, and to the sea they held tenaciously.

Each new vessel that was launched in Europe was larger and better than those that preceded her. European consuls in other nations sought out new fields for their nationals' goods—they were, and still are, commerce scouts. It is only recently that through the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce that an organized attempt has been made to learn, on the ground, what American goods foreign nations would buy and that has been heavily curtailed in its activities.

From 1800 to 1860 American ship captains were not only skippers of their ships but were also first-class salesmen of American goods in foreign ports. The real work fell on the supercargo, an officer aboard ship who was in charge of the cargo. It was his job to find out what demand there was or could be created for American manufactured goods and to report the results to the captain and the owners. On the return home such cargoes were shipped as could find ready sale, in foreign ports. The historic ship load of warming pans, discarded in New England, taken down to the Tropics and sold to cook over open fires; the sale of ice to the southern countries; the introduction of Yankee clocks, shoes, rubber boots, horse plows, and other farming implements used by hand are examples of old-time Yankee enterprise. For many generations the young women of Buenos Aires would wear no other footgear but American kid boots.

South American countries are accustomed to long credit. Six months used to be considered cash in the last century. The American manufacturers would only sell for cash—spot cash. The English, German, French, and Scandinavian countries were willing to give long credit and to adopt the leisurely method of dealing customary in South America and the Orient. The Yankees were always in a hurry, anxious to do business out of hand. Their European competitors, adopting the methods of the countries they dealt with, gradually cut into the sales of American manufacturers. Americans offered better goods at better prices, and, when the motor car came in, with improved agricultural machinery, smarter shoes, better hats, and clothing.

These American goods had to be shipped in foreign vessels, and the foreigners saw to it that deliveries were slow and freight charges high—for Americans—while their own national goods were expedited and at lower freight rates. The edge was always against the Americans so far as ocean-borne commerce is concerned, which would not have been the case had there been enough American hulls to transport exported American products.

When the World War broke out the United States had only four vessels plying to South America regularly. Had we then been possessed of ample shipping the tremendous market in South America, which the nations at war were compelled to abandon, would have produced billions in profits to American manufacturers, exporters, and manufacturers. We need never have sold a dollar's worth of goods to the warring nations, but could have dealt with, and legitimately so, South America, the Far East, South Africa, and Australasia to the upbuilding of our export trade and the profit of all concerned. We would have gotten paid for our goods, which is more than can be said for the goods we shipped to the Allies.

When we finally established the United States Shipping Board and began to build ships overseas export trade which had dropped from a percentage of goods carried in 1860 in American ships amounting to 77.3 of the total to 8 percent in 1914. Our lowest point in tonnage and percentage of goods carried in American ships was in 1910, when the shameful figures of 782,517 tonnage and 8.7 percentage of goods carried in American ships were reached.

Due to legislation favoring the American merchant marine from 1917 on, the number of American vessels engaged in trade with Europe has risen from 6 to 193 vessels; with South America from 4 ships to 169; with the Pacific coast and Far East from 6 ships to 87 vessels; with Africa from no ships to 20 ships; and with the Pacific coast-Australasia from 3 ships to 19 vessels. To the Carribean, West Indies, and Canada in 1914 only 66 American ships were trading; in 1932 this had risen to 164 vessels. The total of all overseas ships in 1914 was 85, and this had increased to 652 vessels. The gross tonnage of these vessels has risen from 510,271 tons in 1914 to 3,282,022 tons in 1932.

The only thing that has enabled this increase in American shipping is the granting of mail subsidies, of which 44 are now in effect. To those who shudder at the word subsidy as if it were something malefic let me cite the figures of increase in tonnage to Europe, South America, the Orient, Africa, and Australasia which are from 187,333 tons in 1914 to 2,534,595 in 1932. All this is due to subsidies in the form of mail contracts which enabled our shipowners to compete with foreign ships in these trade routes, since a subsidy meant the difference between a continuous deficit and a slight but encouraging profit.

In 1924, due to world conditions, ships to the number of thousands were withdrawn from our trade. The farmers had a surplus of wheat of 250,000,000 bushels and no means of moving it to Europe. At a cost of less than $1,000,000 the Shipping Board moved this wheat abroad and thus prevented a price collapse that would have meant the loss of $600,000,000 to farmers.

When the British coal strike in 1926 caused the withdrawal of British ships the United States Shipping Board took out its laid-up ships, and came to the rescue of our farmers and industrialists, saving them a loss estimated to reach $300,000,000.

Two billions have been saved American shippers, to be added to their profits, by the reduction in ocean freight rates caused by the competition of American vessels in the period between the World War. Not alone is this saving but discrimination against American ships has been prevented, because we could compete for our own export trade with our own ships, and do not have to rely on foreign vessels for export carriage.

Nine billions is the amount of America's ocean freight bill for the decade of 1921–30. American ships of this amount received three billions. We should have got every dollar of that nine billions instead of handing six billions over to foreign vessels. We shall get our legitimate share of freight, which is all that is paid for export of American goods, when we have the ships and they are properly supported by the American people through Congress. [Applause.]

Confining the citation to ocean-going vessels competing in the international carrying trade, we find the total of the world's merchant marine tonnage to be today about 36,000,000 tons. Of this tonnage, Great Britain has about thirteen and one-half million; Japan, slightly over three million; the United States, slightly less than three million; Germany, 2,700,000; France, about 2,250,000; and Italy, about 2,100,000. Compared with the situation in 1914, the American merchant marine engaged in ocean foreign trade has much improved, but we are still near the foot of the list from the viewpoint of competitive tonnage, although as a result of the act of 1928 in a period of 4 years subsequently 450,000 gross tons of vessels were launched, including 9 tankers and 2 ships of special type, leaving us high types of combination passenger and freight vessels valued at $142,000,000, or about $4,600,000 each vessel.

In the President's message he contended that we had given thirty millions in subsidies to ships of United States registry which is less than one-third of the one hundred and ten millions the United States paid to Great Britain and France for transport during the war.

In marine commerce between the elements of the British commonwealth of nations 90 percent of that trade a few years ago was carried in British ships although this transport, theoretically, is open to all nations However, as we all know, there is a vast difference between theory and practice. England has always cared most scrupulously for her commercial navy. Build as she would, Germany before the war was never able to set afloat more than one-quarter of the amount of British tonnage with all of Germany's naval technical advance. Remember, in this connection, that in 1858 the United States had as much ocean-going tonnage as all the other nations of the world put together, except Great Britain, and the United States was only 300,000 tons behind Great Britain at that time. From this splendid condition in less than 40 years the United States dropped to 8 percent of the carrying capacity of its own exports and imports, in 1914 the year that witnessed the outbreak of the World War.

When President Theodore Roosevelt sent the United States Navy on its voyage around the world, he had to go to foreign nations to get colliers, auxiliary ships, and tenders to accompany that fleet on its way around the world.

During the last decade foreign countries have carried about 75 percent of the ocean trade of the United States. Since this was profitable to them, it seems to me, that an opportunity was presented our former associates in the World War to devote part of this profit to the payment of the war debts to the United States, particularly also in view of the fact that between August 1914 and April 1917, when the United States entered the war, American shippers paid increased ocean freight charges boosted tenfold or more, which cost industry and agriculture of the United States nearly a billion dollars, and it might also be recalled during the British coal strike, after the World War, which withdrew many of their ships from service, that the United States Shipping Board was able to put ships to service to carry wheat and cotton out of Gulf ports, which saved American shippers 650 millions of dollars, which went into the pockets of American industrialists and farmers.

Were we able to build ships such as the American merchant marine needs, 85 percent of the cost would go for labor and 15 percent for material, to the advantage of the reemployment of labor and the development of the merchant marine. That is the purpose of the present bill. [Applause.] To put American shipping under the American flag back on the ocean trade routes of the world, where it belongs by the right of a great people to have their own means of waterborne transport to all the nations of the world, three things are necessary:

First. A construction differential subsidy, to be granted to shipbuilders and their shipyards to equalize the difference in cost between vessels built in the United States and vessels built in other countries due to the higher cost of materials and skilled labor in the United States over that obtaining in other countries.

Second. An operation differential subsidy, which would be a subsidy to equalize the difference in the cost of operating American shipping in competition with the shipping of other nations operated under lower labor costs for personnel, supplies, and repairs.

Third. A trade penetration subsidy, a grant to United States ships to enable their owners to open up trade with other countries not now open to or traded with by American ships.

No further mail subsidies should be granted. Their operation was permeated with fraud and corruption. I confidently believe that these methods will put the shipping of the United States of America on a parity with the shipping of the world and that through them the American flag again will be seen flying in all the ports of the world as it was in the days of the clipper ships. [Applause.]

The United States is now giving subsidies—there is no other name for it—to industry through the tariff; to agriculture through bounties; to bankers through the operations of the Federal Reserve Banking System; to labor and the American Federation of Labor through restricted immigration, thereby keeping out the competition of foreign labor; to Boulder Dam, Muscle Shoals, through flood control—all local in their operation and only indirectly, if at all, affecting the Nation at large.

In the building of ships 70 to 75 percent goes to labor and 30 to 25 percent to material; in the operating of built ships plying in trade 80 to 90 for labor and 20 to 10 percent for supplies; that is, for material. Testimony was adduced before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries during the hearings that the cost of labor in the building of ships was 80 to 90 percent of the total cost, and of material 20 to 10 percent; but the figures I first cited are based on construction costs of vessels built by or for the Navy, and I feel that these figures are the most certain. Whichever be true labor gets at least three-quarters of the amount spent for ships and may get as high as 90 percent. Labor is the great beneficiary in the end.

Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, in the early days clearly saw the value of shipping to the young United States when all they had to ship were agricultural, lumber, and fishing products. How much more is American shipping needed today, when the industrial products of the Nation have reached a development far beyond that of any other single nation and surpassing in variety and magnitude the entire products of many nations?

Are these products to be carried to foreign buyers of American goods in American export trade in foreign vessels so that our exporters are at the mercy of any freight charges that these foreigners may choose to extort, to their great profit, or are we going to arrange it so that the freight charges for American cargoes will go to the profit of Americans, as they should, and as they will when again we have an American merchant marine worthy of the name?

When the Cunard Line had obtained the cream of passenger and freight traffic on the North Atlantic from 1840 to 1847 the United States granted a subsidy to the American Collins Line, and in a short time the faster and abler Collins steamers had captured 50 percent more passengers and 30 percent more freight from the Cunarders and forced the Cunard to reduce its freight rates from $35 to $20 a ton, to the saving of American shippers. The withdrawal of this subsidy and the loss of two ships, about which there was much mystery, caused the Collins Line to suspend and left the North Atlantic to the Cunard Line. When Congress in 1857 abolished ship subsidies, it sounded the death knell of the American merchant marine.

In the 50 years from 1860 to 1910 American shipping fell from 77.3 to 8.7 percent of American foreign trade. Where once the stars and stripes had been seen in every important seaport of the world it now became so seldom seen as to excite wonder.

American manufacturers and farmers were paying to foreigners every year hundreds of millions of dollars for freight that should have gone to American owners of American vessels—had there been any such.

Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, and Theodore Roosevelt in turn earnestly warned the American people of the dangers inherent in a policy of allowing American shipping to decline. Woodrow Wilson said:

> How are we to get the ships if we wait for the ocean trade to develop them? The Government must open these gates of sea trade, and open them wide.

When the World War broke out there were only 19 American ships in ocean trade, of which only 6—only 6, think of it—were in the North Atlantic trade. When the European belligerents withdrew their ships from trade we had none to replace them. If we had ships then the whole of South American trade could have been ours for the taking. But we could not ship our products south of the Caribbean since we had no vessels to ship them in, and a vast and profitable trade was entirely lost. Because it could not be shipped abroad, cotton fell to 5 cents a pound.

It cost the United States three billions to try to put ships on the ocean when we entered the war. If we add what we paid England, France, and Italy to this and then surcharge it with the lost profits we might have had from sea trade between 1914 and 1917 the amount is so staggering that I hesitate to give it. It would have provided the United States with a merchant marine surpassing any in the world, surpassing all in the world.

In shipbuilding 16 principal items are used. Each of the 48 States of the Union produces several of these materials. The benefit would not be confined to the seaboard States if we built proper ships for a new merchant marine. Every producer of cotton, corn, wheat, lumber, coal, oil would benefit; every State in the Nation would benefit; and at least 75 percent of the money spent would go to labor—in some special cases as high as 90 percent.

Therefore, it would not only be the shipyards of the seaboard States that would benefit from the upbuilding of a competent merchant marine by the United States but every section of the country, every State in that section, every county in that State, and I might almost say every village and hamlet in that county. This was true in New England in the days of the Boston, Salem, Portland, New Bedford, and Nantucket shipping; and what was true on a small scale in the days of the sailing ships would be as true in these days on a far greater scale.

We must have ships. We must have American ships, built by Americans and manned by Americans and flying the American flag. [Applause.] Our great prosperity lies in the export of or surplus products. When the United States is sending its industrial and agricultural products abroad that means that there is opportunity for the use of the full potentials of our producing capacities and abilities, not only in industry but in agriculture. There are great markets yet to be developed. The little town of Salem built ships and traded to the Orient and grew wealthy. The ships of Nantucket scoured the Antarctic, rounded the Horn, and sailed to Bering Sea and the Arctic. Were they hardier and better men than we? They had no trade. They had to make trade or find whales and they did both. Let the Government provide the three requisites that I have named: Construction differentials, operation differentials, and trade-penetration subsidies, and American men and firms will do the rest. But the ships we are to build must be real ships.

They must be able to compete in speed and comfort and cargo-carrying capacity with the best that the rest of the world has to offer in competition. I would rather we had 5 first-class 20,000-ton ships than 1 super 100,000 tonner. It is the combined cargo and passenger ship that Great Britain relies on. The Queen Marys are advertisements—splendid ones to be sure—but advertisements nevertheless. We must build our great superliners to match them later on. At present we need what are known as " combination ships ", carrying passengers and cargo, tankers, and cargo ships. Let the thousand-footers wait about 2 years until we have the solid fleets of handleable and profitable vessels plying into all the ports of the world from all the ports of the United States.

The ships must be made, as they can be made, as safe as human ingenuity can make them. They must be wholly manned by American officers and crews and wholly built of American material in American shipyards by American workmen. Then we shall know what we have got and how they will stand up in the times of stress that are bound to come at sea.

The sea is a rough master once it gets the upper hand. It takes skill, competent skill, to operate safely any ship at sea. Our American seamen have the intelligence so to operate their vessels when they get them and they can be trained. This cannot be done in a year nor in a few years. It takes years to make and mold an ocean line. Half a dozen ships under a house flag will not make a line. But American lines can be established and the time to begin is now. [Applause.]

The loss of lives of crews and passengers due to destruction of vessels at sea is estimated to have been 100,000 persons in the past century; the loss of cargo mounts to countless millions. Man has not conquered the sea and man never will. An icefield, solid and just awash, tore out the forefoot of the great Titanic and hundreds met their death. Spasmodic and unpredictable variation of the compass off the California coast made a fleet of torpedo boats pile up on the rocks. Ice in the Arctic has crushed whaling and exploring vessels as if they were made of thin glass instead of sturdy oak. Wind and wave have driven vessels ashore on lonely coasts with the loss of the ship and all hands.

But man must use the seas for his surface transport, and man will continue to use it if he cannot conquer it, defying its terrors and dangers with stout heart. Every new vessel that is launched is built better to combat that " Ol' Dabble Sea." Science in marine architecture reduces the dangers incident to shipping every year, but owners of vessels do not always take advantage of the advances made in design, construction, and operation. Vessels can be made practically fireproof, but not all are. Double hulls reduce the danger of sinking, as do athwartship and fore-and-aft compartments. But all vessels, passenger as well as freight, are not so equipped.

Trained and competent crews are obtainable, but it saves money for owners and ship's stockholders to discharge crews at the end of a voyage and rehire at the start of the next one. It takes more than one voyage for the bridge, engine room, and forecastle staffs to know their ship and what she will do and will not do under stress.

Two ships built from the same plans and materials, by the same construction crews, and in the same shipyard will differ even more than human sisters will. One will have an ardent helm and steer quickly; the other will have a slow helm and steer lazily. One will work to leeward despite all the helmsman can do, and thereby lose way, and the other will hold her course through the eye of a needle, as seamen say.

No vessel or any other human structure can be made wholly fireproof, but ships, as well as structures ashore, can be made strongly fire resisting and fire retarding, and ships can be equipped with proper fire-fighting apparatus and their crews trained in its instant and continuous use. Patent davits and practically unsinkable lifeboats and life rafts are obtainable in the market, but many shipowners carrying passengers will not go to the extra expense their purchase and use aboard ship involve.

The Vestris, Morro Castle, Havana, and Mohawk are the recent additions to disasters at sea in which many lives have been lost. There is no doubt in my mind that inefficient officers and crews and ineffective disaster-preventing and life-saving equipment were responsible in each case for the extent of these disasters.

Mr. Chairman, the greatest, most outstanding, and humane feature of this bill is the section that deals with the provision of my limitation-of-liability bill which I had inserted as a part of the ship-subsidy bill which we are now considering. It is designed to protect the life of every human being that travels on an American ship. Let me briefly narrate to you the first statutory enactment of limited-liability law which took place in Great Britain in the year 1734. The first statutory enactment of limited liability was only for acts of embezzlement on the part of the master and crew and other acts caused by them. It limited liability for nothing else, just acts of the master and crew. In those days the enemies of the shipowners were the captain and the crew who took out the vessel and embezzled the cargo. They operated against the interests of their owners. Therefore the owner of the ship had to be protected against the master and his crew.

In 1786 the limitation of liability was extended to robbery and to losses in which the master and crew had no part. In 1813 the limited liability of shipowners in England was still further extended to include other causes of losses, including cases of collision. The only funds against which those who had lost their life or cargo could sue was against the money that was raised from the salvage of the ship, and if the ship was sunk there was no money, plus the money that was received for the transportation of passengers and its cargo. This was known as the "Limited Liability Act of Great Britain."

In 1851 Hannibal Hamlin, the distinguished Senator from the State of Maine, Chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, introduced the limited liability law that was upon the statute books of Great Britain as part of the laws of the United States. His fundamental purpose was to put the American merchant marine on a parity with that of Great Britain.

In 1862 Great Britain, because of the protests of her citizens, who felt this limited liability law was written for the interests of the merchant marine and not for the traveling public, abolished the entire law. In its place it substituted a bill which makes it mandatory upon all British shipping organizations to pay £15, which is $75, per ton for each of its registered tonnage, for the protection of human life and cargo.

This law was approved in Great Britain in 1862. We never changed our law of 1851. Therefore we are in the tragic position of being the worst Nation of the world in taking care of its traveling public, our American citizens. Take the Morro Castle as an example. When that ship was sunk, 147 lives were lost and 100 people were permanently injured. The total amount of money for which these 247 people who lost their lives and were injured can sue is the sum of $20,000, while the Ward Line Co., the owners of the Morro Castle, have received the sum of $4,500,000 for its insurance. Behold the Mohawk, which was sunk. Forty-seven lives were lost and 50 to 70 permanently crippled and injured. All these people can sue since the ship has sunk is the money that the company received for the transportation of passengers and cargo, which amounts to $9,000, while the company received $2,500,000 for loss of its ship.

Is it fair? Is it just? Is it humane? Is it American? The limitation of liability which our distinguished committee helped me to put in this bill, and for which I want to express my personal thanks to all of them, particularly Mr. WELCH, of California; Mr. O'LEARY, of New York; Mr. WEARIN, of Iowa; Mr. BLAND, of Virginia; Mr. LEHLBACH, of New Jersey; Mr. CROW, of Indiana; Mr. HAMLIN, of Maine; Mr. WALGREN, of Washington; provides for paying a minimum of $60 per registered ton for the loss of human life alone.

In the case of the Morro Castle instead of only having $20,000 for the victims to sue for, they would at least have had between $600,000 and $700,000 if my provision for limitation of liability had been in operation. This section of the bill alone, Mr. Chairman, entitles every Member of the Congress to vote for this bill, because for the first time in the American history of our merchant marine it takes care of the life, the limb, the health of every American citizen traveling upon our sea-going ships. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in the past, property rights, the property of shipowners, were guarded and protected, but human life took its chance not only with the dangers originating with wind and wave but also with the dangers from incompetent crews and officers and ineffective equipment and inefficient operation of vessels in times of emergency and danger. The present section of limited liability in this subsidy bill makes our laws the most humane and progressive in all the world.

I have traveled on foreign vessels to Europe and I have used American ships on coastal voyages and ocean journeys.

I hate to admit it, but the foreign vessels engaged in trans-Atlantic transport have the advantage of American shipping in the long and continuous operation of lines. A flotilla of vessels does not make an ocean line. It takes decades of continuous operation to form an ocean line—or rather it takes Europeans that length of time.

If American lines were subsidized directly, as are European ocean lines, the story would be different. Give us ships competent to compete with the ships of Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy, and the means of training officers and crews to man them, and it will not take long for American passenger and cargo vessels to get their full share of ocean passenger and cargo traffic.

The golden age of American clipper ships lasted only 25 years, from 1833 to 1858, yet in that time the American flag, carried by these wonderful American designed, built, and manned ships, was flown in every important seaport of the world. When the discovery of gold in California and Australia provided demand for fast vessels, full rigged and entirely seaworthy ships were built in 90 days.

Given sustaining subsidies, as were the railroads in their early days and since, American built and manned shipping would again compete for its own foreign trade and the trade of the world. Given the protection of a satisfactory limited liability law for the protection of passenger and cargo at sea, as this present bill provides, and our vessels would be used to capacity.

There are many other provisions looking toward the safety of passengers, cargo, insurance, security for insurance and other features, all designed for the fair treatment of passengers, shippers and vessel owners and for the advancement of American shipping on the trade routes of the world in order that the Stars and Stripes shall again be a familiar sight in the seaports of the world, and as a beginning in the formulation of legislation that shall operate to put American shipping where it belongs—at the head and forefront of the shipping of all the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted etc.,

TITLE I—DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is necessary for the national defense and development of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine (a) sufficient to carry its domestic water-borne commerce and at least one-half of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign water-borne commerce at all times, (b) capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, (c) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States and so regulated by the Government as to secure to the shipper and receiver of products in the domestic and foreign water-borne commerce of the United States adequate service and equitable rates, and (d) composed of the best equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine. All the agencies of the United States Government shall keep always in view the purpose and object of the policies herein expressed as the primary end to be attained.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am sure that no word from me is necessary to insure the passage of this legislation with such amendments as may be appropriate. I rise to emphasize the importance which I attach to proper legislation at this time for the development of the American merchant marine.

The bill may not be perfect in every detail, but it gives every evidence of careful consideration by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which has had it in charge for some months, and such imperfections as it may embody can be corrected prior to enactment, or in the light of experience by a subsequent Congress. Personally I am prepared to accept the belief of the majority of the committee that this bill, with such amendments as may be appropriate, will prove a long step forward in preserving the American flag upon the seas and will provide ships to serve for national defense in time of emergency and for promotion of commerce in time of peace.

I believe that proper legislation to develop a strong American merchant marine is highly important with a view to the proper handling of our foreign commerce. The eloquent words of the distinguished chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], proved this fact conclusively to my mind this morning. A fleet of but 3,000,000 gross tons, carrying less than one-third of our exports and imports during the past year, or less than one-sixth of our foreign trade on a 1929 basis; a fleet less than one-quarter as large as that of Great Britain, about the same size as that of Japan, only slightly larger than that of France, of Germany, of Italy; a fleet which will be nearly 90 percent obsolete by 1940 with replacements in process amounting to less than 2 percent of the world's total—this, in a word, is the situation confronting us in America today.

I believe that proper legislation to develop a strong American merchant marine is also highly important in the interest of national defense. Any of us who had anything to do with the World War appreciate fully what a vital part the merchant marine played in that connection. Proper legislation in advance of the war would have served to eliminate the tremendous drive and expenditure involved in the construction of some 300 naval vessels between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918. I quote in this connection from a statement made by General Pershing at the National Conference on the Merchant Marine held in Washington some years ago:

> I feel that I can speak with some authority on this subject. At the head of our armies, 3,000 miles away, the responsibility rested upon me of upholding our country's honor and directing our part in the gigantic struggle which we had chosen to share with the Allies. Everything depended upon sea transportation. Our troops and most of our munitions, materials, and supplies had to come to us from home. Throughout that whole period there was scarcely a day when the danger of lack of sea transportation facilities was not present. It was a desperate race against time, in which we had to depend in large measure upon our Allies for the necessary shipping, in spite of the fact that they were constantly suffering the severest losses by enemy submarines.
> Two lessons stand out clearly from that experience. The first is the wisdom of the historic national policy of Great Britain in maintaining a strong merchant marine. But for her merchant fleet and her ability to replace losses rapidly, the U-boat campaign might well have been successful. The other lesson is the unwisdom of America and our risk of defeat because we had practically no ships on the high seas when we entered the war.

Mr. Chairman, I also urge at this time the passage of proper legislation to develop a strong American merchant marine as an aid to relief and recovery through the construction of public works. The construction of a ship, of course, affords essential employment for all those working in our great shipyards and the members of their families, but it does far more than that. Every State of the Union contains industries producing materials and equipment utilized in the construction of a ship. From 80 to 85 percent of the total cost of construction is expended directly or indirectly for labor, one-half for labor within the shipyard, one-half for labor outside the shipyard. Every State of the Union, therefore, is in a position to benefit from ship construction.

For all these reasons, Mr. Chairman, the construction under proper regulation of an adequate merchant marine seems to me to be a vital matter. I trust that this legislation with such amendments that may be appropriate will be adopted by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: On page 2, line 3, after the symbol "(c)" and the word "owned", strike out in line 4 the words "and operate under the United States flag" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ultimately to be owned and operated privately."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to place back in this bill the same phraseology that existed in the 1920 Merchant Marine Act, reaffirmed in the act of 1928. It recognized the necessity, in the first place, of a merchant marine, and the desirability, if it were possible to accomplish it in a practical manner, of having that merchant marine under private ownership and private operation; but nevertheless to have a merchant marine.

Some persons are more interested in their personal end of the merchant marine than they are in the general question of having a merchant marine. The problem before us is whether we need a merchant marine. If it is possible to attain a merchant marine under private ownership and private operation, then we can have that written into the bill as in the 1920 and 1928 acts.

This amendment would change it to read "ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States."

I see no particular reason for changing that phraseology in this particular act, because at the present time we have a large number of ships owned by the United States Government, which necessarily still have to be operated by the United States Government in the various trade routes in many parts of the world. By so doing we would make no change whatever in the present existing legislation. The one point of this amendment is that if it is practical to have private ownership and operation, this amendment provides for and states that to be the policy. It reenacts the words of the 1920 and the 1928 acts, "that ultimately they are to be owned and operated privately."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN] has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The amendment which was offered was a necessary provision or certainly a desirable provision in the act of 1920 and the act of 1928. The same conditions do not exist now except in a very limited way. When the 1920 act was passed there were practically no vessels that were owned by private owners; or, to state it differently, there was a very large fleet in the possession of the Government that was constructed in time of war, for which provision was being made for private operation and ultimate private ownership. The objective then was private ownership. The same condition existed when the 1928 act was passed. We tried the 1920 act. We tried it with Government ownership. We tried it with Government ownership and private operation. Many of the injustices and abuses that are being complained of today arose during that period, and these abuses were incident to that sort of service. Today we have only a very limited number, I think about 288, or possibly 290, vessels in the laid-up fleet. These are being separated now into those that are serviceable and those that are not serviceable, with a view to disposing of some of them. To pass this amendment simply means a step toward Government ownership and an indication of Government ownership as a policy. I can see no necessity for this particular amendment at this time.

I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Of course, Mr. Chairman, there cannot be found here a Member of Congress who would not favor American fleets that would sail the Seven Seas with the commerce of America, to be exchanged for the products we do not produce of other countries, or whatever may be of benefit to the American people; but it is possible that there are a few Members of Congress in this day whose enthusiasm seems to run to the point of overleaping the horse on this question, men who forget that famous Shipping Board we had in this country. I am amazed that someone here, if they knew about it, did not ask, as I tried to ask the gentleman from New York, who refused to yield, what became of the money that the Shipping Board used. I now ask someone favoring this bill, although I am not prepared to say I am against it if it is properly amended, if he can explain away that old Shipping Board and tell us how much it cost the United States; how much the United States was robbed of, and what became of the ships that were built with the taxpayers' money, before you start to duplicate that same thing? That is all I have to say. I hope the gentleman from New York, who refused to answer that question, will be given time to tell us what became of the Shipping Board, and what was done with the money they are charged with stealing from the United States Government?

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I will answer the gentleman's question with reference to what became of that money. I refer the gentleman to page 40 of the preliminary report of Senator BLACK's committee, which has come out within the last few days.

I may say before I start reading this, that copies of the report of Senator BLACK's committee are available to the Members and can be secured by requesting a page to bring one.

On page 40 of the report I find this statement:

> True Government operation has had only one trial. Although certain marine profiteers and some portions of the press have repeatedly asserted that the Government has lost huge sums by direct Government operation and drawn therefrom the unsound conclusions that such losses are inevitable in true Government operation, the truth is that this Government has not, since 1920, with the exception of one fleet, engaged in any such operation. The exception is the fleet operated as the United States Lines. After spending $5,565,327.05 during a period of 4 years in the development and operation of this line in a manner similar to the development of lines privately operated, the Government, for the fiscal year 1927, showed a profit of $404,017.12 in the operation of this line. During that same year so-called "private operations" on other Government-owned lines operated for private profit, cost the American taxpayers $9,283,035.31. This was prior to the widespread decline in maritime business conditions. This line was sold to private interests in the year 1929 and has been privately operated since that time with the aid of huge grants of so-called "mail pay." The result of this single instance of true Government operation does not show the impracticability of such operation, but, on the other hand, demonstrates that true Government operation, under normal business conditions, has been and can be profitable.

Turning now to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, Congress should remember that the United States Government still owns 288 ships, and the time might come when it would be unusually advantageous to put them on the high seas. This amendment is intended to take care of that situation specifically and within the bill.

I would also recall the fact in connection therewith that this amendment does not alter the provisions of the previous Merchant Marine Act, as pointed out by the gentleman from Maine. Certainly there is no reason why we should shut the door to the proper consideration of any merchant-marine legislation for the development of any merchant-marine policy we might consider advisable, be it Government ownership and operation or Government ownership and private operation under charter hire as provided in the Moran bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. Under the pending bill the Government could use them any way it pleased.

Mr. WEARIN. I understand that under the bill the Government could dispose of the ships, operate them too, if it is so desired, therefore there should be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Referring to the 288 ships owned by the Government and referred to by the gentleman, is it not a fact that most of them are obsolete?

Mr. BLAND. Most of them are about 20 years old.

Mr. WEARIN. They are obsolete in one sense of the word.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. MORAN. Is it not true also that 28 of those ships are now sailing to five different continents from this country on trade routes owned and operated by the United States Government?

Mr. WEARIN. About all that we have at the present time on the high seas, according to statements from the floor today, is a substantial number of obsolete ships, in spite of the act of 1928 which was passed presumably to create a growing merchant marine, and under which the public has been fleeced of millions of dollars.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the crux of this question is whether in this bill we should affirmatively recognize Government ownership and Government operation of a merchant marine. I do not care what happened under the old Shipping Board to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred. He said operation under the Shipping Board immediately after the war. I do not care what happened since that time. Under the act of 1928, under any form of operating our ships, there was not the confusion, the extravagance, the waste, and the corruption that followed immediately after the war under Government ownership and Government operation. Be that as it may, this bill provides, in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief Executive, for private construction and private operation of ships in the American merchant marine with Government aid.

A declaration such as contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine is repugnant to the bill, is repugnant to the President's message, is repugnant to the report of the interdepartmental committee, and is repugnant to the expression of the Secretary of Commerce, in whose department the shipping under consideration is now lodged. It is repugnant to everything excepting the views of the gentleman from Maine and the views of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do close in 6 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, this particular amendment seems to me to be directed toward the real issue of this bill. If the Government is to finance American shipping to the extent of 88 percent of the cost of building the ships, the Government should also have the opportunity, if necessary, of operating the ships the building of which it finances.

This morning there came across my desk a particularly pungent article from the Nation, which magazine cannot be classed as anything but a somewhat semi-conservative publication, literally tearing the lid off this ship subsidy proposition. I wish to quote a little from this article because the article seems to direct itself so pertinently toward this particular issue. I read the following:

> Hiding behind the argument of national defense, the shipowners are preparing again to raid the Treasury for their enormous profit. This was a familiar spectacle under a Republican administration. It reached a climax of shamelessness in the Jones-White Act of 1928. Now it is being repeated, hardly more subtly, in the Bland-Copeland bill, on which early action is expected in Congress. Despite the traditional hostility of the Democratic Party to subsidies, despite the President's message to Congress, asking that subsidies, since they were to be continued, be paid openly and not through building loans and mail contracts, the shipping interests are demonstrating that they are stronger than parties.

The language of the bill pending before us shows that the gentleman who wrote this article certainly knew what he was talking about. Now we come to the point: Certain minority members of the committee desire to make this a real bill by including a provision which will enable the Government to keep its hand in the shipping business which it is financing as long as the provisions of the bill are operative, and we find that the committee and the gentlemen on the opposite side oppose us.

I want to quote something that we ought to bear in mind when we vote upon this particular bill:

> When it comes to socialization we prefer to socialize something other than losses which a Government-owned merchant marine might amount to. But if this is the only price for ending the plunder of the Treasury by shipping interests, we are ready to see it paid. It is an insult to American intelligence for the owners to argue that Government ownership is bolshevism, hence un-American. But we can understand their delight in an Americanism which lets the Treasury buy their ships, and the Post Office pay the entire cost of operating them, while they wave the flag and pocket the profits.

Whenever a group of big business racketeers of this country want to reach into the pockets of the people and the Treasury they have somebody go down and wave the flag. I think we, as members of the Democratic Party, ought to live up to some of our platform pledges and live up to some of the things our party has gone on record for in our national conventions time and again. We ought to defeat this bill, rewrite it, and come back here with the kind of a bill which the President asked for in his message.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman think, since we are going to put up at least three-quarters of the money for this Shipping Trust, that we ought to retain title to the ships until we are paid back?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As a matter of fact, the Al Capones, the Dillingers, and the Jesse James boys were Sunday-school boys compared to the beneficiaries under this bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In the next campaign there is going to be lots said about supporting and not supporting the President. The President has specifically stated he is opposed to these kind of subsidies. Now we have a committee controlled by the Democrats bringing in this kind of a bill. I believe that the bill ought to be defeated by the Democrats of this House.

In conclusion, before voting on the question of passage of this bill tomorrow, it might be well for Members of this House to read the other portions of the article in the Nation from which I just quoted. I am, therefore, asking that it be inserted herewith, together with an extract from the Democratic platform, which clearly and succinctly states the traditional opposition of our great party to the type of special-interest, "pork barrel" legislation which will only be defeated if the Democrats in this House live up to the pledges of their party and the desires of their President.

[From the Nation of June 26, 1935]

STOP THE SHIP-SUBSIDY PLUNDER

They (the shipping interests) themselves drafted the Bland-Copeland bill, and it was introduced a few days after the President's message. If nobody chanced to study it, it would pass the House Merchant Marine Committee unanimously and might slide through Congress without a record vote. Since it was sponsored by two Democrats, it easily could be mistaken for an administration bill. But the bill was studied—there are still some public-spirited Congressmen—and it was found to continue the plunder of the act of 1928 under a new and even more rapacious guise. Construction subsidies and loans were to remain, and even mail contracts could be made. According to Congressman Moran, the first to expose it, shipowners under the bill could borrow up to 88 percent of the value of ship, and then operate it with Government help the maximum of which was not clearly specified. The possibility of making new mail contracts has since been deleted, but the bill remains a fraud and merely perpetuates the scandal of subsidies in other forms.

Now, it should have fallen to Secretary Roper to defend the President and the country from this bill. If he were a loyal Secretary of Commerce instead of a special lobbyist, he would have done so. Instead, when asked point blank by the House committee for his judgment on the bill he replied that while it differed from the President's recommendations he did not object to it. The committee likewise asked Postmaster General Farley for his judgment, and he declined to give an opinion. Thus the President has no one in his Cabinet to lead a fight for him against the shipping interests, and MORAN, BREWSTER, and WEARIN in the House committee and BLACK in the Senate have been like snipers firing on a marching army. Even if the bill is reported to both Houses with minority reports there is no certainty of its being defeated.

It would not be enough to defeat it, since legislation to protect the public must be passed in its place. The shipping interests are in a happy position. If they fail to get the Bland-Copeland bill and no legislation is passed, the Shipping Board remains, it has a melon of $20,000,000 ready to cut, and the only action left to the Government to end the mail-subsidy scandal is for the President to cancel existing contracts. This he can do until October 31. But this will stir up a hornet's nest of litigation, and with the memory of the canceled air-mail contracts he will be loath to do it.

The only available substitute for the Bland-Copeland legislation is Government ownership, proposed by Senator BLACK and Congressman MORAN. Since the Government is putting up nearly all the cost for building and operating the merchant marine, they argue it might as well own it outright, and since objection is made to Government operation MORAN is willing to have private operation by license.

We prefer not to have any ship subsidy whatever, since we do not share the mystic faith in the benefits of a subsidized merchant marine. If foreign shippers carry our freight at reasonable rates we are leaving to them one avenue for paying their debts to this country. The only argument against relying on foreign ships is that in time of war we are left without enough vessels to safeguard our interests. The chief of these interests is the transport of men and supplies to fight abroad. It is still the official conception that national defense entails our being able to send 4,000,000 Americans to fight overseas. It is a defiance of public opinion to maintain this conception and to enrich shipowners to carry it out. If there is any proposition which would lose in a national referendum it is this idea that we must be prepared to repeat the calamity of 1917. The other argument is that in time of a war in which we do not participate we shall not be able to continue our neutral trade because of the shortage in shipping. No doubt shipping costs would be high. But this is a question of dollars and cents. Is it not cheaper to pay this cost for the duration of a foreign war than to pour out annually our tens of millions to enrich a handful of shipowners?

We are not so sanguine as to expect Congress, trained by years of propaganda by shipowners, to abandon subsidies altogether, so we must come back to the Roosevelt policy of paying out public money openly, and ending the sickening abuses of the past. Government ownership is at least an honest solution of the problem. If the Government is going to advance 88 percent of the cost of new ships, and pay the differential between American and foreign costs of operation, it might as well assume all the responsibility, own its own fleet, and get it operated as efficiently as possible. That will close off the era of corruption described in the report of the Black committee on mail and air contracts. It will put an end to the shipowners' lobby and to the firm of Ira S. Campbell (presumed to be the author of the Bland-Copeland bill), drawing a legal fee of $252,000 for representing one company of shipowners in Washington. Then the shipping men who honeycomb the Department of Commerce can be weeded out, and that Department made more capable of rendering disinterested public service.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL PLATFORMS ON THE SUBJECT OF A MERCHANT MARINE

We oppose as illogical and unsound all efforts to overcome by subsidies the handicaps to American shipping and commerce imposed by Republican policies. * * *

We declare that the Government should own and operate such merchant ships as will insure the accomplishment of these purposes and to continue such operation so long as it may be necessary without obstructing the development and growth of a privately owned American-flag shipping.

We reaffirm our support of an efficient, dependable American merchant marine for the carriage of the greater portion of our commerce and for the national defense. * * *

We are unalterably opposed to a monopoly in American shipping and are opposed to the operation of any of our services in a manner that would retard the development of any ports or sections of our country.

We oppose such sacrifices and favoritism as exhibited in the past in the matter of alleged sales and insist that the primary purpose of legislation upon this subject be the establishment and maintenance of an adequate American merchant marine.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I was quite astonished when my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, made the statement that he wanted to see the merchant marine of America travel the seven seas, carrying the products of America to all ports of the world and bringing back the products of those countries to our ports. That is the rankest kind of heresy for a Republican. I invite the gentleman to come over and join the Democratic Party. The proper theory should be that the American merchant marine shall sail the seven seas, carrying goods to every port of the world and come back empty.

Mr. FOCHT. I may have committed an error, but I would not be so stolid as to advocate that the ships of the American merchant marine go to a port loaded and come back light.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 22, noes 48.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—UNITED STATES MARITIME AUTHORITY

SECTION 201. (a) A board is hereby created to be known as the "United States Maritime Authority" (in this act referred to as the "Authority"). The Authority shall be composed of five persons (in this section referred to as "members") to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President shall designate the member to act as chairman of the Authority, and the Authority may elect one of its members as vice chairman. The members of the Authority shall be appointed as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, and shall continue in office, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, for terms of 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 years, respectively, from the date upon which they qualify and take office; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 7 years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds. The members shall be appointed with regard to their special fitness for the efficient discharge of the duties imposed upon them by this act. One member shall be appointed from the States touching on the Atlantic Ocean, 1 from the State touching on the Pacific Ocean, 1 from the States touching on the Gulf of Mexico, 1 from the States touching on the Great Lakes, and 1 from the interior. Not more than three of the members shall be appointed from the same political party. A vacancy in the Authority shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Any member may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Vacancies in the Authority so long as there shall be three members in office shall not impair the powers of the Authority to execute its functions, and three of the members in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the Authority.

(b) No member on the date upon which he qualifies and takes office shall be in the employ of, or hold any official relation to, any carrier by water, or any person carrying on the business of shipbuilding, ship repairing, marine insurance, stevedoring, ship chandler, or forwarding, or furnishing towboat, wharfage, dock warehouse, management, operating, or other services of a like character in connection with any carrier by water, or own any stock or bonds of any such carrier or person, or be pecuniarily interested directly or indirectly therein. No member while in office shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment, or be in the employ of, or hold any official relation to, or own any stock or bonds of, or be pecuniarily interested, directly or indirectly, in any such carrier or person. No member shall take any part in the consideration or decision of any claim or controversy in which he, or any person in his immediate family, has a pecuniary interest.

(c) The Authority shall, through its secretary, keep a true record of all its meetings and the votes taken therein. The Authority may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business. Attorneys employed by the Authority may appear for or represent it in any case in court or other tribunal. The Authority shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) Each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $12,000 per annum. The Authority is authorized to appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary at a rate not in excess of $7,500 per annum, and employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees as it may find necessary for the proper performance of its functions and as may be appropriated for by the Congress. With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each member, the attorneys, naval architects, and special experts and examiners, all employees of the Authority shall be appointed from qualified employees of the United States Shipping Board Bureau or United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, or, in case no qualified employee of such Bureau or Corporation is available, from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service laws.

(e) The Authority may make such expenditures as are necessary in the performance of its functions. Each member, any employee of the Authority, and any person detailed to it from any other agency of the Government shall receive necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law, while away from his official station upon official business of the Authority. Expenditures by the Authority shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the Authority, or a designated employee of the Authority.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 201 (a) to read as follows:

"A Board is hereby created to be known as the 'United States Maritime Authority', and hereinafter referred to as the 'Authority.' The Authority shall be composed of three persons, hereinafter referred to as 'members', to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the President shall designate the member to act as chairman of the Authority, and the Authority may elect one of its members as vice chairman. The members of the Authority shall be appointed as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, and shall continue in office for terms of 2, 4, and 6 years, respectively, from the date of their appointment, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 6 years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds. The members shall be appointed with regard to their special fitness for the efficient discharge of the duties imposed upon them by this act. Not more than two of the members shall be appointed from the same political party. A vacancy in the Authority shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. No member shall take any part in the consideration or decision of any claim of particular controversy in which he has or has had a pecuniary interest."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to reduce the authority from the total number of five members to three. There is a very specific reason for offering this amendment and for adjusting the terms to conform with this situation.

If we have a 5-man regional board, as is provided for in this bill, it permits entrance into the deliberations of this board of some very unfortunate situations. For example, each man has a tendency to represent his own regional district, while this Authority should by virtue of its importance to the merchant marine industry as a whole, represent the national Government and the national viewpoint. For this reason we should by all means make this Authority a board consisting of three men and eliminate the regional feature.

At the time we do so we will eliminate the disadvantage of log rolling that naturally appears under such circumstances. If we can achieve that end and make the Authority a group of men who are interested in the welfare and the progress of merchant-marine legislation in America from the standpoint of the benefit that is going to accrue to the United States Government as a whole, it will be a far more beneficial set-up and secure far better results. That is the substance of the amendment I have offered, and I am confident that if accepted it will materially improve the administration of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this section was carefully considered by the committee. I will admit that originally the ideas that have been advanced by my good friend, the gentleman from Iowa, appealed to me. However, upon reflection, I felt that the provision for the Maritime Authority should be as we have provided in the bill.

First, there might be a tendency to a concentration of appointments in a particular section of the country who would not have regard for the outlying ports, and who would not be informed as to the commercial and transportation problems that obtain in the South, in the West, or in other sections of the country. The feeling prevailed that in order that this board may have general information as to the country as a whole and the desirability of developing lines from the various ports of the country and developing those ports themselves, it would be much better to have the five-man board, regionally appointed as we have provided in this act, than to have the three-man board.

In addition we are placing upon this Authority more responsibility than ever rested upon the Shipping Board. We are placing in them the power to control and prevent the abuses that have existed in the past. This Authority has the important duty of working out this problem and correcting the chaos in which we find ourselves. With all of these things appealing to the committee, the committee felt it would be far more desirable to have a five-man board now, even if the number should be subsequently reduced, than to have a three-man board.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 5, line 4, after the word "of", strike out $12,000 and insert $10,000.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is the fact that in the last few days this House has provided for the salary of the members of a board of equal importance to the board set up in this bill, and that salary was fixed at $10,000. I am wondering whether the services of the members of the board set up under this bill are of any greater value to the Nation than the services of the members who are to sit upon the Labor Disputes Board, whose salary was fixed at $10,000. I have a further amendment providing that the salary of $7,500 a year provided for the secretary to each member of the board be reduced to $5,000 a year.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee a further question. He was asked on the floor of the House today whether or not anything in this bill applied to mail contracts on the Great Lakes and his answer was "no." I ask the further question, whether there is anything in this bill applicable to private ship building on the Great Lakes.

Mr. BLAND. I would say there is not.

Mr. DONDERO. There is not?

Mr. BLAND. That is my recollection.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so that I may ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Surely, the shipbuilders on the Great Lakes could build this type of vessel.

Mr. BLAND. I do not think they are excluded under the act in any way.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. It would be beneficial to the shipbuilders on the Great Lakes if they were able to participate.

Mr. BLAND. I do not think they are excluded anywhere in the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I certainly should not want the gentleman's statement to be construed to the contrary.

Mr. DONDERO. In other words, they could enter into competition with any other shipbuilders in the country.

Mr. BLAND. I would say so; yes.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Inasmuch as the gentleman is interested in bringing these salaries down from $12,000 to $10,000, and inasmuch as the Government is now employing in all of its work projects only those who are on relief and compelling people to go on relief in order to get work, I wonder if the gentleman has any information as to whether the members of this board are going to be taken from the relief rolls?

Mr. DONDERO. I will say to the gentleman that I have no information on that subject.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, this matter received very serious consideration in the committee. It is our desire to have a body that shall be composed of as able men as can be obtained in the country. Upon the shoulders of this body will largely rest the success of this policy. It is doubtful whether you can get men of the caliber needed to work out these policies for less than $12,000. Possibly you could get them, but these men will have far greater responsibilities than the members of the Labor Disputes Board. In the adjustment of the ocean mail contracts they will have to go through many contracts and study 34,000 pages of testimony. They will have the consideration of millions of dollars of claims both on the part of the contractors and on the part of the Government based on these contracts which will have to be worked out. They are also to work out the development of a shipping policy which we hope will bring about a time when subsidies may be abolished. I have no more desire than any other man to continue subsidies, and it is only the necessity of the occasion, as well as the appeal of the President himself that we must have subsidies that brings me to this conclusion.

I understand that the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission receive a salary of $12,000, and the functions of this body in working out these policies will be as great and as important as those of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It must also be remembered that they must give up all their other business connections.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am in hearty sympathy with what my colleague has said about the necessity of having men of a high order on this board, but I want to call the attention of my colleague to the fact that if this salary for the members of this board obtains, it will be the only independent establishment in the Government paying more than $10,000 a year.

Mr. BLAND. My information is that $12,000 is the salary of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; with the exception of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the members of the Tariff Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and a great many other very important commissions are on a $10,000 basis, and I very much hope the committee will feel like accepting this amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this simply to state that the difference of $2,000 that the individuals who comprise this board will receive in itself is not much, and I am not viewing this question at all from the standpoint of the men who are to receive the salary, but there is this to be considered.

This maritime authority is to be to the sea what the Interstate Commerce Commission is to the land, and this maritime authority will have at its inception problems infinitely harder to solve, more intricate, and upon which the result of the welfare of industry depends more than the welfare of the railroads and other means of transportation rest upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We should place them on a plane comparable to the Interstate Commerce Commission. If they are to be on the same basis, if they are to have the same recognition, they should be on a parity as to salary.

If you adopt this amendment you are handicapping the bill from the start.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. What is the salary of the present members of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Twelve thousand dollars.

Mr. COLDEN. Are not the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission greater and more complex, investigating matters that involve millions and millions of dollars, than will be the duties of this board?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think the duties of this board at the inception will be infinitely more complex and infinitely more important to the welfare of the country than that of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DONDERO) there were 35 ayes and 45 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 201 (b) by changing the first sentence thereof to read:

"No person shall be eligible for appointment as a member who has or has had within a period of 3 years prior to appointment, any financial interest in any carrier by water, or other person subject to this act or the shipping laws, or any subsidiary or affiliate thereof, or in any business or concern deriving a substantial portion of its revenue from such sources, or who has within 3 years prior to appointment, been employed by any such firm, person, company, or corporation."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this is a very important amendment, and one that has significance in the operation of the authority. Under the present bill as proposed, this authority can be composed of members who have only yesterday maintained connection with any steamship company or any operator who may be benefited under this particular type of subsidy legislation. That man could become a member of the authority tomorrow, if he desired to do so, and there should be no provision in this bill which would permit him such an immediate transfer of interest from one field to another. Such a condition is not conducive to impartial administration when such a man is going to sit as a judge, so to speak, of the very concern with which he may have been connected and to which he will be in position to extend favors. It is to the interest of the public that they be safeguarded against such a contingency by the adoption of the pending amendment.

I would remind you, Mr. Chairman, that Senator BLACK's investigating committee, which so recently reported, recommended this procedure, and has recommended also that there be a limitation with reference to the time that must elapse between the period when a man must sever his connection with a shipping company and when he becomes associated with the authority. This report says, and I read from the report of the investigation of air mail:

No person should be eligible to appointment to any executive or supervisory position in the agency administering the subsidy, who has, or who has had, within the period of 3 years prior to the appointment any financial interest in any shipping company, shipbuilding company, etc., its subsidiaries or affiliates.

I recognize only too well that some representatives of shipping interests such as Ira Campbell—I do not know whether he is in the galleries or not, but if he is not his representatives may be—would probably oppose this kind of a provision, or any other representative of a subsidized shipping interest that came before our committee and testified that this bill is the type of legislation desired by shipowners. I would remind you also in connection with this fact that we should safeguard the public at least to the extent of 3 years, when we have, in connection with the Railroad Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, for example, at least a gentleman's agreement that no representative of railroads can be appointed to that board. The argument will be advanced, probably, that we must select men who are highly trained in the field of shipping in order that they may judge the marine question intelligently.

We have a remarkably efficient Railroad Commission, and the members have never been railroaders, nor have they held large blocks of stock in the Burlington or the Union Pacific or the Baltimore & Ohio and transferred those interests today to become a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission tomorrow; but this bill would permit shipping representatives to do that very thing. I insist that in order to safeguard against it the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. McFARLANE. In other words, the gentleman's amendment is an endeavor to encourage them to be honest, and to permit the selection of officials who might not be too closely connected with the interest they are supposed to serve.

Mr. WEARIN. Yes. I want to remove them as far as possible from the interests they are associated with as business men, and I think it is of the utmost importance that the Congress place a limitation of 3 years within which a man must have had no connection with a shipping interest; otherwise he should not be eligible to membership on the authority.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to consume too much time, but I wish to discuss certain phases of this amendment and also certain references made in an article appearing in the Nation, and particularly the supposed influence of Mr. Ira Campbell. There is one practice that I pursued during the hearings on this bill. When shipping companies came around and wanted to talk to me, I told them they must present their views in open session before an open committee, that they could not talk privately with me on these matters. Ira Campbell has not talked privately with me, and I believe the gentleman will admit that the imputation which has appeared at times in certain newspapers is unjust. I have tried to protect the committee and myself against every such accusation or imputation.

So far as the amendment is concerned, when Mr. Chief Justice Hughes was placed on the supreme bench he doubtless came from the practice of his profession. A 3-year limitation was not imposed in his case. I have no desire to see a shipping man or anybody else on the board, but I am willing to trust the President of the United States to make wise selections. I am willing to trust the Senate of the United States, with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] present. He has rendered a distinct service to the Nation. I am willing to trust these Senators to consider most carefully the selections made and to find out whether the men are eligible for the position to which they have been nominated. I would not want to cut off a man who may occupy a high position in admiralty law as an admiralty lawyer, a man of such high standing that the finger of scorn and suspicion could never be pointed at him.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The introducer of the amendment spoke of the excellent appointments made by the President of the United States with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which act has no such limitation as he seeks to impose in this bill. Is there any reason why this President should be discriminated against, when the other Presidents have made good appointments, as the gentleman himself says?

Mr. BLAND. No; I desire not to tie his hands. I want to give him every opportunity to go into the Nation and select the best men he can for these positions.

Mr. WEARIN. Has our experience with the selection of public officials to administer the 1928 act indicated that we could place our faith in men who have been connected with the shipping interests?

Mr. BLAND. Franklin D. Roosevelt did not make the appointments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were ayes 22 and noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONDERO: Page 5, line 6, after the word "of", strike out "$7,500" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, we have just listened to the argument advanced that the members of the board set up under this bill would be members of a very important board to function under the United States Government, and therefore they must be of such high standing that it is necessary to pay them salaries of $12,000 a year, in order that the President of the United States might have a field from which to select men capable of discharging the duties of those positions, who would not serve for less than that amount of money. If that is so, then the secretaries to those men, whoever they may be, who serve on that board will do nothing more nor less than clerical work similar to the work done in the office of every Member of this House; as Members of Congress, we are allowed $5,000 annually with which to employ two secretaries. Their work is also important to the people. I submit to the Members of this House that $5,000 per annum for each secretary to the members of the board is sufficient, adequate, and reasonable. If you agree with me, I ask you to support this amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call attention to the fact that this is a general secretary. He has very important responsibilities and the bill provides "not in excess of this amount."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DONDERO) there were—ayes 28, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 201 (b) by adding thereto the following sentence: "The receipt of any gratuity or valuable thing from any person, directly or indirectly, subject to this act or the shipping laws shall constitute cause for immediate dismissal of any member or employee of the Authority, and the receipt of employment, any gratuity or valuable thing from any such person by any immediate relative of a member or an employee of the Authority shall also constitute cause for dismissal of such member or employee, if in the opinion of the Authority such action is required in the public interest."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I stated that I accepted the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 201 (d) by adding after the word "Congress", on line 10, the following: "Provided, That no employee other than the members of the Authority shall receive a salary in excess of $10,000 per annum."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why the authority, when its members are to receive, according to the action of the House, $12,000 per year and its secretary $7,500, should be permitted to pay salaries in excess of $10,000 per annum for those other or additional employees who may be associated with it. It seems to me that is a reasonable limitation upon the salaries of subordinates who are functioning under that authority. If there is any necessity for expert assistance as intended, the authority has the right to draw upon other departments of the Government for such temporary services.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

It is not within the realm of common sense that any ordinary employee would receive more than $10,000, but there are occasions when experts must be employed, and to put this limitation in this section is simply to that extent to hamstring and hamper and handcuff the authority. There are occasions when the Department of Justice pays special compensation to those assisting in its work, far in excess of what the Attorney General of the United States receives. There have been times when the Shipping Board for technical service has been paid more than the members have received. There are occasions when technical and special knowledge, aptitude, and experience must be had and must be paid for. There is no reason for putting in this limitation any more than there was reason for putting in the amendment that employees of the authority should not accept bribes. It is a gratuitous insult, but with respect to this amendment, it may be harmful. The other amendment merely besmirches those who accept employment under the maritime authority. This amendment is serious in that it hampers the authority.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As a general proposition, I do not think there would be the slightest danger of this happening, but there are special occasions when the limitation may prove a hardship, and certainly the Committee on Appropriations will be able to watch it from year to year as they did in the case of the Shipping Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 203. The Authority shall make studies of and make a report to Congress as soon as practicable on—

(a) The scrapping or removal from service of old or obsolete merchant tonnage owned by the United States or in use in the merchant marine;

(b) Tramp shipping service and the advisability of citizens of the United States participating in such service with vessels under United States registry;

(c) The construction by or with the aid of the United States of superliners comparable with those of other nations, especially with a view to their use in time of war or national emergency;

(d) The relative cost of construction or reconditioning of comparable ocean vessels in shipyards in the various coastal districts of the United States, together with recommendations as to how such shipyards may compete for work on an equalized basis.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: Page 8, line 2, after the word "basis", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and a new subsection, as follows:

"(e) Revision of the navigation laws necessary to insure the maintenance of standards and equipment which will provide the highest possible degree of safety for passengers and crews on vessels."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Section 203 directs the authority to make studies of and make a report to Congress as soon as practicable on the scrapping or removal from service of old or obsolete merchant tonnage, tramp shipping service, the construction of superliners, the relative cost of construction or reconditioning of comparable ocean vessels in shipyards in the various coastal districts of the United States. These all have to do with research, and the reports all have to do with the building up of a merchant marine by means of Government aid in the construction and operation of vessels.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan authorizes a study and report on the revision of the navigation laws necessary to insure the maintenance of standard and equipment which will provide the highest possible degree of safety for passengers and crews on vessels.

The purpose of the amendment, of course, is very laudable, but it has nothing whatever to do with the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, the declaration of policy on the second page of the bill deals strictly with things which are necessary to carry out the policy contained in the bill. If the gentleman thoroughly understood my amendment he would realize that it comes within the declaration of policy. The policy declared is that the United States shall have a merchant marine sufficient to carry its domestic water-borne commerce and at least one-half of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign water-borne commerce at all times. More especially I call attention to the declaration as found on page 2, line 12:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine. All the agencies of the United States Government shall keep always in view the purpose and object of the policies herein expressed as the primary end to be obtained.

I offered this amendment, Mr. Chairman, with the hope that the committee would accept it more or less as a perfecting amendment. I believe that in drafting the bill the committee unintentionally omitted this matter, which is all important in carrying out the actual provisions of the bill. For this reason I submit the amendment is strictly germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The section of the bill to which the amendment is offered relates to the granting of authority to make studies concerning the scrapping or removal from service of tonnage that is not necessary, that is out of date, or out of repair. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan relates solely to the navigation laws and the safety of passengers, and is not, therefore, germane to the section of the bill to which it is offered.

The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, my real purpose in rising is to secure a little information from the chairman or some member of the committee. We listened to a very learned discourse by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] on the origin of commerce. In his address he discussed a law that we had in the early days of this Republic under which he said the commerce of the world was carried largely under our flag. I should like to see a return to that condition. During the time the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] was talking I was hoping I might have the opportunity of asking him to tell us the fundamental bases of that law which must have been enacted about the beginning of the last century, but I did not have the opportunity. I think the matter is important and I should like for him to tell us, for I am sure he knows, in just what respect that law differs from this law. In other words, did the Government of the United States, or the Congress of the United States, along about the year 1800, subsidize owners of ships to the extent of giving them 88 percent of the cost of building the ships?

Mr. BLAND. May I answer the gentleman?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. The Government did not at that time. One of the earliest laws passed by Congress affecting American ships I think was in 1789. One of the first acts passed by the First Congress imposed a lower duty on goods coming into this country on American ships, an additional duty was placed on such goods coming in foreign bottoms. That law continued for a long time with varying changes, and was later repealed. Then we reached the period of the construction of wooden ships. We had the naval stores, we had the forests, we had the material; we could build ships much cheaper than they could be built abroad. That was the period of the clipper ship, the time when we carried an immense amount of commerce. Then we come to the days the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] spoke of when the subsidy was given. I think it was at about that time we began to change from the clipper ship to steam and to the use of the steel or iron ship, and as England could underbid us on that, she commenced to beat us. Then the War between the States came on and we lost a lot of our commerce.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 302. Section 5, as amended, of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, is amended—

(a) by striking out "October 31, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1936", and

(b) by adding at the end of such section, as amended, the following: "If the President finds in the exercise of the powers vested in him by this section, in respect of any contract in force under title IV of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 46, secs. 891e to 891r, inclusive), that the substitution, in whole or in part, for such contract, of a direct subsidy contract or contracts under title V of the Merchant Marine Act, 1935, is desirable in the public interest and will aid in carrying out the purposes and policy of such act, he may, in his discretion, direct the United States Maritime Authority to negotiate with the holder of such contract for a cancelation or modification thereof, and the substitution in whole or in part thereof of a direct subsidy contract or contracts. The Authority shall not make any agreement for, or consummate, any such cancelation or modification, and substitution, without the approval of the President after submission to him of the terms and conditions of the proposed cancelation or modification, and substitution."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend title III by striking therefrom sections 301, 302, and 303.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 303 has not been read as yet.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that section 301 has been passed, section 302 has been read. Section 301 having been passed, it is not now open for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained to section 301.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to offer the portion of the amendment which refers to 302.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend title III by striking out section 302 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 302. The holder of any such canceled contract may, within 1 year from the date of the passage of this act, be entitled to sue the United States to recover just compensation in the manner provided by paragraph 20 of section 41 and section 215 of title 28 of the United States Code. The claimant and the United States shall have the right in said court to set up and have determined and adjudged by said court all legal and equitable claims, defenses, offsets, credits, and recoupments, to which either may show it is entitled, to the end that all conflicting claims, assertions, and rights may be fully, fairly, and completely settled and adjudged by said court. The jurisdiction of said court is hereby limited to an award of just compensation, which compensation shall not include any allowance for prospective or speculative future profits that might have been realized by the claimant if permitted to further perform his contract.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the chairman of the committee lodged a point of order against the amendment to the previous section of the bill. This section refers to the matter of cancelation of the existing mail contracts and is of the utmost importance if this Congress is interested in what the President wants. He has asked that we make specific provision for the cancelation of those contracts. Certainly if he had wanted the responsibility shifted on his own shoulders and to continue as is, he would have so stated. He would not have specifically requested the Congress to provide for the cancelation of these contracts under title IV of the 1928 act.

There is no question, according to the findings of Postmaster General Farley in connection with the investigation of that Department, but what the bids and the contracts entered into by those contractors were the result of collusive bidding. That is a matter of record, taken under oath before the Post Office Department. For this reason there should be no hesitation on the part of the Congress to terminate these illicit mail contracts rather than being afraid to assume the responsibility and passing the buck to the Chief Executive who is going to have to shoulder the burden.

Mr. Chairman, it is time the Congress canceled these contracts and took a step forward to protect the public interest by regulating the amount of just compensation for these matters. I would remind you in connection with that same matter that we have taken such action prior to this time in the House with reference to the processing taxes under the terms of a bill introduced by the Committee on Agriculture and passed by the House, in which we prevented processors from recovering this tax. This is the same kind of protection.

If the Members of the House are interested in preventing the mail contractors, who have entered into these contracts by means of collusive bidding, from recovering an excessive amount of damages on the basis of the unmatured portions of their contracts through an action in court, that, even though it may not be successful, will be costly to the United States Government and will string out the procedure of cancelation of these contracts for a long time, again shifting the responsibility to the shoulders of the President, they should vote for this amendment, which will protect the interests of the public. A question was raised in the committee as to the constitutionality of limiting just compensation for cancelation of the contracts under the 1928 act, in support of which I offer the following brief:

CANCELATION OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

The liability to make compensation for private property taken for public uses is a constitutional limitation of the right of eminent domain. Only to the extent of the limitation can the citizens obtain any redress (Winona, etc., R. R. Co. v. Waldron (11 Minn. 515, 539)).

The fifth amendment "has always been understood as referring only to a direct appropriation and not the consequential injuries resulting from the exercise of lawful power" (Knox v. Lee (79 U. S. 457)).

When property rights are not taken for public use, the injury, no matter how grievous, is merely incidental to the exercise of lawful governmental action. The injured party has no right of action by virtue of the fifth amendment and has no remedy at all unless same is provided by statute (Bedford v. United States (192 U. S. 217–224)).

In the Legal Tender cases (79 U. S. 457) the Supreme Court said:

"There is a well-recognized distinction between the expectation of the parties to a contract and the duties imposed by it. * * * Were it not so, the expectation of results would be always equivalent to a binding engagement that they should follow. * * * Nor can it be truly asserted that Congress may not, by its action, indirectly impair the obligations of contracts, if by the expression be meant rendering contracts fruitless, or partially fruitless. Directly, it may pass a bankrupt act, embracing past as well as future transactions. This is obliterating contracts entirely."

In Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States (148 U. S. 312) the question presented was whether just compensation for the taking of the franchise to exact tolls, which franchise had previously been granted to the company by a State, must be paid by the United States when, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the lock and dam erected by the company was appropriated and taken over by the United States.

The Supreme Court said (p. 327):

"By this legislation, Congress seems to have assumed the right to determine what shall be the measure of compensation. But this is a judicial and not a legislative question. The legislature may determine what private property is needed for public purposes—that is a question of a political and legislative character; but when the taking has been ordered, then the question of compensation is judicial. It does not rest with the public, taking the property, through Congress or the legislature, its representative, to say what compensation shall be paid or even what shall be the rule of compensation. The Constitution has declared that just compensation shall be paid, and the ascertainment of that is a judicial inquiry."

The Court also said (p. 328):

"What amount of compensation for each separate use of any particular property may be charged is sometimes fixed by the statute which gives authority for the creation of the property; sometimes determined by what it is reasonably worth; and sometimes, if it is purely private property devoted only to private use, the matter rests arbitrarily with the will of the owner. In this case, it being property devoted to a public use, the amount of compensation was subject to the determination of the State of Pennsylvania, the State which authorized the creation of the property. The prices which may be exacted under this legislative grant of authority are the tolls, and these tolls, in the nature of the case, must enter into and largely determine the matter of value. * * * So, before this property can be taken away from its owner, the whole value must be paid; and that value depends largely upon the productiveness of the property, the franchise to take tolls."

The Court further said (p. 337):

"And here it may be noticed that, after taking this property, the Government will have the right to exact the same tolls the navigation has been receiving. It would seem strange that if by asserting its right to take the property, the Government could strip it largely of its value, destroying all that value which comes from the receipt of tolls, and, having taken the property at this reduced valuation, immediately possess and enjoy all the profits from the collection of the same tolls. * * * Much reliance is placed upon the case of Bridge Co. v. United States (105 U. S. 470). But that was a case not of the taking, but of the destruction of property."

After referring to the facts in the Bridge case, showing that Congress had merely destroyed the right of the bridge company to maintain the bridge, but there was no taking of private property for public uses, the Court pointed out in the Monongahela case there was no attempt to destroy property and there was simply a case of taking by the Government for public uses of the private property of the Navigation Co. The Court said (p. 341):

"Such an appropriation cannot be had without just compensation, and that, as we have seen, demands payment of the value of the property as it stands at the time of taking."

After the World War many contracts between the Government and private parties were canceled pursuant to authority of various acts of Congress authorizing such cancelation by the Executive. In Omnia Commercial Co. v. United States (261 U. S. 502) it was shown that extremely valuable contract rights vested in the Omnia Co. prior to the entry of the United States into the war had been destroyed by the Government's requisition of the entire output of the United States Steel Corporation. The opinion of the Supreme Court in that case illustrates the difference between "the taking" of property as protected by the fifth amendment and the "destruction" of property (contract) rights by governmental action. The Supreme Court said (p. 513):

"There is nothing in Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States (148 U. S. 312) or in the other cases cited by the appellant which in any way conflicts with what we have said."

In the case of Russell Motor Car Co. v. United States and the case of Freygang v. United States, decided by the Supreme Court the same day the Omnia Commercial case was decided (261 U. S. 514), the question presented was whether the just compensation to be paid by the United States when it canceled its own contracts include the prospective profits the contractor might have earned if permitted to fully perform the contract. The claimant's brief filed in the Supreme Court urged that their right to claim the loss of profits was established by the Monongahela decision. In denying this contention the Court said (p. 523):

"This contention confuses the measure of damages for breach of contract with the rule of just compensation for the lawful taking of property by the power of eminent domain. In fixing just compensation the Court must consider the value of the contract at the time of its cancelation, not what it would have produced by way of profit for the Car Co. if it had been fully performed."

In the later case of Barrett Co. v. United States (273 U. S. 227), the Supreme Court said:

"Just compensation for canceling a contract requires the contractor shall be made whole and recover the expenditures necessary to perform the contract. * * * The contract in fixing the elements of the price per gallon of Xylol speaks of adding 6.6 cents to cover overhead, profit, and uses of patents; but we are not concerned with profits in this case (citing Russell Motor Car Co. v. United States, 261 U. S. 516)."

In Ingram Day Lumber Co. v. McLouth (275 U. S. 471), in discussing the effect of the statutes authorizing the Government to cancel its own contracts, the Supreme Court said (p. 473):

"The statute authorizes the cancelation of the Government's own contracts * * * and just compensation for such cancelation does not include anticipated profits, ordinarily recoverable in an action of assumsit" (citing Duesenberg Motor Corp. v. United States (260 U. S. 115); Russell Motor Car Co. v. United States (261 U. S. 514)); "it authorizes also the exappropriation or requisition of private contracts, and in computing the just compensation for these the value of the anticipated performance of the contract may be considered" (citing Brooks Scanlon Corp. v. United States (265 U. S. 106, 125)).

The United States cannot be sued in any court without express authority of Congress, and when it consents to be sued the act is jurisdictional and must be strictly followed (Louisiana v. McAdoo (234 U. S. 627); United States v. Pfitsch (256 U. S. 547)).

The right to sue the United States is given by section 145, Judicial Code, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to entertain suits, and by section 24, paragraph 20, Judicial Code (Tucker Act), authorizing suits against the Unted States in the district courts.

In United States v. Babcock (250 U. S. 328–331), the Supreme Court said:

"These general rules are well settled: That the United States when it creates rights in individuals against itself is under no obligation to provide a remedy through the courts; that when a statute creates a right and provides a special remedy, that remedy is exclusive."

The principle applicable to all Government cancelation cases was well stated by the Court of Claims in Meyer Scale & Hardware Co. v. United States (57 C. C. 26), where it was said:

"If it should be said that the contract gave the contractor the right to perform the entire contract with resultant profit, the answer would be that the contract, necessarily with the consent of the contractor, gave the Government the right to terminate it at any desired stage during its performance, as a result of which any further rights thereunder, with resultant advantage to the contractor by way of profits, ceased. At that point, as by a distinct line of demarcation, the future is separated from the past and adjustment of rights on the basis of just compensation to the contractor has its proper field of operation behind and not beyond that line."

From the foregoing decisions the following principles are clear:

First. When the United States takes and uses private property, whether such property is tangible or is merely a contract right, the fifth amendment requires that just compensation be paid to the individual whose property has been taken and used. However, the injured party will have no redress against the United States in the courts except in the manner in which Congress has permitted suits to be brought against the United States.

Second. When the Government cancels its own contract, if such cancelation is a wrongful breach, the courts would compel the United States to respond in damages in the same way a private individual would have to respond for wrongful breach of his contract. (See Purcell Envelope Co. case, 249 U. S. 313.)

Third. When the United States, by authority of an act of Congress, cancels its own contracts and provides that just compensation may be recovered therefor, the claimant may not recover for the loss of profits he might have earned if permitted to further perform the contract, but is limited to recovery for what has been done and for the expenditures he has made in preparing to perform the contract.

Fourth. Since Congress may permit suit against the United States or withhold such permission at its pleasure, it would not be unconstitutional for the Congress to deny jurisdiction to the Court of Claims and to the district courts of the United States to award more than just compensation for cancelation of the mail contracts.

Fifth. An act of Congress limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and of the district courts to just compensation in such cases and declaring that just compensation shall not include loss of prospective profits on mail contracts is merely a restating by statute what the Supreme Court of the United States has already declared to be the law, namely, that when contract rights are destroyed by governmental action, and recovery therefor is permitted by Congress, such recovery is limited to just compensation, and such just compensation does not include loss of profits.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know why I should occupy the anomalous position of defending the President's position and interpreting it on the floor of the House. May I say, however, that he wants this kind of legislation and I believe it is for the best interest of the country. For that reason I am trying, with the majority of the committee, including the Chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, to follow out what I conceive is the President's wish and the best interest of the merchant marine, which means the material interest of our country.

The President requested the Congress to place in his hands the control of the mail contracts. In the Independent Offices Appropriation bill a section was placed which gave to the President the right to deal with these contracts as he sees fit; that is, cancel, modify, or do what he thought was in the best interests of the country in connection with those contracts. The President asked a month ago that this right be exended from June, when it expired, to October 31. The Congress passed a joint resolution extending the right to the President to deal with these contracts. The President wanted the act extended to October 31 in anticipation of the passage of this bill in order that, with the aids granted in this bill, he might do justice with respect to the existing mail contracts. He does not want the Congress to take this right from him and do anything at all with those mail contracts. I stand here in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, and in support of the President of the United States and his expressed wish in this matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I object to a further speech by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 303. (a) The Authority is hereby authorized, when directed by the President under section 5, as amended, of the Independent Office Appropriation Act, 1934, to negotiate with the holder of any contract in force under title IV of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, for the cancelation or modification of such contract, and the substitution therefor, in whole or in part, of a direct subsidy contract or contracts under title V of this act, and if the terms and conditions of such cancelation or modification and substitution are approved by the President, to consummate the same.

(b) If it is impossible to negotiate the cancelation or modification, and substitution provided for in subsection (a) of this section, the Authority shall report such fact to the President, together with such recommendations in respect thereof as it deems advisable. If no such cancelation or modification, and substitution is effected by the Authority under subsection (a) of this section, or if no cancelation or modification is effected by the President under section 5, as amended, of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, no application from the contractor for any benefits under title V of this act shall be considered by the Authority unless such application shall have been approved by the President. In case such application is approved by the President, however, or in case a cancelation or modification is effected by the President under section 5, as amended, of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, and the contractor receives just compensation therefor, and applies for any benefits under title V of this act, the Authority shall consider the extent to which differences between domestic and foreign construction, reconditioning, or operating costs are reflected in payments under such contract, or in such just compensation received in respect of the modification or cancelation thereof.

Mr. WEARIN (interrupting the reading of the section). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEARIN. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether or not amendments to these sections should be offered as the subsections are read or should be offered at the conclusion of the reading of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. When the entire section has been read, amendments may be offered to any part of the section.

Mr. WEARIN. Then it is not in order to offer the amendment at this time which I have on the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the paragraph just read is not in order at this time.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I should like to make a statement. Lest there be some misunderstanding, I may state that I am going to move that the Committee rise, because the Speaker has stated that a gentleman has a report that he wants to get in this afternoon. For this reason I am going to move that the Committee rise and then, after the report is filed, I shall immediately move to go back into Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8555, had come to no resolution thereon.

PUBLIC UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY BILL

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the current legislative day I may have unanimous consent to file an additional report on the public utility holding company bill so that it may go to the Printer tonight.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to file an additional report upon what is known as the "public utility holding company bill." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1935

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8555.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8555, with Mr. MAY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Strike out section 303 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 303. Within 60 days from the date of the passage of this act, the present holder of any of such contracts may file an application with the Authority to receive the benefits of the provisions of this act. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Authority may consider and grant or deny such application if such mail contractor meets all the requirements of this act, including requirements of the Authority as to capitalization and the construction and placing in service of such new vessels which the Authority may find necessary to aid in carrying out the purposes of this act.

"If said application should be approved, in whole or in part, at or prior to the time of the making of a new contract, the Authority shall adjust all differences with such contractor, including any claims of the contractor against the United States or of the United States against such contractor, arising out of its foreign ocean-mail contract, and such mail contract shall be canceled by mutual consent of such contractor and the United States. In adjusting such differences and claims, the Authority shall not take into consideration any prospective or speculative future profits, but shall consider any and all payments theretofore made by the United States pursuant to such mail contract and the profits realized as a result thereof."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered contains a similar provision to the one offered to the preceding section with reference to the protection of the public from the standpoint of the matter of claims filed in the Court of Claims against the United States Government, and provides a method by which existing contractors are able to transfer their mail contracts and assume the obligations proposed under this bill, and in so doing they naturally waive their rights, or at least they should waive their rights, to recover against the United States Government on the portion of their contracts that have not yet matured. This argument I have advanced to the previous amendment offered to this same title and it is a provision that will protect the Public Treasury from attempted vast raids in the form of suits against the United States for the unmatured portions of the contracts under the 1928 act and the amendment certainly should be adopted for the protection of the public interests.

In concluding this argument on this section I want to quote what the President has to say about this. We have been hearing a good deal about what the President wants and what he does not want. I read his message this way, for the reason he sent it up here printed in the English language. In this message he said:

In setting up adequate provisions for subsidies for American shipping the Congress should provide for the termination of existing ocean mail contracts as rapidly as possible.

This is exactly what I have been trying to do in the amendments that have been offered to this bill, and it is exactly what the pending bill does not do because it permits them to be continued until the end of the existing contracts unless the President himself wants to effect the cancelation rather than the Congress, as he has requested in this message.

This is the reason these amendments have been offered and I trust they will be adopted in order to protect us from severe and serious suits brought against the United States Government as demonstrated prior to this time by some of the shipping interests that now have suits pending against us for similar claims.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

We are trying to accomplish much the same end, but in a different way. I read the message of the President and I find nothing in the language which the gentleman has read with reference to cancelation. The President said:

In setting up adequate provisions for subsidies for American shipping the Congress should provide for the termination of existing ocean mail contracts as rapidly as possible.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Not just now. There is not one single word about cancelation—cancelation power rests in the President, given him by section 5 of the act of 1933.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman understands that I read a sentence from the President's message.

Mr. BLAND. And I read the same sentence providing for the termination. We have provided for the termination here by letting the authority with the President's consent without adjustments and so terminate the ocean mail contracts.

If this bill passes, the President at any time down to June 30, 1936, may cancel the contracts.

The gentleman from Iowa says that provision should be made for these contractors coming in for contracts under this bill. We have a provision that these people may have an operating differential. They may apply as a matter of right when adjustments are made. We are not imposing any additional responsibility on the President. We are continuing the responsibility which Congress placed on him, and which he may desire to exercise. We are continuing the responsibility where Congress placed it for the protection of the American people. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 401 by striking out the following words, beginning on line 7, page 15: "If it deems it necessary to effectuate the purposes and policy of this act."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, the safeguards mentioned in this section contain weasel words and weasel phrases that are going to result in defeating the purposes of this act and the intent of Congress to establish an adequate merchant marine. Here is an excellent example on page 15 of the bill, where the authority is permitted to require the construction of new ships as we want under this title, referring to construction subsidy:

If it deems it necessary to effectuate the purposes and policies of this act.

But if it does not it can go on and pay the subsidies provided for in the bill without in any manner affecting the public interest to the extent of developing an adequate merchant marine, and if we want a merchant marine then let us so write the bill that there will be no question but that we will be assured of the development of said merchant marine through the agency of building ships. Surely the shipping interests that have been so active in behalf of this bill and who are going to benefit to an almost unlimited extent, ought to be required to deliver the goods, otherwise the taxpayers' money will again be wasted.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. It is vesting in the authority the necessary discretion with reference to this replacement policy, and they will determine on the contract just how far they may go in requiring additional vessels in the future at the time the contract is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 402. (a) In case any new vessel is constructed, pursuant to any contract under title V of this act or with the aid of a construction loan under section 11, as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 46, sec. 870), to replace any vessel in use in foreign or coastwise trade, which in the judgment of the Authority is old, slow, or otherwise inadequate or obsolete for the service in which engaged, the Authority is authorized in its discretion to buy such replaced vessel from the owner at a reasonable value (which in no case shall exceed the cost to the owner plus the expense of reconditioning, and of improvements to, such vessel, less a reasonable and proper depreciation, and a proper deduction for obsolescence, thereon), and apply the purchase price to that part of the cost of the construction of such new vessel to be borne by the owner.

(b) The Authority may, upon such terms and conditions as it may consider proper, authorize the exchange of any merchant vessel owned by the United States Government for a vessel documented under the laws of the United States and owned by a citizen of the United States. Any vessel acquired under this section shall be held in the care and custody of the Secretary of Commerce, and be subject to sale, charter, or operation under the provisions of existing law. The Secretary of Commerce may scrap or sell for scrapping any vessel in his custody on the date of the enactment of this act, or thereafter placed therein, if in his judgment it is of insufficient value for commercial or military operation to warrant its further preservation.

(c) No vessel acquired under this section shall be sold or chartered for use, or placed in a service, route, or line which in the judgment of the Authority is adequately served by vessels documented under the laws of the United States.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: "Strike out all of section 402, title IV, beginning on line 14, page 15, and ending on line 21, page 16."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, there are two very interesting points in section 402 that I desire to call to the attention of the Members of the House. The first point is that the United States Government will have the privilege of buying back obsolete vessels. A great deal has been said here this afternoon about subsidies granted by other nations. Let us take one of them in comparison with this very section. Does Great Britain, for example, which country has been mentioned here this afternoon as paying great subsidies to its merchant marine, buy the obsolete ships? Not at all. Instead, it requires the owner himself to scrap at his own account and not at the expense of the British Government. That is one difference which is important from the standpoint of the Treasury. There is another difference. The British require applicants for loans to scrap two tons of old obsolete tonnage for every ton on which they receive a new construction loan.

The second point is to be found at the top of page 16—and apply the purchase price to that part of the cost of the construction of such new vessel to be borne by the owner.

Again, we have the opportunity, as I pointed out this afternoon, to allow some old obsolete tubs to be handed in to the United States Government, on the payment of the new ship, and as illustrated this afternoon, that might even take care of practically all of the initial payments by the applicant for any ship, because on a million-dollar ship these contractors have spent only an initial expenditure of $150,000. The Government under this bill is going to give the shipbuilder $400,000 on a million-dollar ship.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the only reason that the provision was written in this bill to allow an owner to turn in an obsolescent ship was not as a matter of advantage to the owner of that ship, but to bring that tonnage under the direct control of the maritime authority. It is provided in the next paragraph that any ship acquired under this section shall be held in the care and custody of the Secretary of Commerce and be subject to sale, charter, or operation under provisions of existing law, or the Secretary of Commerce may scrap or sell for scrapping any vessel in his custody so acquired. The Secretary of Commerce can, in his judgment, do precisely what the owner of the vessel might do with that vessel if he retained it in his control, and the maritime authority will not allow any owner of a vessel so turned in one penny more than he can realize out of that vessel, which the owner on his own account could have realized. It is only that the title to that ship and its control and disposition shall be in the hands of the maritime authority and not in the hands of the owner, who might allow it to be turned into channels where it would be detrimental to the best interest of the mercantile marine and our foreign commerce. It is not a matter of money, it is merely a matter of giving the Government control of the obsolete ship. The amendment should be defeated.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make this brief statement. There is a provision in the bill, page 15, section 402 (a), the section this amendment applies to, wherein the language reads as follows:

Which in no case shall exceed the cost to the owner.

That means from the standpoint of determining the cost to Uncle Sam of the ship that is going to be turned in to the United States Government to junk. Did you ever stop to think that the owner himself who sells it to the Government may not have been the original owner, that the ship may have changed hands several times before it reached the owner who makes the sale to the United States Government? In other words, just keep this before you, that in cases where we have sold ships to the present operators at a fraction of their value it is not impossible to conceive that they might have resold the same ship some three or four times at an appreciation in value, and that will be the price of the junk that will be cashed in on the taxpayers unless this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It is impossible to conceive that the President of the United States would appoint such a set of crooks as the maritime authority would be if they should permit any such condition to arise or any such condition to exist. All in the world we say is that where the maritime authority finds it is better to buy in these old, obsolete ships and retain them or scrap them, it shall have the authority to do it. An important point is that the operating differential on a new ship would be much less than on an old ship. The fuel cost on a new ship is much less. A modern ship can be operated much more economically. Furthermore, it is important for relief of unemployment. No greater relief could be given to the people of this country than in the building of ships. A building program of this character will put people to work in every State in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN) there were—ayes 18, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as having been read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 502. (a) If the Secretary of the Navy certifies his approval under section 501 (b) and the Authority approves the application, it may—

(1) Subject to the provisions of section 504, secure, on behalf of the applicant, bids for the construction or reconditioning of the proposed vessel according to the approved plans and specifications;

(2) If the bid of the shipbuilder who is the lowest responsible bidder is determined by the Authority to be fair and reasonable, approve such bid, and insofar as necessaray to protect the interests of the United States, become a party to the contract or contracts or other arrangements for the construction or reconditioning of the proposed vessel by such shipbuilder;

(3) If such bid is approved by the Authority and accepted by the applicant, agree to pay to such shipbuilder, on behalf of the applicant, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, a construction subsidy in an amount determined by the Authority in accordance with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section;

(4) If the applicant is eligible and applies therefor, grant a construction loan to such applicant in accordance with section 11, as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 46, sec. 870), subject to the provisions of subsection (c) of this section.

(b) The amount of the construction differential subsidy shall equal, but not exceed, the excess of the bid of the shipbuilder constructing or reconditioning the proposed vessel pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) (2) of this section, over the fair and reasonable cost, as determinined by the Authority, of the construction or reconditioning if the proposed vessel were constructed or reconditioned under like plans and specifications (but not including the changes made therein pursuant to the provisions of section 501 (b)) in a principal foreign shipbuilding center, which is availed of by any of the principal foreign competitors in the service in which the vessel is to be operated, and which is deemed by the Authority to furnish a fair and representative example for the determination of costs of construction or reconditioning in foreign countries of vessels of the type proposed to be constructed or reconditioned.

(c) The construction subsidy shall be paid out of the construction-loan fund created by section 11, as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, or out of other available funds, to the shipbuilder ratably with the payments made by the applicant, or otherwise, as the Authority may determine. In case a construction loan is granted to the applicant, such loan shall not be for a sum greater than three-fourths of the foreign cost of construction or reconditioning as determined by the Authority under subsection (b) of this section, and no advance shall be made on such loan until the applicant has paid to the shipbuilder not less than 25 percent of such foreign cost. In case a construction loan is made for the reconditioning of any vessel, it shall be repaid within a predetermined period, which shall not exceed the life expectancy of the vessel after such reconditioning.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 502 (b) by adding thereto after the word "reconditioned" on line 5, page 20: "In computing the construction differential subsidy, the Authority shall take into consideration that amount which would be required to place the vessel in operation at a point equal in advantage to that point where it will be placed in operation by such American shipyard."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, that is merely a correcting amendment in one sense of the word. All it does is provide for the consideration of the differential in bringing the ship from one point to the point of service, where it is to begin operation. That matter is of importance to the shipbuilder as it is to the operator. Consequently I recommend to the Congress that this matter be given very careful consideration.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

After the reading of the amendment and the explanation offered by the gentleman from Iowa, who is usually very clear, I fail to understand just what it does mean. I think it is more confusing than otherwise. I do not see why we should take into consideration carrying the vessel to a yard or something like that.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. I will try to make myself clear. What I mean is this: In figuring the differential in the cost of construction abroad and the cost of construction at home, we should take into consideration the amount that will be required to transport that vessel from the point of origin or its point of construction to the point where it begins its operation. That charge should not be carried by the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BLAND. It is too refined for me, Mr. Chairman. I think the best thing to do is to defeat the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Amend the first sentence of section 502 (c) to read as follows: "The construction subsidy shall be paid out of the construction-loan funds created by section 11, as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, or out of other available funds to the shipbuilder: Provided, That no subsidy payment shall be made to the shipbuilder by the Authority until after the applicant has paid to the shipbuilder not less than 50 percent of the foregoing construction cost of such vessel constructed under part 1 of this title."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, the principle of this amendment is to change the condition provided in the bill, that makes it possible for the shipbuilder and operator to obtain a combined gift and grant of $850,000 on a $1,000,000 boat. The foreign cost of an American ship which would cost $1,000,000 to build would be $600,000, if we allow the differentials as they are contended to exist, meaning that $400,000 shall be paid in cash to the shipbuilder. Therefore there is a construction cost, an outlay of cash on the part of the Government paid to the shipbuilder, of $400,000. In addition to that, the shipbuilder can borrow from the Federal Government 75 percent of the foreign construction cost.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman means the shipowner?

Mr. MORAN. Yes; the shipowner. The foreign cost in this illustration is $600,000. Therefore a loan can be made for $450,000. Thus we have $400,000 and $450,000 or a total of $850,000, total grant and loan by the Government, which equals 85 percent of the American cost of constructing that American ship. Then combined with the previous section pointed out, although only $150,000 needs to be initially put in, a trade-in is possible on an obsolete boat. So it is entirely possible that the initial outlay would be practically nothing for a $1,000,000 boat. I point that out particularly at this time because this is the section that provides that tremendous benefit.

It seems to me such a high-finance scheme as this ought to merit the attention of Congress.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the case of a ship costing $1,000,000, the construction differential would be $400,000. The ship owner, if he wants to borrow, must put up $150,000 in cash. The rest is not a gift from the Government, but is a loan to him with ample security, a loan secured by a first lien on the vessel.

The material purpose of this section of the bill is to prevent a few big lines monopolizing the shipping of the country. The committee very carefully considered the operation of this construction-loan fund. It developed that today there are about six lines which probably could negotiate the construction of their ships without the aid of a construction loan. The result would be that the smaller lines in the South and other places would go out of business, for they could find no means of negotiating a loan for construction. These big companies would become giant monopolies and would concentrate the shipping in such ports as they pleased.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Moran) there were—ayes 13, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 502 by adding thereto:

"(d) The Authority shall not extend aid in the construction of a vessel or vessels to more than one line engaged in any one particular foreign service."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, if there has been an amendment offered today that is fair to the taxpayers, this one is, because it provides an express preventative, so to speak, for the Authority to refuse to subsidize more than one line operating in the same service. If Congress wants to subsidize shipping lines operating on the same trade routes in competition with one another, if they want to subsidize lines operating on such routes in that manner and pay the bill in the form of subsidies, in one sense financing a trade war between competing companies, then defeat this amendment. But if you are subsidizing for the purpose of trying to develop a line on a trade route, then certainly you should accept this amendment; and I offer it to the House in good faith.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to the construction provision of the bill, and the gentleman is seeking to prevent the subsidizing of operation of more than one line in the same service or over the same trade route. This is amply taken care of in the bill, specifically and in language as strong as it is possible to write; so this amendment is entirely unnecessary and out of place.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the provisions of the construction section of the bill, section 535 (a):

* * * and no contract shall be made with respect to a vessel operated or to be operated in a service, route, or line served by two or more citizens of the United States with vessels of United States registry, if, in the judgment of the Authority, the effect of such a contract would be to give undue advantage or be unduly prejudicial, as between citizens of the United States, in the operation of vessels in competitive services, routes, or lines.

The matter of determining what lines are in competition is a very serious one and ample power has been given the maritime authority to prevent the subsidizing of competing lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 15, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend Section 502 by adding thereto:

"(e) Notwithstanding any provisions of section 11, as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, no loans shall be made by the Authority for the construction or reconditioning of a vessel or vessels for a period in excess of 15 years."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, the only thing this amendment does is to reduce the number of years over which these particular provisions pertaining to finance shall extend from 20 to 15.

The reason for the amendment is this: The committee has constantly impressed upon the Congress the fact that the average life of a ship is 20 years. This is developed also by the committee in its hearings. Why should we insert in the bill any provision that will extend the financing over a period of time as long as the useful life of a ship? During the latter period of the life of a ship it is depreciating in its producing capacity more rapidly than it does in the forepart of its life.

If the United States Government is to lend the money with which to build these ships, the Government should be repaid during the most productive period of the ship's service on its route. Certainly there can be no reasonable objection to limiting this period to 15 years rather than extending the period to 20 years. This is in the interest of protecting the public in the matter of collection of the loan. We should, by all means, take every precaution to insure the repayment of the proposed loans for shipbuilding.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 507. When used in this part the terms "construction" and "reconditioning" each include necessary outfitting and equipment.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend title V by adding thereto:

"SEC. 508. The cumulative net profits in excess of 6 percent per annum of any shipbuilder receiving a contract under this act (dating from the first subsidy contract) shall be subject to recapture by the Authority at the end of each calendar year to the extent of 75 percent of such excess: Provided, That the total recovery by the Authority shall not exceed the cumulative subsidy payments to the shipbuilder: And provided further, That the Authority shall prescribe the accounting formula for determining these net profits."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, the sum and substance of this amendment is the recapture clause, which is to protect the public from excessive profits of shipbuilders. I may say that any important program of subsidies should carry with it the feature of recapture. I pointed out in my opening remarks this afternoon with reference to this bill that the subsidies provided for in this act have practically no limitation, if any, upon the amounts that may be recommended to be paid by the authority. This includes the construction subsidy, the operating subsidy, and the penetration subsidy.

It is of vital importance, therefore, to the American public who are paying the bills to have a recapture clause incorporated in this section and in every section which provides for benefits to shipbuilders. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that we give this matter our utmost and careful consideration; because if we are going to pay operating subsidies, if we are going to pay construction subsidies, if we are going to pay trade penetration subsidies and place no limitation upon them, and place no boundary line beyond which the authority may proceed, then certainly we ought to protect the public by the insertion of a provision for the recapture of any excessive profits that might be made at the expense of the American people.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not confined to the recapture profits on ships built with the aid of subsidies but extends to all construction work. The amendment makes no distinction. The subsidy is a differential, as I have previously explained, and the issuance of the contract is protected. The work must be submitted to competing bids. The companies must submit their estimates. They are required to submit the bids of the subcontractors. The authority may call for all the information it desires as to the bids that are sent in. In addition there is a limitation against collusion and the shipyards are required, as well as the contractors, to keep their books according to forms that are prepared and submitted by the authority.

The authority can get all of this information at any time. It may call for the books and subpena the witnesses. It may examine the books of the competing yards and find out if there is any collusion or any unreasonable profit in connection with the bid.

Mr. Chairman, if there are not safeguards thrown around the bids in this bill, I do not know any way in which the bids could be safeguarded.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SCHAEFER). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 17, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the Chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee or some member of the committee a few questions. Has a calculation been made as to how much this construction differential is going to cost the Government per year?

Mr. BLAND. That would be impossible to tell, because it depends on the character of ships to be built as well as the number of ships to be built. On an 8,000 gross cargo ship there would be a differential of about $400,000.

Mr. BIERMANN. In this calculation, what construction differential is taken, England or Japan?

Mr. BLAND. That gave us the great trouble. As a matter of fact, however, it appears that there may not be as much difference between England and Japan as we supposed. The evidence was presented to our committee that France, I think it was, called for the construction of several ships. They submitted the bids to Japan and Great Britain, and Great Britain got the job. The theory is that Japan does not have the raw material and has to bring it in from abroad. We have guarded against that in this bill by requiring and empowering the authority to take into consideration the principal yards in the country from which the principal competitors come. As a matter of fact, to be fair with the gentleman, I think Great Britain is going to be the measure.

Mr. BIERMANN. Can the gentleman tell us how much the Jones-White Act of 1928 has cost the Government to date?

Mr. BLAND. That is set forth in the papers accompanying the President's message.

Mr. BIERMANN. It is in the report?

Mr. BLAND. Yes. If the present contracts should continue, there will have been paid a total of $308,000,000, and there has been already paid by the Post Office Department $119,000,000. I am speaking in round figures. The reports accompanying the President's message present the facts.

Mr. BIERMANN. Has the Jones-White Act assisted in enlarging our merchant marine?

Mr. BLAND. No; it has not. It has helped to give us some good ships, but they came into operation shortly before the depression, and with the depression came attacks on that policy. Owners were discouraged in building. In addition, I may say that I have come to the conclusion that the provisions for inflexible subsidies covering a long period of time is fundamentally unsound.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is there at the present time a crying shortage of merchant-marine ships with which to carry American goods?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; and the United States will be off the seas in about 7 years. If the gentleman will look at the report which I filed, he will note that fact.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman calculates that this act will do for our merchant marine what the Jones-White Act did not do.

Mr. BLAND. I firmly believe so.

Mr. BIERMANN. Can the gentleman use the rest of my time and tell us what the difference is?

Mr. BLAND. I have tried to show that in the report.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PART II—OPERATING DIFFERENTIAL SUBSIDY

SEC. 521. (a) Any citizen of the United States may make application to the Authority for an operating differential subsidy to aid in the operation of a vessel or vessels in a service, route, or line in the foreign commerce of the United States determined to be essential under section 204 (a) of this act. No such application shall be approved by the Authority unless it determines that:

(1) The operation of such vessel or vessels in such service, route, or line is required to meet competitive conditions or to promote the foreign commerce of the United States, and that such vessel or vessels have been documented under the laws of the United States not later than April 1, 1935, or constructed in shipyards within the continental United States after such date.

(2) The applicant owns, or can and will build or purchase, a vessel or vessels of the size, type, speed, and number, and with the proper equipment, required to enable him to operate and maintain the service, route, or line in such manner as may be necessary to meet competitive conditions, and to promote foreign commerce.

(3) The applicant possesses the ability, experience, financial resources, and other qualifications necessary to enable him to so conduct the proposed operations of the vessel or vessels as to meet competitive conditions and promote foreign commerce.

(4) The granting of the aid applied for is necessary to place the proposed operations of the vessel or vessels on a parity with those of foreign competitors, and is reasonably calculated to carry out effectively the purposes and policy of this act.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 521 (a) (1), line 14, page 26, by striking out "April 1, 1935" and substituting therefor "February 1, 1928."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, the avowed purpose of this bill, according to its proponents, is to benefit shipbuilders and ship operators from the standpoint of developing a merchant marine; and if we have incorporated in this bill a provision which will permit foreign ships, such as the Belgenland, to be transferred from a foreign flag to the American flag in a short period of time, let us say a few months, then certainly we are defeating the very purpose of the bill in developing an American-built, American-operated merchant marine. I insist that it is unfair to permit such an abuse of a subsidy bill as drawn and introduced here and require the taxpayers of this country to subsidize a ship built in a foreign yard and transferred to the American flag within a brief period of time, less than a year. For this reason we should set this date back far enough to exclude, to be specific, the Belgenland.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has referred to the Belgenland with respect to this proposition. The Belgenland, I believe, is now called the "Columbia", and flies the American flag.

This is the situation which the gentleman complains of which is made possible by the bill as drawn. The United States Lines, the foremost and only passenger competitor of the United States with the French, the Italian, and the British, have two first-class ships in service, the Manhattan and the Washington. Applications for passage on these ships exceed the room there is on them. If this bill is passed as it is drawn it is possible for the United States Lines to use the Columbia for the overflow of Americans who want to ride on American ships and conserve this patronage for the American lines during the period only that is necessary to elapse before a new ship, built in an American yard under the provisions of this bill, can be added to the service of the Manhattan and the Washington.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa prevails the result will be that the Americans who want to sail under the American flag on the Washington and on the Manhattan, and for whom there is no room, will have to travel on foreign ships, and having become patrons of foreign ships they may in the future continue to patronize them. If we let this gap be filled up with the Columbia until a new Washington or a new Manhattan is ready for the service, then we retain this American patronage and continue to serve these Americans who want to sail on American boats. This is the issue that is involved here and you can determine it as you see fit.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How much does it cost the Government to enable these Americans to ride on the Columbia instead of on the other ship?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know. It is precisely the difference that it will cost for the period that the Columbia is temporarily running, to pay American seamen over what it costs to pay European seamen and the cost of American materials over and above the cost of foreign materials. This will be the cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 522. (a) If the Authority approves the application, it may enter into a contract with the applicant for the payment of an operating differential subsidy determined in accordance with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, for the operation of such vessel or vessels in such service, route, or line for a period not exceeding 20 years, and subject to such terms and conditions, consistent with this act, as the Authority shall require to effectuate the purposes and policy of this act.

(b) Subject to the provisions of subsection (e) of this section, the amount of the operating differential subsidy shall not exceed the excess of the fair and reasonable cost of insurance, maintenance repairs, wages and subsistence of officers and crews, and any other items of expense (excluding shore expenses) in which the Authority may deem that the applicant is at a substantial disadvantage in competition with vessels of the foreign country hereinafter referred to, in the operation under United States registry of the vessel or vessels covered by the contract, over the estimated fair and reasonable cost of the same items of expense (after deducting therefrom any estimated increase in such items necessitated by changes made pursuant to the provisions of section 501 (b)) if such vessel or vessels were operated under the registry of a foreign country whose vessels are substantial competitors of the vessel or vessels covered by the contract.

(c) The amount of such subsidy shall be determined and payable on the basis of a final accounting made as soon as practicable after the end of each year or other period fixed in the contract. The Authority may provide for in the contract, or otherwise approve, the payment from time to time during any such period of such amounts on account as it deems proper. Such payments on account shall in no case exceed 75 percent of the amount estimated to have accrued on account of such subsidy, and shall be made only after there has been furnished to the Authority such security as it determines to be reasonable and necessary to insure the refund of any overpayment.

(d) No such subsidy shall be paid in respect of any vessel for any time during which it is engaged exclusively in coastwise trade, and in case it is engaged in joint coastwise and foreign trade the subsidy shall not exceed an amount which bears the same ratio to the subsidy otherwise payable as the gross revenues derived from the foreign portion of such joint coastwise and foreign trade bears to the gross revenues derived from all portions of such joint trade. No vessel operating on the Great Lakes or on the inland waterways of the United States shall be considered for the purposes of this part to be operating in foreign trade.

(e) In any case where the contractor shows to the satisfaction of the Authority, and the Authority after investigation so finds and declares of record, that for any year or other period the operating subsidy as above provided for is inadequate to offset the effect of governmental aid or subsidies paid to foreign competitors, the Authority may adjust the operating subsidy to such extent as is necessary to accomplish the purposes and policy of this act.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, after line 16, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"(f) In the operation of any vessel for which an operating differential subsidy is paid under this part, the Authority may require that the contractor shall use only articles, materials, and supplies of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States, except when it is necessary to purchase supplies and equipment outside the United States to enable said vessel to continue and complete a voyage."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is merely permissive and gives authority to the maritime authority, set up under this act to require that persons operating ships and operating subsidies, shall use materials and equipment of the growth and manufacture of the United States. I do not think the committee has any objection to this amendment; we discussed it in the committee, and we were sympathetic, but at that time had not worked it out.

Mr. BLAND. The committee will accept the amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eliminate section 522 (e) by striking out lines 9 to 16, inclusive, page 29.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, paragraph (e) provides that where the authority after investigation finds that the operating subsidy is inadequate to offset the effect of government aid the authority may adjust the operating subsidy to such an extent as is necessary to accomplish the purposes of the act. It is clear that that part of the section adjusts only upward. Paragraph (c) of the same section seeks to meet this ambiguity. It seems that if under paragraph (c) it is determined what should be the proper subsidy, and it can be adjusted upward or downward, then we do not need section (e). On the other hand, if we do need section (e) to adjust upward we need the language provided in this amendment to permit an adjustment downward if an excessive subsidy allowance has been made.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the matter was investigated by the authority, and this is only to meet the provision of the President to take care of additional subsidies. If the Government should run onto some subsidy that ran things up, this provision is intended to meet that subsidy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 524. Any contract executed under this part may be canceled by the Authority for repeated and intentional violations of such contract for this act. The Authority may impose appropriate penalties for violations of such contract, this act, or rules and regulations prescribed pursuant thereto, not to exceed $500 for each offense, which shall be deducted from subsidy payments. The Authority may, in such circumstances and subject to such conditions as it deems reasonable, mitigate or remit such penalties.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eleven members present, a quorum. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 524 by eliminating the last sentence beginning in line 23, page 30, which reads as follows:

"The Authority may, in such circumstances and subject to such conditions as it deems reasonable, mitigate or remit such penalty."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, this section deals with repeated and intentional violations on the part of the contractors who are operating under this subsidy bill. Then it proceeds down at the last sentence of the section to say that the authority in such circumstances and under such conditions as it deems reasonable may mitigate and remit such penalty. In other words, it is turning the criminals loose. That is the size of the whole situation, no matter what portion of the paragraph the concluding sentence may refer to. The only people I can visualize who will be favorable to that will be contractors under this provision who are apt to be guilty of repeated and intentional violations of the terms of their contract, and want them mitigated by the authority in charge of the administration of the act.

No doubt such a section, of course, would meet with the entire approval of the American Steamship Owners' Association. Certainly we do not want to write into law a provision that the authority or any department of the Government can set aside penalties that are set out in the proposed bill as being necessary for the proper enforcement of such an act.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that, with his usual clarity, the gentleman should have made this mistake. The first sentence of the section provides that any contract may be canceled by the authority for repeated and intentional violations of the contract or of this act, and then the section provides that the authority may impose appropriate penalties for other violations of rules and regulations. The authority is given power to remit these later penalties—an entirely different situation from that described by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill may be considered as having been read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 527. No contractor under a contract for aid in force under this part shall suffer or permit any insurance, stevedoring, terminal, ship repairing, towboat, management, operating, or other services of like character to be supplied vessels operated under such contract, by any affiliate, subsidiary, or holding company connected with, or directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, such contractor, or by any officer, director, or employee of such contractor, except with the written consent of, and upon such conditions as may from time to time be prescribed by, the Authority.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 527 to read as follows:

"(a) No contractor under a contract in force under this title, or no holding company of such contractor, or no officer, director, or executive, or no member of the immediate family of any of such officers, directors, or executives of such contractor or such holding company, shall (1) own any pecuniary interest in any person performing or supplying stevedoring, terminal, ship-repair, ship-chandler, towboat, wharfage, or kindred services in any domestic port or ports; (2) own any pecuniary interest in any person servicing any vessels of the contractor in a foreign port or ports: Provided, That with the express approval of the Authority, such contractor, or a wholly owned subsidiary of such contractor, may render services to vessels in a foreign port or ports if the profits, if any, incident thereto are included in the earnings contemplated in section 522 (c) of this act; (3) own, operate, or charter any vessel or vessels engaged in the domestic intercoastal or coastwise service, or own any pecuniary interest in any person that owns, charters, or operates any vessel or vessels in the domestic intercoastal or coastwise service; (4) own, charter, or operate any foreign-flag vessel or vessels, or own any pecuniary interest in any person that owns, charters, or operates any foreign-flag vessel or vessels; (5) perform or supply at any domestic port or ports, stevedoring, towboat, ship-repair, ship-chandler, terminal, or wharfage services for any vessel: Provided, That such contractor may itself, with the express approval of the Authority, perform stevedoring services to and/or utilize its own terminal and/or wharfage facilities for its own vessels; or (6) own any pecuniary interest in any person employed as agent or broker for any contractor under a contract in force under this act.

"(b) No contractor under a contract in force under this part shall employ any person as the managing or operating agent of such contractor, or shall charter its vessels for operation by another person, or shall employ chartered vessels under such contract.

"(c) No contractor under a contract in force under this part, or no holding company of such contractor, or no officer, director, or executive, or no member of the immediate family of such officers, directors, or executives of such contractor, or of such holding company, shall own any pecuniary interest in, or shall be owned to any extent by, any person engaged in the building of ships, or any holding or subsidiary company of such person, or any officer, director, or other executive of such person, or of such holding company.

"(d) No contract under the provisions of this act shall be made with any person who shall employ any Member of Congress, either with or without compensation, as an attorney, agent, officer, or director of such person.

"(e) Any violation of any provision of section 527 (a), (b), (c), (d), or (e) shall constitute a breach of contract in force under this title, and upon determining that such a violation has occurred the Authority shall forthwith cancel such contract."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the Members of the House are fully aware of the importance of this legislation, in view of the facts that have been pointed out during the course of the debate, in which we have endeavored to indicate the evils of the subsidy system which has been operated under the 1928 act. I am very certain that every Member of the House realizes the importance of a measure that proposes to set up a system of subsidies involving various forms that have previously been mentioned without limitations. I am sure they appreciate the importance of that when they are attempting to draft legislation with the thought in mind that it is to last for a period of 20 years at least, during all of which time Mr. Roosevelt will not be President, in an effort to build a merchant marine for this country.

In the face of that fact I feel justified in continuing to offer such amendments as appear, in my judgment, necessary to protect the interests of the American public and the taxpayers who are going to pay this bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Is not the gentleman in favor of pretty large appropriations that affect the taxpayers in Iowa?

Mr. WEARIN. I do not know what the gentleman refers to, but I have never voted for any subsidy bills that provide for the payment of excessively large subsidies to any small group seeking a position at the public trough.

I would say it is of vital importance that we give this question full consideration. It goes from the House to the branch of our legislative body at the other end of the Capitol where it will be considered from every angle. For that reason it is necessary for the House to make an adequate record upon this particular question, including such things as the recapture of excessive profits in subsidies, both construction and operation. That is the reason why I have introduced this amendment, which is rather long. I did not expect the Members of the House to follow it, but I would call to your attention that it does a number of things. It eliminates the danger of the holding company and its existence among shipping interests which would be benefiting under this act.

Furthermore, it does something else. It provides that there shall not be transfers to individuals, within a family circle of ship operators, affiliates, and other associate companies. It prevents transfers of those concerns to the hands of wives and children. As the gentleman from Maine said this morning, the rule of "women and children first" is the law of the sea, but this is the first time I have ever known it to be the law of finance, and public finance at that. For that reason we are particularly anxious, in putting into this bill a safeguard that will absolutely prevent the possibility of such family ownership; not to include permissive authority to the maritime authority to grant such conditions and permit them to exist, but to prohibit them, as a result of the investigations that have been carried on by this Congress recently, and which have been brought to the attention of the public and which have resulted in some of the outstanding new-deal legislation that has been proposed or enacted.

For that reason I feel it is of importance that we adopt the pending amendment, which will remove any possibility of any members of a family operating subsidiaries to benefit under this subsidy bill. At the same time it will terminate any possibility of the existence of such subsidiaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, we have covered practically everything in the amendment in less language. The authority is granted full power. It can only permit these affiliates when it is necessary. The authority may go into their books, subpena them, and punish them if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 532. (a) Every contract executed under this title shall contain provisions requiring:

(1) Each party to the contract (except the Authority) and every affiliate, subsidiary, or holding company connected with, or directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, such party, to keep its books, records, and accounts relating to such contract, and to the maintenance and operation of the vessels, services, routes, and lines covered by the contract, in such form and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Authority: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not require the duplication of books, records, and accounts required to be kept in some other form by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

(2) Each party to the contract (except the Authority) and every affiliate, subsidiary, or holding company connected with, or directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, such party, to file, upon notice from the Authority, or any agency of the Government designated by it, balance sheets, profit-and-loss and surplus statements, and such other statements of financial operations, special reports, memoranda of any facts and transactions, appertaining to the performance of, or transactions or operations under, such contract directly or indirectly affecting the financial results of such operation, and including all transactions or operations appertaining or subsidiary thereto, insurance, stevedoring, handling of cargo, wharfage, terminal charges, and any other matters which in the opinion of the Authority affect the financial results in the performance of, or transactions or operations under, such contract.

(b) The Authority, or any agency of the Government designated by it, is authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts referred to in this section, whenever it may deem it advisable, or whenever requested by either House of Congress. The parties to the contracts referred to in this section (except the Authority), and every affiliate, subsidiary, and holding company connected with, or directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, such party shall keep their books, records, and accounts referred to in this section open to inspection and audit at all times by accredited representatives of the Authority. The provisions of this subsection shall apply to the builder of any ship in the construction of which aid is received under this title.

(c) The Authority may employ special agents or examiners who shall have authority to examine all accounts, records, and memoranda kept or required to be kept hereunder. The Authority may prescribe the length of time such accounts, records, or memoranda shall be preserved.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CITRON: On page 35, at the end of line 22, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"(e) That the prevailing rate of wages shall be paid to employees engaged in any construction work under the provisions of this Act."

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, this bill assures builders and contractors a fair opportunity of reasonable profits. My amendment provides that labor should get a fair return for its hire. This amendment provides that the prevailing rate of wages should govern in all construction work. It will save a great deal of trouble to the country if we put it into effect, because it will help solve many arguments between the laboring people and the employers. If we are loaning money to contractors and builders of these ships and they can get all they need from the Government, I do not see why we should not have a clause in this bill providing that every contract should contain a clause that the prevailing rate of wages should be paid. If we let the builders have money at a rate of interest which is fair to them and the Government and beneficial to the merchant marine, it is not to the best interest of all concerned to say that in the matter of wages we are simply relying on the good faith of the builder. If we insert this amendment in the bill, we are adding a necessary requisite. It will create harmony and friendship between employer and employee. It is applying a fair rule to the worker, guaranteeing to him the prevailing rate. No one can object to this, especially as it avoids any future argument about wages between the laboring interests and the builders and contractors of these ships. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very good and necessary amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON]. It simply provides that the prevailing rate of wage will be paid on ship construction. We have that in the Davis-Bacon bill with respect to public buildings. This is simply putting it into the provisions of the contracts for shipbuilding. If we are going to give these shipbuilders a subsidy, for instance, if a ship costs a million to build in this country, and $600,000 abroad, we are going to give them a $400,000 subsidy to offset European shipbuilding, I think we ought to take care of our American workers who are going to build those ships. I think this amendment is very clear to the Members of the House. This discussion on prevailing rate of wage has been held many times in the past, particularly when Mr. BACON, of New York, offered the original Davis-Bacon bill. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON], by offering this amendment, is but continuing the friendly attitude toward labor which he has continually shown before and since becoming a Member of this House. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend part 3 of title V by adding a new section at line 16 on page 36:

"SEC. 529. The cumulative net profits in excess of 6 percent per annum of any ship operator receiving financial aid under this act (dating from the first subsidy contract), shall be subject to recapture by the Government at the end of each calendar year to the extent of 75 percent of such excess. In calculating net worth for the purposes of this act, intangible assets and appreciation of assets shall be excluded, provided that the Authority shall prescribe the accounting formula for determining net profit contemplated in this section."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that the Clerk has read only to the end of section 533, and the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The section of the bill to which the amendment is offered has not been reached.

The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Amend section 532, (a) (1), page 34, lines 5, 6, 7, by eliminating the words "Relating to such contract, and to the maintenance and operation of the vessels, services, routes, and lines covered by the contract."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about the need of examining the books of affiliated, holding, and subordinate companies. That is all this amendment seeks to accomplish. It eliminates a limiting phrase, which phrase would allow the authority to look at books relating only to such contracts whereas it might be very advantageous to the Government to be able to get more information from some of the various subordinate and holding companies.

The language stricken by this amendment is technical and has been submitted to accounting experts who advise me that it is so limited that the authority might as well make no attempt to look at books of subsidity or holding companies if that phrase is left in the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, there should be no justification for a general fishing expedition. Under the provisions of the bill as drawn any germane books may be examined by the authority.

I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN) there were—ayes 14, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I send an amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MORAN: Amend section 532 (a) (2), page 34, lines 21–25, and page 35, lines 1–3, by eliminating the words "appertaining to the performance of, or transactions or operations under, such contract directly or indirectly affecting the financial results of such operation, and including all transactions or operations appertaining or subsidiary thereto, insurance, stevedoring, handling of cargo, wharfage, terminal charges, and other matters which in the opinion of the Authority affect the financial results in the performance of, or transactions or operations under, such contract", and substitute the following words: "in the form and manner required by the Authority."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has the same effect as the previous amendment, it eliminates a limiting clause with regard to the possibility of examination of books of holding companies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Amend section 532 (b), page 35, line 6, by eliminating the words "referred to in this section" and substitute the following words: "of any contractor, affiliate, subsidiary, or holding company connected with or directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by such contractor."

Mr. MORAN. The purpose of this amendment is obvious. In one sentence it provides merely the opportunity of examining the books of various subordinates; it removes a restriction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN) there were—ayes 35, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 533. In case of willful failure or refusal on the part of any person to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda in the manner prescribed by the Authority, or to submit such accounts, records, and memoranda to the inspection of the Authority or any of its authorized agents or examiners, such person shall forfeit to the United States not to exceed the sum of $5,000 for each such offense. Such forfeiture shall accrue to the United States and be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Any person who shall willfully falsify any account, record, or memoranda, or who shall willfully destroy, mutilate, or alter any such account, record, or memoranda, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject upon conviction thereof to a fine of not more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than 3 years, or both such fine and imprisonment. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the several district courts of the United States are hereby authorized to try and punish offenses hereunder within their respective jurisdictions.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend part of title III of title V by adding a new section at line 16 on page 36, as follows.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be not read, but that I may be permitted to discuss the amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 529. The cumulative net profits in excess of 6 percent per annum of any ship operator receiving financial aid under this act (dating from the first subsidy contract) shall be subject to recapture by the Government at the end of each calendar year to the extent of 75 percent of such excess. In calculating net worth, for the purpose of this act, intangible assets and appreciation of assets shall be excluded: Provided, That the Authority shall prescribe the accounting formula for determining the net profit contemplated in this section.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, this is a recapture clause and provides for the recapture of operating subsidies in excess of the amount named in the amendment, 6 percent.

It will be recalled that under the Shipping Act of 1928 where a limitation of the subsidies was provided by law, the rates to be charged for carrying the mails were such that excessive profits were realized on the part of certain operators. I call attention to page 202 of the investigations of air and ocean mail contracts by the Senate committee with reference particularly to one ship line, the Lykes people, which, with an initial investment of only $115,439.13 in 1918, was from October 1918 to June 20, 1933, able to realize a profit of $5,891,222.66—this on an initial investment of $115,000.

My purpose in offering this amendment providing for a recapture clause is to prevent such things occurring under the present law. When we pay subsidies to operators the United States Government certainly ought to be entitled to collect profits over and above 6 percent. Why should we permit the realization of more from the public purse? If we fail to include such a provision in the bill, we shall be in the position of subsidizing excessive profits to these concerns, for excessive profits can be realized when no limitation is placed upon earnings. So it is of the utmost importance for the protection of the American public that a recapture clause be included in the bill in connection with operating subsidies.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill amply provides for the establishment of a reserve fund for a depreciation and a replacement fund. If we are going to undertake to recapture, as provided in this amendment, we will never get away from the Government contributing to the building of ships. The policy that has been provided by this committee is that before any dividend is paid, before a penny in the way of a dividend to the stockholders is paid, they must provide a replacement fund and a reserve to take care of operation in the lean years. There are other similar provisions in this bill. This amendment would defeat that objective.

I would also call attention to the fact that the very case mentioned covered profits from the years 1918 to 1933, during which time they were operating under the old system of Government ownership. The operators were the agents and they were being paid a fund for operation. Here we are giving a differential covering only difference in cost of operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 35, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 534. (a) To safeguard the public interest in the administration of financial aid under this act, every contract executed under part II of this title shall contain provisions requiring:

(1) The contractor to conduct its operations with respect to the vessels, services, routes, and lines covered by its contract in the most economical and efficient manner;

(2) That no officer, director, or employee of any contractor under a contract in force under this title shall receive a salary or allowance (including compensation in any form for personal service) from such contractor which shall result in such person receiving a total compensation from all sources exceeding $25,000 per annum;

(3) That there shall be set aside out of the operating profits of any fiscal year, before charging depreciation on the vessels and before the payment of any dividends or bonuses or the distribution of profits, a depreciation reserve fund to provide for the payment of any mortgage debt and the replacement of vessels, and a reasonable operating reserve fund. Such reserve funds shall be maintained for these purposes with appropriate provisions permitting their proper investment and their use to meet the operating requirements of any subsequent fiscal year. Any withdrawal for such latter purpose shall be replaced in any subsequent year whenever the earnings under the contract make such replacement possible.

(b) No contractor under a contract in force under this title, or any subsidiary, holding, or affiliate company connected with, or directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, such contractor, or any officer or director of such contractor or company shall own, operate, charter, or act as agent for foreign vessels or foreign interests, unless permission is first obtained from the Authority in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Authority.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Amend section 534 (a) and (2) to read as follows: "that no officer, director, or employee of any contractor under a contract in force under this act, shall receive a salary or allowance (including compensation in any form) from such contractor and/or the holding, subsidiary, and affiliated companies of such contractor, which will result in such individual receiving a total compensation for full-time service at a rate in excess of $17,500 per annum: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Authority to exercise continuing supervision to assure that this provision is not violated."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, this particular paragraph consisting of one sentence is apparently designed to prevent the payment of salaries in excess of $25,000 per annum. Since it contains only one sentence I call to your attention the exact wording in the present bill, which reads:

That no officer, director, or employee of any contractor under a contract in force under this title shall receive a salary or allowance (including compensation in any form for personal service) from such contractor which shall result in such person receiving a total compensation from all services exceeding $25,000 per annum.

A Pacific coast contractor testified before the Post Office Investigating Committee that he did not receive a single penny as an officer of the direct contractor who was doing business with the Government. This looked like a very unusual situation, and when the matter was investigated further, what was found? We found a man who was not receiving a cent of salary from the direct contractor, but was receiving a salary in excess of $100,000 per year, and had been receiving it for several years, from subsidiary companies. The affiliated companies drew the bulk of their operating revenues from the operating companies. This bill does not prevent that particular thing because the officer might not be obtaining his salary out of this particular contract from this particular contractor. By this paying out of funds to a subsidiary, the taxpayers were paying an exorbitant salary to this man. For the reasons set forth, Mr. Chairman. I advocate the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN) there were—ayes 32, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8555) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the revision of my remarks the article from which I quoted, together with extracts from the Democratic platform on the subject of subsidies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether or not the House is to consider the so-called "share-the-wealth tax program" as it was outlined in the papers this morning. We are asked to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow to further consider this ship subsidy bill for the millionaire Shipping Trust outfit.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman that we are anxious to finish the consideration of the pending bill, because we are going to take up the holding-company bill, and the rule for the consideration of that bill provides for 8 hours of debate. There are a number of pages in the bill and we are hopeful we can dispose of it this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I object, Mr. Speaker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMITH of Connecticut (at the request of Mr. SHANLEY) for 4 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. WOLVERTON (at the request of Mr. BACHARACH), on account of serious illness in his family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 805. An act for the relief of Luther M. Turpin and Amanda Turpin;

H. R. 1315. An act for the relief of Thomas J. Gould;

H. R. 1703. An act for the relief of Cletus F. Hoban;

H. R. 2708. An act for the relief of James M. Pace;

H. R. 2987. An act for the relief of E. W. Tarrence;

H. R. 4817. An act for the relief of Matthew E. Hanna;

H. R. 6504. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor"; and

H. R. 6630. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill and an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2276. An act to authorize participation by the United States in the Interparliamentary Union; and

S. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Texas Centennial Exposition and celebrations to be held in the State of Texas during the years 1935 and 1936, and authorizing the President to invite foreign countries and nations to participate therein, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7205. An act to amend the Ship Mortgage Act, 1920, otherwise known as "section 30" of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, approved June 5, 1920, to allow the benefits of said act to be enjoyed by owners of certain vessels of the United States of less than 200 gross tons; and

H. R. 7652. An act to authorize the furnishing of steam from the central heating plant to the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet, in accordance with its previous order, tomorrow, Wednesday, June 26, 1935, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

(Wednesday, June 26, 10 a. m.)

Subcommittee will hold hearings on bill (H. R. 6278) pertaining to postal rates, Queens County, N. Y.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

395. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting, pursuant to Public Resolution No. 18, Seventy-third Congress (S. J. Res. 74), three copies of the domestic and residential electric energy rates in the State of Wyoming on January 1, 1935, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 8599. "WEST INDIAN FRUIT FLY AND BLACK FLY

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the State Plant Board of Florida, to determine and apply such methods of eradication and control for the West Indian fruit fly and black fly, as, in his judgment, may be necessary to eradicate these pests from the State of Florida, $36,000."

Mr. FLETCHER also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8554, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 50, line —, to insert the following:

"GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

"Everglades National Park: For a topographic survey of the Everglades National Park and adjacent areas in the State of Florida, for expenditure by the Geological Survey under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the computation and adjustment of control; the office, drafting, and photolithographic publication of the resulting maps; the purchase of equipment and the procurement of such aerial photographs as are needed to conduct the field surveys, $50,000."

Mr. MURRAY submitted an amendment providing an appropriation of $22,000, to be immediately available, for the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of an assay office at Helena, Mont., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8554, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN TEXTILES IN PHILIPPINE MARKETS

Mr. WALSH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 163), which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas the Philippine Islands had been a principal market for American textile products, furnishing the sole livelihood for many thousands of American workmen; and

Whereas since 1932, when American textilles represented 75 percent of the importations into the Philippine Islands of such products, shipments of American textiles in 1935 will represent less than 25 percent of the total amount sold in the Philippine market; and

Whereas it is understood that the Philippine government and the Philippine people are sympathetic to the belief that because of the unusual governmental relations and other bonds which have existed between the Governments of the islands and of the United States, the products of American workmen are entitled to protection in the islands against those of foreign industries whose wage and living standards are not comparable with American standards; and

Whereas the Philippine government has unofficially indicated its willingness to sanction such protection in one form or another upon indication that such protection for the products of its citizens is desired by the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the Philippine Legislature is now in session: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to advise the Governor General of the Philippine Islands to convey to the president of the Philippine Senate and the speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives a request that the legislature, before adjourning its present session, take such action as will protect effectively American textiles in the Philippine market.

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WALSH submitted a conference report, which was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

OPEN-MARKET AUTHORITY IN FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by Mr. A. C. Miller, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, to the editor of the New York Times, and published in that newspaper on the 24th instant, relative to a controversy which has arisen with regard to the contemplated change in the location of the responsibility for the exercise of the open-market authority in the Federal Reserve System.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Published in New York Times of June 24, 1935]

JUNE 20, 1935.

The EDITOR,
The New York Times, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: The pronounced differences of opinion regarding the amendments to the Federal Reserve Act contemplated in legislation now pending in Congress, and more particularly the acute controversy which has arisen with regard to the contemplated change in the location of the responsibility for the exercise of the open-market authority in the Federal Reserve System, have sharpened interest in Federal Reserve history and especially those episodes in its history that throw light upon the wisdom with which its open-market powers have been exercised in the past. The greatest interest has been shown in the episode covering the period 1927–29.

The editorial in the New York Times of Sunday, June 2, 1935, appears not only to condemn the policies of the Federal Reserve System during the period 1927–29 but also to charge the responsibility for the System's "unfortunate mistakes" to the Federal Reserve Board. It stated, in part, that:

"Episodes have been cited, in the Reserve System's history, when the distribution of powers operated badly—the Board's refusal of a higher discount rate in 1919 to check the wild commodity speculation; insistence by the Board, in 1927, on a lower discount rate at the Chicago Reserve Bank, despite the evidence of growing speculation which the bank itself mistrusted, and the Board's rejection, early in 1929, of the New York bank's move to raise its rate and impose some obstacle to that year's ultimately fatal stock speculation. But the strange thing about this historical retrospect is that all three unfortunate mistakes were made at Washington, against the representations of the Reserve banks; yet that the new bill proposes to enlarge the power of Washington and to restrain the Reserve bank's initiative." [Italics supplied.]

This is but another instance of the persistent repetition of inaccurate and erroneous statements with reference to what transpired in that period. It is doubtless due not to any lack of desire to understand or to any lack of fairness, but rather to the simple fact that the whole story of this eventful period has never been told. The persons responsible for such statements apparently are not aware of certain facts, including the following:

(1) That the Board's action in reducing the discount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago in 1927 was in pursuance of a system policy first proposed by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and concurred in voluntarily by all of the Federal Reserve banks except Chicago.

(2) That the Federal Reserve Bank of New York took no action whatever to check the growing tide of speculation between July 13, 1928, and February 14, 1929, which was the most critical period.

(3) That the Federal Reserve Board finally assumed the leadership by sending to all Federal Reserve banks under date of February 2, 1929, and making public on February 7, 1929, a warning against the diversion of credit from the normal channels of trade and industry into speculative security loans;

(4) That the first proposal by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to increase its discount rate from 5 to 6 percent was made on February 14, 1929, and was intended as a substitute for the "direct action" proposed by the Federal Reserve Board and which the Board thought would be more effective; and

(5) That the ensuing difference of opinion between the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was not a difference of opinion as to the proper objective, but only as to the best method of attaining that objective.

I would be the last to deny that the Federal Reserve Board has not always functioned perfectly or that it must bear its share of the responsibility for the policies pursued by the Federal Reserve System during the fateful period, 1927–29, and for their consequences; but the public discussion of the important question whether or not final authority and responsibility for national credit policies should be placed in the Federal Reserve Board, as proposed in the pending banking legislation, should not be based upon erroneous, partial, and misleading statements as to what occurred during that period. Because of the bearing that a truer and fuller understanding of the manner in which the Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board have respectively discharged their responsibilities have upon the pending banking legislation, a clearing up of these misapprehensions would be in the public interest at this time.

I am, therefore, undertaking to prepare a statement reviewing the course of Federal Reserve policy during the period 1927–29 with such personal comments as seem to me to be pertinent to an understanding of this remarkable episode in Federal Reserve history, and I intend to make it available for general publication.

In the meantime, and in order that the reflections contained in your editorial of June 2 may not longer go unanswered, I shall appreciate it if you will publish this letter pending the release of my fuller statement.

Very truly yours,

A. C. MILLER,
Federal Reserve Board.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair say to the Senator from North Dakota——

Mr. NYE. I will endeavor to seek recognition after the quorum call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair say to the Senator from North Dakota that the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the Senate took a recess last evening, but the parliamentary situation, as he is informed by the Journal clerk, is that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] had not completed his remarks when the Senate took a recess last evening. That being the situation, the Chair would feel that he ought to recognize the Senator from Montana to complete his remarks.

Mr. NYE. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Montana had the floor and yielded to me to make a motion to take a recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the RECORD shows. The Chair wanted to make that statement to the Senator from North Dakota.

The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Keyes	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bachman	Costigan	Logan	Robinson
Bailey	Dickinson	Lonergan	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	Long	Schall
Barbour	Donahey	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Duffy	McGill	Sheppard
Bilbo	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Black	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bone	George	Maloney	Steiwer
Borah	Gerry	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gibson	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Gore	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Guffey	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Nye	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Holt	Overton	White
Clark	Johnson	Pittman

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent from the Senate on important public business, and that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. DIETERICH. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is detained on important public business in the State of Illinois.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is absent because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE MUNITIONS INDUSTRY—H. S. RAUSHENBUSH

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, day before yesterday the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] addressed himself to the Senate in a way that provokes and invites an answer by those whom, rather indirectly, perhaps, he included within his attack.

At the inception of the inquiry conducted by the select committee named to investigate the munitions industry every member of the committee became aware that sooner or later he and the members of the staff of the committee would be made to feel the displeasure of certain individuals or certain interests. Things were anticipated with an intent to embarrass the committee; just prior to each approach by the committee to new ground of inquiry, there have been threats of revelations that would embarrass members of the committee and embarrass its staff. Day before yesterday we encountered the first evidence of a seeming desire to accomplish this embarrassment.

On Monday last the select committee submitted a preliminary report on naval shipbuilding. The submission of this report was immediately followed by an address by the Senator from Iowa in the Senate seeking to plant the thought that he who had been engaged by the committee to coordinate its work, to carry on as its chief investigator, was of socialistic tendencies; that communism was somewhat related to him; and that he was one of those individuals who have fastened themselves within the Government and are boring from within. Whether or not there is anything to be concerned about in this connection is neither here nor there, but he was further charged with being one of the so-called "new dealers."

I am given to wonder at the moment at the timeliness of the attack.

The munitions committee is sponsoring several legislative bills. One of them is pending at the present time before the Senate Committee on Finance. That is the committee's war profits bill, a bill aiming to control, in time of another war, the profits which flow to men and to corporations. After months of effort the committee reported the bill to the Senate, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It has been acted upon by that committee, reported to the Senate favorably with certain amendments, and the Senate in turn has referred it to the Finance Committee. We have assurances that the Finance Committee, through its subcommittee, will give consideration to the measure as early as possible.

Before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs are two bills introduced in behalf of the munitions committee by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Before the Foreign Relations Committee are resolutions which the committee or members of it are sponsoring. Two of those resolutions, I am happy to announce, were this morning ordered reported by the Foreign Relations Committee, one dealing with the issuance of passports in time of war, the other dealing with the issuance of credits and loans in time of war.

I am wondering if there is now intent to make these measures, which the committee has fought so diligently to forward, appear as socialistic, to make it appear that there are forces at work within the committee and within the Senate which would have the Senate do other than the occasion clearly demands should be done? The attack plainly is not upon a member of the committee, but upon the one whom the committee engaged to carry on as its chief investigator, Mr. H. S. Raushenbush. Just what is the background of this report made to the Senate by the munitions committee day before yesterday?

It ought to be stated here and now that Mr. Raushenbush has a background of which he and any friend of his might well be proud. He is a graduate of Amherst College, which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] might be pleased to know is the college of such eminent leaders as he has acknowledged, former Senator Morrow and Calvin Coolidge. Upon completion of his college work Mr. Raushenbush became a member of the faculty of Dartmouth College.

The allusion to the thought that Mr. Raushenbush might be a leader in the cause of socialism prompts me to say that Mr. Raushenbush has been invariably registered as a Republican, as his father, his grandfather, and his great grandfather had been registered as Republicans. I assume, however, that the record is such as makes it very clear to some Republicans that Mr. Raushenbush is not their kind of a Republican.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves the Dartmouth exhibit I want to add a word in testimony in the Senator's time.

When it became necessary for the committee to choose an executive agent, we all realized the tremendous suspicion and pressure to which he ultimately would be subjected. I for one was particularly anxious to search out the credentials of the man to whom we should submit this great responsibility.

At the request of the committee I inquired into Mr. Raushenbush's credentials, at Dartmouth College in particular, to which the Senator from North Dakota has just adverted. I desire to state for the RECORD at this point in the Senator's observations that President Ernest M. Hopkins, of Dartmouth College, gave Mr. Raushenbush his unqualified endorsement as a reliable, worthy, patriotic, effective, useful servant. The testimony of President Hopkins is quite adequate for my purposes in respect to any critical propaganda which may now be addressed against Mr. Raushenbush.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator for that sort of interruption.

Mr. Raushenbush has never been affiliated with the Socialist Party.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before the Senator leaves that point, if he will permit me I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan, in view of his very conscientious service upon the committee, whether or not in his judgment, in the labors of Mr. Raushenbush and his staff, he has in every particular lived up to the high recommendation given to him by President Hopkins?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to answer?

Mr. NYE. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can testify without reservation that every recommendation made by President Hopkins has been justified. In my own rather critical and somewhat conservative judgment respecting this man, I can assert without reservation that he has done a superb and conscientious and effective piece of work which is completely beyond any possibility of legitimate criticism.

Mr. NYE. I do not know that it reflects for a moment upon a man to have been recommended and forwarded to high position or to a position of authority by the present administration, yet we were led to believe the other day that Mr. Raushenbush was one of the "new dealers." The insinuation was clearly meant that undoubtedly Mr. Raushenbush had been placed in his present position and capacity, as directing force of the munitions committee, by administration heads. If there is any of that thought, I feel it my duty to say to the Senate that he was not recommended by any department of the present administration, but that he was chosen outright by the committee after conference with him.

Mr. Raushenbush did not foist himself upon the committee. When the commitee finally indicated that it would employ him and wanted his services, Mr. Raushenbush went out of his way to forewarn the committee concerning some things which might arise concerning him and his record and his work which might prove embarrassing to the committee. He leaned backward, as I have said, to forewarn the committee of what consequences might follow were he to carry on this work. We made it very clear to Mr. Raushenbush at the time that whatever his writings or records in other days might have been, the committee felt it was able to exercise its own judgment when findings were laid before the committee and to draw its own conclusions. But throughout the months which have followed his engagement there have been constant threats, constant underground thought that something terrible was going to be revealed concerning Mr. Raushenbush which was going to be embarrassing to the committee which had employed him.

If there are those who are fearful that Mr. Raushenbush is one who has fastened himself upon a Senate committee and who has foisted his radicalism, as some like to call it, upon the committee, I want to say that Mr. Raushenbush has not been nearly as radical as some members of the committee have felt inclined at times to be in the conduct of the investigation and in the submission of reports to the Senate. As a little example, some days ago the committee gathered to give consideration to the final draft of a report on the shipbuilding industry which had been long in the making. The record is such that I have been impressed with the shipbuilding industry as being a no. 1 racket, a program of racketeering which rivals any that the country or its people have ever witnessed.

I was intent upon writing into the report language that would call a spade a spade, if it be of any interest to the Senate; and members of the committee will bear me out when I say that Mr. Raushenbush was the one who cautioned against an attitude of that kind, was the one who urged a conservative, straightforward statement of facts to constitute the committee's report upon its study of the shipbuilding industry.

The committee—and I say this as its chairman—is ready to stand by the report that was made; a report which the Senator from Iowa charges was written by Mr. Raushenbush, a man whom we ought to investigate and know more about. The committee is standing by its report, which on today or tomorrow will be laid upon the desk of every Senator. I do not believe any Senator can read the report and gather from it any such conclusions as the Senator from Iowa evidently intended to cause Senators to draw.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has indicated that the committee is a unit with respect to its report. I wish he would permit me to add a word of testimony in his time. Although there are partisan Republicans and partisan Democrats upon the committee, I think there has never been a single moment in the 15 months of our labors when there has been the slightest division of any kind or nature in respect to the objective to which we have addressed ourselves. The committee has moved with a unity which utterly rose above any political consideration at any moment and which indicated the extent of the clean devotion which was dedicated to the task in hand.

Out of that sort of unity not only comes the report to which the Senator from North Dakota adverts, with the unanimous support of the committee, but also out of that unity comes a complete agreement with everything the Senator from North Dakota is saying in respect to the character and services of Mr. Stephen Raushenbush.

It is none of our business what his particular economic views may be in respect to situations which are not involved in our labors. Our problem, and the problem which the Senator from Iowa was discussing, is the problem whether Mr. Raushenbush has rendered patriotic, able service in respect to this great enterprise. I desire to say again that, in my judgment, the Senator from North Dakota is justified in quoting the entire and unanimous committee in asserting that Mr. Raushenbush is entitled to every compliment which the Senator now pays him. Few public servants, in my observation, have been more loyal, more industrious, more earnest, or more conscientious in dedication to a specific and difficult and even hazardous task.

Mr. NYE. I feel all too inadequate in my ability to pay the kind of tribute that ought to be paid to a man who has made the sacrifice that Steve Raushenbush has made to carry on in the splendid work he has done for the committee and for the Senate; and, of course, that statement includes the splendid staff which he was instrumental in naming to associate with him and with the committee in the conduct of the investigation. There is one thing that has not yet been said about Mr. Raushenbush. There is one thing that has not been charged or even insinuated, and never will be, and that is that Mr. Raushenbush was in the pay of or under any obligation to shipbuilders or to munition makers of any category.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to add to what the Senator from North Dakota has said that so far from ever having sought to impose on the committee his political views of any kind of character, Mr. Raushenbush was so sensitive, and so fearful that his own political views might possibly be embarrassing to the committee, that after an early meeting of the committee, in which it was agreed by all the members of the committee that if we really began to develop the facts and draw the blood we thought was possible in this situation the members of the committee and all its staff might well be prepared to be shot at from cover from every possible angle, Mr. Raushenbush waited on me at my office to tell me that he had engaged in some acrimonious political controversies in the way of an exposure of the Power Trust in a book which he had published some years before, and which had been very much criticized by the agents of the Power Trust.

I told Mr. Raushenbush I had read that book and had voted for his selection as the investigator of the committee in the knowledge of the book which he had written. He then told me that he had written some articles on socialistic theory which had been criticized from various quarters. I stated to him what I believed to be the sentiment of the entire committee—that we were not hiring him for his political views; that we were employing him as an investigator of facts; and that so long as he continued to develop the facts in the manner in which the committee desired it done, without fear or favor on any hand, we should be entirely satisfied with his work, and that when he did not we should fire him.

I desire to bear out what the Senator from North Dakota has said—that in my judgment no investigator connected with any Government activity in my lifetime has rendered higher, more efficient, and more patriotic service with greater self-abnegation than has Mr. Raushenbush in this investigation.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not desire to intrude upon the Senator's time, but there is one further exhibit which ought to enter the RECORD before the Senator leaves his summation of Mr. Raushenbush's previous activity.

I desire respectfully to suggest that when the World War broke out, immediately upon Mr. Raushenbush's graduation he enlisted at Allentown, Pa., in the Army Ambulance Corps attached to the French Army and was among the first 10,000 volunteers to reach France; that his company was attached to the Fourth French Army in the Champagne; and that he has four engagement stars and an honorable discharge, which ought to count for something when the propagandists start to shoot from cover and from ambush at a man of this patriotic character.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, no committee has ever had more reliable, more unselfish, more devoted cooperation than has been afforded the Munitions Committee by Mr. Stephen Raushenbush. As a member of the committee, I can say now that all conceivable effort to discredit him is not going to alter my confidence in him nor, I believe, the confidence of other members of the committee; yet on day before yesterday, with the submission of the committee's report on the naval shipbuilding industry, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] at once reflected upon the report by charging in his own way that it was in part prepared by one with large socialistic inclinations.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator from North Dakota know any member of the Committee on Munitions who signed the report who is not standing 100 percent back of the report both as to the allegations of fact and as to the conclusions to be drawn from those allegations?

Mr. NYE. There is no such member of the committee, and I am sure every member of the committee will be perfectly willing to stand upon the record of the report paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. Raushenbush is charged with writing the report. No one is going to deny that he has had a large hand in preparing the report; but I wish to say that the real writers of this report on the shipbuilding industry are the shipbuilders themselves, and that this report concerning them is a report based upon their words, emanating from their own lips when they were sworn and testifying before the committee. The report is written from letters and communications that were theirs, among one another, and with departments of Government, during these hours when they have been bent upon looting Uncle Sam to the last red penny that is his.

In all fairness, I think the Senate, in the light of what was done day before yesterday, should have the brief findings which are incorporated within the report read and made a matter of record in the Senate, and then the question asked following each statement, "What is there about this that constitutes socialism?"

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. To what does the Senator refer when he says "in the light of what was done day before yesterday"?

Mr. NYE. I am referring to the address of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] day before yesterday, reflecting upon Mr. Raushenbush, who was employed by the committee to coordinate and direct its investigation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not hear it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Iowa not only reflected upon Mr. Raushenbush, but he reflected upon the Munitions Committee and upon the report which the Munitions Committee had filed on that day, because, apropos of nothing whatever, in connection with an entirely separate matter—the discussion of the farm-tenant bill—the Senator from Iowa saw fit to lug in the question of some early writings of Mr. Raushenbush, and to say that the report of the Munitions Committee, filed on day before yesterday, should be read in the light of some magazine expressions of Mr. Raushenbush some years before.

Mr. NYE. And it should be noted that through the winter there has come, at times, word that the Senator from Iowa was planning to do precisely what he did on day before yesterday.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to read, paragraph by paragraph, the findings of the committee as embodied in its report submitted to the Senate on day before yesterday. These findings are as follows:

In submitting this preliminary report on naval shipbuilding, the committee wishes to emphasize that it is interested mainly in two things.

The first of these is that the naval defense shall be provided for without profiteering or collusion.

Is that socialism?—

The second of these is that the national necessity for a purely defensive Navy shall not be confused with the private necessity of the shipbuilders for continuing profits as a consequence of the present close interdependence of the Navy Department and these private shipbuilders.

I ask again, is that socialism?—

The Navy is an instrument of national policy. Its growth and activities are watched abroad and take part in changing the foreign policy of other nations. Such changes work back to reshape our own national policy. The growth of a navy contains within it the seeds of armament races and wars as well as the legitimate seeds of a purely defensive national life insurance.

Does this in any sense constitute socialism?—

Because of this fact the naval shipbuilders are in a different position from road or building contractors who may move in on a Government, hungry for "plunder", as one shipbuilder's lobbyist described a naval appropriation. These private shipbuilders are part of the private system of national defense which has grown up. Their activities ultimately have a bearing on our foreign policy.

Does that statement within the committee's report constitute any degree of socialism?—

Whenever the Navy becomes closely tied up to private shipbuilding interests and asks for and is dependent on their support either in the securing of appropriations or in the construction or designing of necessary ships or in the crippling of our foreign policy, a dangerous and delicate situation has been created, and one which the country should go to full lengths to avoid and stop.

The technical developments of the present years are rapidly making the armaments of this Nation, particularly in regard to naval vessels and naval aircraft, approach those of European countries in their effects. In Europe almost every major defensive weapon can be used offensively, and is regarded by other European nations as a distinctly offensive weapon. With recent developments we are rapidly approaching that situation ourselves.

Is an expression of that kind in any sense socialism?—

This is an additional reason for providing for a cessation of any dependence by the Navy on those who may be primarily interested in their own profits and who may be unscrupulously glad to be in a position where they can wrap the flag around those private interests.

I suppose there are those who will call that in a sense socialism, but if it is, then let it be socialism.

Congress must never allow the people of this Nation to let themselves be confused between the actual needs of the country in national defense and the needs of the private shipbuilding and supplying interests for continuing profits.

The record of our shipbuilders in the war, in the post-war period, and in the days from 1927 on, before and after the cruiser program was begun, has not been an entirely pleasant or wholesome story. Some of them are certainly not above suspicion of willingness to wave the flag or to circulate war scares in the plain and simple interest of their own pocketbooks, regardless of results.

It is clear that these results are not to be trifled with. Mr. Eugene Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, questioned on the possible effect of another war on western civilization, testified:

"I should think it was possible to destroy it; if not in its entirety, certainly in its effectiveness. Just an anticipation of it is too terrible even to think of" (galley 74 VW, Feb. 26).

With these possible results in mind, it is clear that the private shipbuilders should very definitely be policed in any and all moves made by them or through them to confuse public-defense needs with their private profits, or should be cut off entirely from the building of ships for the Navy.

Is that socialism, I ask?—

The committee is not unmindful of the naval race prior to the World War between England and Germany and the self-interest part played in it by Krupp and other steel interests and their Flottenverein. It is not unmindful of the fact, demonstrated in that naval race, that few elements of international competition can be used more effectively to scare other people into building larger fleets and spending more money on them than a navy which has clearly outgrown the purposes of national defense. The committee is not unmindful of the part played by Vickers and the Electric Boat Co., an American company, in such a naval race in South America in the early twenties. (See vol. 1, Committee Hearings.) It is not particularly impressed with the thought that companies which have engaged in this sort of activity, or in the business of trying to make the United States Government remit just taxes or to pay admittedly exorbitant claims, are exactly the right people to allow to hang around very close to the powder keg of international relations.

If it were clear that the rush and pressure of the shipbuilders and their associated subcontractors and suppliers toward a constantly growing navy had resulted in savings and economies to the Government in the construction of these cruisers and other naval ships, a case might be made for allowing them to live as close to the danger zone as they do now. While the evidence is not all in, the indications are, on the contrary, that the private yards cost the Government from one to two million dollars more per cruiser than the navy yards.

I. AGREEMENTS ON NAVAL BIDDING

Specifically, the committee finds, under the head of Agreements on Naval Bidding:

The Navy has become a big business. It is one of the largest governmental contractors in the world.

During the years 1933 and 1934 it gave out to private companies contracts totaling over $180,000,000.

The committee heard 9 companies, 67 witnesses, largely on the subject of these contracts. It spent 38 days, and took 4,036 pages of testimony.

The committee finds that the evidence indicates clearly that:

(1) In most cases the Navy wishes work to begin as soon as possible. The result of this is that there is often not time to prepare designs, let alone examine figures or to analyze the bids put before it by private companies.

(2) The rush has made it impossible for the Navy to use its own navy yards as current up-to-date yardsticks of private bids. The navy yards do not even know such essentials of the bids of private yards as the speed guarantees or oil guarantees until after the private bids are opened.

(3) The Navy has never examined the underlying costs or profits of the private builders. It makes no pretense of doing this. It has no staff for it. The figures studied by the Munitions Committee were all news to it.

The Navy makes no attempt to examine the costs of the private companies to determine whether the profit limitation of 11.1 percent in the Vinson-Trammell Act is enforced or evaded. That is left to the Treasury to do after 3 years, after a job is done.

(4) This rush, this lack of staff, this lack of acquaintanceship with the strange ups and downs of bidding by the private companies on the part of the Navy, leaves the Navy at the mercy of the shipbuilders. A series of bids are put before the Navy, and the Navy has to take the low one, and the taxpayers have to hope and pray that the low one is somewhere within a few million dollars of being reasonable and proper.

(5) The evidence presented to the committee showed that in 1933, on contracts worth $130,000,000 to the private shipbuilders, there was no hard-hitting competition among equally desirous bidders able to take on the work: On the aircraft carriers, worth $38,000,000; on the two light cruisers, worth $24,000,000; on the heavy cruiser, worth $12,000,000. There was no competition of that character on the heavy destroyer leaders, worth $30,000,000, nor on the light destroyers, worth $18,000,000. On the submarines there may have been honest competition, but one competitor possessed all the patents and would not tell the other company how much those patents would cost them. That is the way $130,000,000 worth of work was given out in 1933.

(6) From 1927 on, when the cruiser program started, the record is the same. If there was no collusion, there was a sympathetic understanding among the big companies of each other's desires.

If there were no conversations about bidding among them, there was telepathy.

In 1927 the shipbuilders made profits of 35 and 25.4 and 36.9 percent on the cruisers. That was too good to spoil by hard competition. In 1929 the Navy asked for bids on two cruisers. Not one of the "Big Three" yards obliged. They bid on 1 each, and got 1 each. Their profits on these were around 22 percent.

The record is the same in 1931.

(7) In 1933 two shipbuilders knew and wrote down lists of the low bidders weeks in advance of the time the bids were opened. Mr. Bardo was one of them. Mr. Wilder was another. Mr. Bardo admitted discussing his desires for certain ships only with his two main competitors.

(8) The fact that many bids are submitted by shipbuilders does not mean that there is real competition. It does not mean lower prices. In fact, quite the contrary is true. When there is lots of work to go around the charges go up. The shipbuilders know that the Navy feels it has to have the ships, and they raise the prices. They admitted this frankly.

Do these conclusions and these admissions constitute any degree of socialism?—

II. EXCESSIVE PROFITS

The committee finds, under the head of Excessive Profits, that the profit figures on the only naval vessels on which such figures are available were 35 percent (Newport News, 2 cruisers); 36.9 and 33.4 percent (New York Ship, 2 cruisers); 25.4 and 21.8 percent (Bethlehem Shipbuilding, 2 cruisers); 23.1 percent (aircraft carrier Ranger, Newport News).

III. PRICES INCREASED WITH BIG NAVY

The committee finds, under the head Prices Increased with Big Navy, that the need of the Navy for many ships in 1933 was the main cause for the increase in prices charged by the private shipbuilders, and that they frankly admitted this, and that the Navy recognized the fact.

"Q. They (the shipbuilders) were frank enough to say they were putting up prices because of the great amount of work at the time?—A. (Admiral Robinson.) There is no question about that."

IV. NAVY YARDS AS YARDSTICKS

The committee finds, under the head of Navy Yards as Yardsticks, that preliminary studies show the cost of building cruisers in navy yards to have been $2,116,304 lower than in private yards in 1927 and $1,569,090 lower in 1929. It also finds that in 1933 the low navy-yard estimate was $1,122,000 below the lowest private-yard fixed-price bid and $5,351,000 below the highest fixed-price bid. It also finds that the navy-yard estimates on the cost of building light destroyers averaged $1,240,459 lower than the average bids of the private yards and $943,460 below the lowest private-yard bid on a fixed-price basis.

The committee finds, further, that Navy officials have been transmitting to congressional committees figures on comparative costs of private and navy yards showing the profits on a privately built ship, the cruiser Chester, as $983,000, whereas the New York Shipbuilding Corporation informed the Munitions Committee that its profit on this cruiser was $2,946,706.

I suppose there is socialism in disclosing the different testimony which has been offered congressional committees by shipbuilders.

The committee finds, further, that the opposition of the private shipbuilders to navy-yard construction has been intense, reaching the point where the vice president of Newport News thought it better "to kill the Navy bill entirely" than to spend part of it in navy yards.

The committee notes the language used concerning a naval appropriation in 1931 by the Washington representative of Bath Iron Works:

"I understand the morning after the (appropriation) bill went through every east coast yard had its representatives in Washington with their tongues hanging out and all teeth showing ready to fight for their share of the plunder, and the only thing that stopped the west coast yards from being here was the fact that they couldn't come bodily by telegraph."

V. THE NAVY'S DEPENDENCE ON PRIVATE YARDS

The committee finds, under the head of The Navy's Dependence on Private Yards, that at present light cruisers, aircraft carriers, light destroyers, destroyer leaders, and submarines are being built largely or entirely from the plans drawn by private companies, and that there are very definite disadvantages to a system in which the Navy has to depend on private companies for such an important part of the national defense.

The committee notes the awareness of several of the shipbuilding companies of the fact that the Navy is completely dependent on them for this work.

The committee notes the statement by Commander E. L. Cochrane:

"The Navy's developments of 15 years were handed to the Electric Boat Co. on a silver platter, so to speak, on the conviction that it was desirable to keep at least one commercial company in the submarine game * * *."

And also notes the statements of Sun Shipbuilding officials, who wanted to build submarines, that they could not find out what the Electric Boat patents would cost them prior to entering a bid. The committee finds this apparent monopoly an unwholesome and unsatisfactory situation, especially in view of Electric Boat Co.'s foreign connections.

I am going to depart from reading this report sufficiently long to make a statement about the Electric Boat Co. They possess the patents essential to the construction of submarines. They sell them to every manufacturer on earth who will pay for them, including those engaged in shipbuilding in lands most apt to be our foes some day. However, the same Electric Boat Co. which enjoys from the Navy the large favor referred to by Commander Cochrane, absolutely declines to sell its right to manufacture under its patents to any other American manufacturer because that would destroy the monopoly which is theirs in supplying the Government's submarine requirements. It might very well be said here that Mr. Raushenbush and members of the committee, having been instrumental in revealing these facts, would square off in the estimation of the shipbuilders as being dangerous reds, radicals, Communists, and Socialists, as we were led day before yesterday to believe might be the case.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator have any information as to whether the Electric Boat Co. offered the patents which it had to the Federal Government in the way of purchase? Did it offer to sell those patents to the Federal Government?

Mr. NYE. Off-hand I could only say that I have no recollection of any information of that kind being developed. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] can give the information.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, what is the question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I asked whether the Electric Boat Co. had ever offered to sell its patents to the United States Government?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. There was never any suggestion in the testimony before our committee that the Electric Boat Co. had offered to sell its patents, and in view of the careful investigation and the grilling which the Electric Boat Co. officials received I feel very confident that if any such offer had ever been made it would have been brought to the attention of the committee, because they brought everything to the attention of the committee which they could bring in palliation of the very grave offenses proved against them.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know nothing about the case. I am simply asking for information. I wonder if the Federal Government ever expressed a desire to acquire the patents which the Electric Boat Co. had.

Mr. NYE. I am not mindful that they have ever made known any such desire.

Mr. TYDINGS. The reason I asked those two questions is that, of course, if the Federal Government did not want to buy the patents, it strikes me that the Electric Boat Co., aside from patriotism, looking at it in a commercial way, might want to utilize the patents and sell them to anyone who wanted to buy them, and, of course, if the Federal Government had wanted to buy them and the company refused to sell, that would make the case much worse than if the Federal Government did not want to buy them.

Mr. CLARK. It was developed in the evidence, as I definitely recall, that the Navy's own experts had participated in the development of some of the improvements in some of the Electric Boat Co.'s patents, which were later licensed to be sold to foreign countries.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can easily see how that would be proper, Mr. President. I do not mean that it was in this particular case. However, I do not wish a wrong construction to be placed on that evidence. For example, I can see how they might go along with some improvement, and pretty well establish that it was fundamental, and knowing that the Navy or Army or Coast Guard might be interested, they might ask some of the service experts to pass on some things or make suggestions which would make the improvement fitting for the Government to use thereafter.

I do not interject these questions to decry what the Senator from North Dakota is saying, but insofar as we now have the facts I do not want a wrong inference drawn, which at first occurred to me, namely, that the Federal Government might have wanted the patents and was not able to get them. I understand from the Senator from North Dakota that so far as that phase is concerned it was not brought out before the committee.

Mr. NYE. I think the Senator from Maryland will be interested in a brief revelation of an experience had by one of his constituents. If I am not mistaken, the Sun Shipbuilding Co. is a Maryland corporation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Which one?

Mr. NYE. The Sun Shipbuilding Co.

Mr. TYDINGS. We have a Sun Shipbuilding Co., I remember.

Mr. NYE. Of all those who appeared before our committee when we were investigating the shipbuilding industry I wish to say that few men have come with cleaner hands and finer records than the executives of the company which has its home in the Senator's home State. However, the Sun Shipbuilding Co. desired to participate in the bidding on contracts for the building of submarines. They sought diligently to ascertain from the Electric Boat Co. what the Electric Boat Co. would charge them for the use of their patents and their designs. They could not even get a quotation from that company. In spite of that, without knowing what they might be charged for those patents, the Sun Shipbuilding Co., out of a thorough and patriotic desire to see competition in that field, put in its bid. I think the record clearly reveals that the mere existence of that bid, and of that company's bidding, did afford a degree of competition which was keenly to be desired.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will permit another interruption, I may say that heretofore on the floor of the Senate I have called attention to some of the bids made by the shipbuilding companies, I think in the case of some destroyers. So far as I know it has been almost the universal rule that no shipbuilding is ever permitted in Maryland. It seems the bids are so worded that even though a Maryland company is low on one bid or high on another or in between on another, it cannot secure a contract. I have always felt that shipbuilders in Maryland, who have built as many ships as have been built in any other State in the Union, from the old Boston clippers down, are not given the business by reason of the broad wording of the bids. Although I have no evidence to support it, it seemed to me it was not desired that the Maryland companies should engage in that business. I am sorry to say—I have no facts to support it—that it seemed to me that some of the Government officials almost went that far. The bids of the Maryland companies in one or two cases warranted some of the work being given to them, but, under the blanket clauses and also because of the wording, we never secured any of those contracts. I have always been at a loss to know why we could not build ships as cheaply in Maryland as elsewhere, because the bidding seemed to indicate that we could.

Mr. NYE. The committee has been impressed, as the Senator from Maryland seems to be impressed, with the thought that there is much favoritism displayed, and much bulwark afforded against serious competition being had in the Navy's shipbuilding program.

I go back to the report, which has been alluded to as a bit of socialism written by men who were "boring from within."

The committee finds further that a very considerable delay followed the allocation of $238,000,000 of P. W. A. money to the Navy in 1933, and that a large amount of this was due to delay in the planning work by these shipbuilding companies which had contracted to do this part of the work for the others and for the navy yards. The committee notes that this delay took place in spite of pledges by all shipbuilders to begin work as soon as possible for the benefit of the unemployed.

The committee finds, further, that while the Navy is dependent on the private shipbuilders for ways and plans, the private shipbuilders are dependent on the Navy for special favors, and have received a considerable number of them. Most notable among these are the adjusted price contracts of 1933 and 1934, the failure to use the navy yards as yardsticks, the failure to make itself independent of the private yards in planning work, and the Navy's opposition to profit limitation in 1934.

The committee finds indications of the use by the Navy of the shipbuilders as a lobby for its interests.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the committee's findings running through pages 6, 7, 8, and 9 in the printed report may be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

Those who are intent upon locating the items of socialism in the report will have it in the RECORD and may more readily ascertain how large a degree of socialism is involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

VI. INFLUENCE AND LOBBYING OF SHIPBUILDERS

The committee finds, under the head of Influence and Lobbying of Shipbuilders, that the Navy contractors, subcontractors, and suppliers constitute a very large and influential financial group.

The committee finds that three big shipbuilding companies had $53,744,000 of work at stake in the Geneva Disarmament Conference which the Navy had given to them a few months before the opening of the Conference in 1927. It notes the admitted interest of the companies in the unfavorable outcome of that Conference. It notes Mr. Shearer's testimony that he was urged to go to the Conference by Admiral Pratt and was supplied with secret Navy information. It notes the secrecy of his employment by the shipbuilders, and the explanation for that secrecy. It notes his activities in the promotion of a war scare with England in 1928 and 1929, while being paid by the shipbuilders. It notes certain discrepancies between testimony given by the shipbuilders at the Shortridge hearings and the hearings of the Munitions Committee. It notes Mr. Shearer's claim that "as a result of my activities, eight 10,000-ton cruisers are under construction." Further, that owing to the failure of the tri-power naval conference at Geneva, there is now before the Seventieth Congress a 71-ship building program costing $740,000,000. It notes Mr. Shearer's further testimony of his activities at the request of various naval officials. It notes his description of his Geneva campaign as "fast and vicious." It notes his report at the "delight" of the shipbuilders at the result. It notes the payment by the shipbuilders of the costs of a pamphlet he wrote attacking certain private citizens, including Newton D. Baker and Franklin D. Roosevelt. It notes the payments he received from Mr. Hearst of $5,000 in 1929. It notes the spreading through a friendly newspaper syndicate of an alarmist story concerning alleged Japanese intentions by the president of the Bath Iron Works, with the intent and result of activity by a Senator and Representatives from Maine in connection with an appropriation bill in 1932.

The committee finds, on the basis of this and other testimony, that there is a clear and definite danger in allowing self-interested groups, such as the shipbuilders and their allied interests, to be in the close position of influence, as they are at present, to such an important instrument of national policy as the Navy is, and the danger in allowing them to remain in a position where it is to their financial interest to confuse public opinion between the needs of the country for a purely defensive navy and their own continued needs for profits.

The committee finds, further, that there has been a large amount of bipartisan political activity on the part of the shipbuilders locally, in Congress, and also at the national headquarters of the two parties. It makes no claim to have gone into this field thoroughly. The committee notes the claims of the Washington representative of United Drydocks in 1934 that he could get a bill through Congress for $50,000, and that "there is no virtue in being quixotic at this state." It notes the placing of Congressmen on certain committees at the request of the shipbuilders. It notes their claim to have helped the Navy on certain bills and to have elected Members to the House Rules Committee. It notes the reference to United Drydock Co. securing through Dave Hogan, secretary to Mr. McCooey, prominent Brooklyn Democrat, the award of $6,800,000 in destroyers in 1933.

The committee finds that the matter of national defense should be above and separated from lobbying and the use of political influence by self-interested groups and that it has not been above or separated from either of them.

The committee finds, further, under this head, that the main lobby for the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 was conducted by the shipbuilders under the leadership of Mr. Laurence R. Wilder, then president of American Brown Boveri (New York Shipbuilding Co.), and that a sum of over $140,000 was spent in putting that bill over.

The committee finds further that New York Shipbuilding Co. was acquired as a speculative investment by the Bragg-Smith-Cord interests just prior to the 1933 naval awards; that the present owners are not experienced shipbuilders and have since tried to divest themselves of the ownership, and that it is not a satisfactory situation to have such an important part of our potentially necessary national defense in the hands of people who are willing to sell it to the first bidder. Speculators and speculation should have no place in our national defense.

The success of the shipbuilders in securing an allocation of $238,000,000 for shipbuilding from P. W. A. funds has been their most recent demonstration of power. In this their purpose was aided by labor groups who later, when the expected employment failed to materialize, spoke of the matter as a "double cross" to the Navy officials who had solicited their support for the measure.

VII. ATTEMPTS TO LIMIT PROFITS

The committee finds, under the head of Attempts to Limit Profits, that the failure of the Navy Department to turn the navy yards into effective yardsticks by which the charges of private shipyards could be measured and kept down has resulted in leaving the profits of the shipbuilders practically uncontrolled.

The committee finds that the Vinson-Trammell bill of 1934 limiting profits to 11.1 percent of cost cannot be enforced without a huge police force of accountants, and that disputes concerning its interpretation, similar to those which delayed the payment of war-time taxes by the companies for 12 years, may confidently be expected.

The committee finds that the Navy's grant of adjusted price contracts in 1933 with limitations on the amount of risk the Government assumed for the benefit of the shipbuilders, and in 1934 without any limitation on the Government burden for increased costs, has resulted, in effect, in cost-plus contracts. It finds these cost-plus contracts more profitable than the war-time contracts, when only a 10-percent profit over cost was allowed.

The committee finds that in the case of the 1934 adjusted-price contracts on light cruisers, destroyer leaders, light destroyers, and submarines the Government has assumed all the risk of increasing prices and has lowered the risk for which the companies received 11.1-percent profit by an enormous amount.

The committee finds that the Navy, which has no responsibility for enforcing the act, and which has no reliable figures about private costs, is in a position to allow—and according to one company has actually allowed—increased overhead charges, which can invalidate the whole attempt by Congress to limit profits. The committee notes that it was by the allowance of such theoretical overheads during the war years above actual overheads that New York Shipbuilding Corporation was paid $2,152,976 more by the Government than it actually paid out itself.

The committee finds that the shipbuilding industry and its subcontractors and suppliers have united in efforts to find ways to avoid the incidence of this law, and that Mr. Gillmor, president of Sperry Gyroscope, Navy suppliers, told them, "If the shipbuilders, boiler manufacturers, and electrical manufacturers act in accordance with uniform rules, it will be so strong I think the Income Tax Bureau will have a hard time resisting it." The committee notes the unreliability of the shipbuilders' figures, as indicated by the wide differences between their war-time reports and the audits of those reports by the Treasury (sec. VIII). It notes also in this matter of reliability the recent discrepancy of almost $2,000,000 out of a profit of $2,900,000 in the reports furnished by the New York Shipbuilding Co., passed on by the National Council of Shipbuilders and circulated recently among congressional committees by Navy officials. It also notes in this matter the evidence tending to show that the Bath Iron Works transferred an item of $60,000 incurred on a lighthouse tender to the costs of the destroyer Dewey.

The committee finds that there is no enforcement of the profit-limitation law in effect until 4 years after the beginning of a cruiser. It finds, from war-time experience (sec. VIII), enough evidence of the difficulty of auditing thousands of old vouchers and of properly allocating overhead, which the companies may have improperly saddled onto Navy vessels, to declare that there is no effective profit-limitation law today.

It finds the price of real enforcement of the attempts of Congress to limit profits to be a costly policing force of accountants and auditors who would be in the yard for at least 3 years, and a series of costly lawsuits after those audits have been completed. It finds that the only way to prove that a company had not improperly allocated overheads from commercial jobs onto Navy jobs would be to audit all the commercial jobs being done by a private yard as well as the Navy work; in short, to audit all the work done by the yard and to establish uniform accounting.

The committee questions whether this additional cost for auditing and policing, plus the cost of lawsuits after such audits, on top of the one to two million dollars extra cost of private construction, and the $300,000 spent by the Navy for inspection of the privately built cruisers, justify the continuance of private yards as naval contractors. They have the appearance of being expensive luxuries.

The committee reserves decision on this phase of the matter until the completion of its investigation of the costs of governmental construction.

VIII. WAR-TIME ATTITUDE OF SHIPBUILDERS

The committee finds, under the head of War-Time Attitude of Shipbuilders, that the record of the present shipbuilding companies during the war, wherever examined, was close to being disgraceful.

They made very considerable profits. On Treasury audits they showed up to 90 percent. They secured cost-plus contracts and added questionable charges to the costs. They took their profits on these ships after the war-time taxes had been repealed. They secured changes in contract dates to avoid war taxes. They bought from the Government, very cheaply, yards which had been built expensively at Government costs. In one case this was prearranged before the yard was built. One yard did not build necessary additions until it was threatened with being commandeered. Knowingly exorbitant claims were filed against the Government for cancelation. Huge bonuses were paid to officers. Profits were concealed as rentals.

After the war was over keels for $181,247,000 worth of destroyers were laid, which was probably the largest post-war favor done by any Government to any munitions group.

The committee finds no assurance in the war-time history of these companies to lead it to believe that they would suddenly change their spots in the case of another war.

After the committee's hearings on shipbuilding had closed, Gen. Hugh Johnson, at one time connected with the War Industries Board, later with B. M. Baruch, and later Director of the National Recovery Administration, explained that the N. R. A. had grown out of the plans developed by the War Department for the conduct of a future war. It was, he stated, developed directly from the war plans and was not shown to the industrialists for their approval until practically completed. In view of this statement, the committee finds significance in the testimony of a Department of Labor official concerning the unwillingness of the New York Shipbuilding Co. to observe the N. R. A. rules, with the result of a serious labor dispute in 1934. The company did not raise the question of constitutionality, and all that was involved was the question of observance or evasion of the law.

The committee finds in this evidence, taken together with the actual war-time experience of the Government with these companies, little hope for obedience by them of more stringent war-time provisions in the case of another emergency.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. After listening most attentively to these factual statements, based upon the exhaustive investigation from the report of which the Senator has read, and having read the remainder of it myself, I am prompted to refer to a situation developed by the Federal Trade Commission in its investigation of the power industry, which seems to me to be absolutely in point with the attack made by the Senator from Iowa upon the factual report of the special committee and upon Mr. Raushenbush personally for his participation in it. It was some time ago that I heard this incident referred to, and, therefore, I will have to rely upon my memory, and I will have to paraphrase what was said, as I remember it. As I recall the incident, the manager of a subsidiary of a public-utility holding company in the State of Iowa who was confronted with a fight upon the issue of municipal ownership in his community wrote to someone higher up in the chain of companies above him to ask for arguments to meet the statements and arguments which were being advanced by the proponents of municipal ownership in this particular campaign. He received a letter from the individual in the superior corporate structure to the effect that it was not worth while to debate the issues or to meet the facts with facts but that all that would be necessary, in order to win the contest, would be to denounce as Bolsheviks the supporters of the municipal ownership campaign in his community.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator. If those who read fail to discover any elements of socialism in the findings of the committee, perhaps they might want to consult the recommendations of the committee to prove their case. The recommendations are very brief; they are contained within the report to which I have been referring, and I read them:

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The committee postpones its final recommendations on the problem of removing or rendering harmless to the public interest the close interdependence of the Navy and the financially interested shipbuilding interests. The final report on this subject will be rendered immediately upon the completion of its study on Government costs in private and navy yards and on the cost of purchasing necessary private yards for public use.

In the interval the committee recommends an unusually strict reporting of the activities of all the representatives of the shipbuilders and allied interests. This is contained in section 2, paragraph 3, of the attached bill.

2. In the matter of collusion and profiteering, the committee recommends the immediate adoption by Congress of the following bills "to prevent collusion in the making of contracts for the construction of naval vessels in private shipyards, to safeguard military secrets of the United States, to make public the activities of the shipbuilding lobby, and for other purposes", and to prevent profiteering in the construction of naval vessels in private shipyards.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, if those recommendations and the reports on the two bills which follow them, and which I ask to have printed in the RECORD, lend themselves to any such case as the Senator from Iowa tried to make on the floor of the Senate day before yesterday, I shall be much surprised. I ask to have the pages which follow the extract I have read inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(S. 3098)

The main purpose of the first bill (S. 3098) is to prevent collusion by the shipbuilders and to prevent their taking advantage of the Navy.

It does this by directing the Comptroller General to examine the navy-yard estimates and the private-yard estimates and bids before the Navy makes any awards. He is directed to analyze them on the basis of past bids and estimates and on the basis of the bids and estimates of all other companies and navy yards. (The studies of the Senate Munitions Committee on this subject are in this way to be utilized, maintained, and made permanent by the Comptroller General.) He is charged finally with the duty of recommending to the Navy whether bids shall be readvertised or not before any awards are made by the Navy Department.

This bill includes a provision for the registration of shipbuilding lobbyists and a statement of their income and expenditures. It includes a provision forbidding the sale abroad of naval inventions for a period of 5 years. It includes a provision to make the Navy independent of the private shipyards in the matter of designing and planning.

The committee recommends the adoption of all of the provisions in this bill as urgent and necessary to the public interest.

A copy of this bill (S. 3098), introduced June 19, is printed below as part of the committee's recommendations.

(S. 3099)

The main purpose of this second bill is to prevent profiteering.

It is provided in this bill that the Navy shall be allowed to pay to private shipyards a premium of no more than $500,000 per cruiser, $1,000,000 per aircraft carrier, or $300,000 per destroyer or submarine over and above the cost of building such a vessel in navy yards.

The committee believes that this is an adequate premium to pay to the shipbuilders, subject to its further studies of Government costs.

Since the Navy Department has at present assumed most of the risk of the shipbuilding industry in the form of adjusted-price contracts, and since the Vinson-Trammell Act was based on the assumption of risks by the industry instead of by the Government, the committee recommends that whenever the Government assumes the risk the profit be cut in half, i. e., to 5 percent instead of 10 percent of the total cost to the Government. The idea of having the Government assume all the risk of increasing prices for labor and material and in addition pay a profit of 11.1 percent on top of cost is preposterous.

This bill provides, therefore, that whenever the Government assumes all or a share of the business risk, as it does in the adjusted-price contracts of 1933 and 1934, that the shipbuilders, instead of being allowed a 11.1-percent profit, as they are under the 1934 act, be allowed only one-half of that amount.

A copy of this bill (S. 3099), introduced June 19, is printed below, as part of the committee's recommendations.

3. The committee recommends further that Congress refuse in any way to weaken the provisions of the profit-limitation bill of 1934, but, on the contrary, strengthen them as much as possible.

The bills containing the constructive recommendations of the committee to effect these results were approved by the committee, and are as follows:

"[S. 3098, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

"A bill to prevent collusion in the making of contracts for the construction of naval vessels in private shipyards, to safeguard military secrets of the United States, to make public the activities of the shipbuilding lobby, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That no vessel, the commencement of which is authorized by the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes', approved ———, 1935, or by any subsequent act, shall be built in any private shipyard unless (1) the Navy Department shall have prepared, prior to the advertising for any bid therefor, estimates of the cost of construction of such vessel in each of the navy yards; and (2) such private shipyard shall have agreed that all books, records, memoranda, documents, correspondence, and papers of such shipyard and of its subsidiaries and affiliates shall be subject to examination, during the usual hours of business, by representatives of the General Accounting Office and/or of the Navy Department. The word 'subsidiary' as used in this subsection means any person, corporation, trust, or business unit over whom or over which such private shipyard has actual or legal control, whether by stock ownership, contractual relation, or otherwise; and the word 'affiliate' means any person, corporation, trust, or business unit who or which has actual or legal control over such private shipyard whether by stock ownership, contractual relation, or otherwise.

"SEC. 2. No part of any appropriation made by such act of 1935, or by any subsequent act, shall be expended under any contract hereafter entered into with any private shipyard unless the bid of such private shipyard, upon the basis of which such contract was entered into, has been certified to by the Comptroller General as (I) fair, reasonable, and not excessive in amount, and (II) lower than any bid that could reasonably be anticipated upon readvertisement for bids. Such certification shall recite that it has been made after due consideration by the Comptroller General of (1) the Navy Department's estimates of the navy-yard cost of construction of the vessel covered by such bid; (2) estimates and reports prepared by the Navy Department and by the Comptroller General of the costs of construction in navy yards and in private shipyards of similar vessels; (3) previous bids and estimates made by private shipyards for similar vessels; and (4) the likelihood of changing costs of construction during the period of construction contemplated by such bid. Nor shall any part of any appropriation made by such act of 1935, or by any subsequent act, be expended under any contract with any private shipyard unless the Comptroller General shall, prior to each payment under such contract, certify that such shipyard has complied with all applicable provisions of the act of March 27, 1934 (Public, No. 135, 73d Cong.), and of all similar acts hereafter enacted, relating to repayment of profits, insofar as previous contracts of such shipyards with the United States, or of any agency thereof, are concerned; and as a basis for such certification the Comptroller General shall cause examinations to be made of the books and records of such shipyard relating to actual costs of construction of the vessel or vessels built by such shipyard pursuant to such previous contracts, and such actual examination of such books and records as is made shall be recited in such certification.

"SEC. 3. No part of any appropriation made by the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes', approved ———, 1935, or by any subsequent act, shall be available (1) for payment to any contractor of the Navy Department which sells, or in any way imparts, to any person not in the employ of such contractor or of a subcontractor thereof, any design, plan, patent, machinery, or other equipment used by the Navy Department at any time prior to 5 years after the first use thereof by the Navy Department; (2) for expenditure under any contract with any private shipyard unless such contract, and each modification thereof, shall have been approved by the Comptroller General; (3) for payment to any contractor of the Navy Department unless such contractor shall have filed with the Secretary of the Senate on July 1, 1935, and on each succeeding July 1, a list containing the names of all officials, agents, and representatives of (a) such contractor, (b) all subcontractors engaged by such contractor in the performance of any contract with the Navy Department, including insurance companies and insurance brokers, and (c) any association of which such contractor is a member or of which such subcontractors are members or to which such contractor or subcontractors contributes or contribute, who during the preceding year have interviewed, whether in person or by telephone, or corresponded with any Member of Congress or any employee or relative of any Member of Congress or any officer of the Navy or any official or employee of the Navy Department or of any other Government department or agency upon the subject of legislation relating to naval, military, or merchant marine matters, or upon the business of such contractor or of such subcontractor, such list shall contain statements of the subjects of such interviews and correspondence, the total compensation, itemized by sources, received by each such official, agent, or representative during the preceding year from all sources, the itemized disbursements of such official, agent, or representative, including itemized statements of amounts expended for entertainment or for the benefit of any Member of Congress, or of any employee or relative of any Member of Congress, or of any naval officer or of any official or employee of any Government department or agency. The Navy Department shall also file on January 1 of each year with the Secretary of the Senate a list of the names of all officials, agents, and representatives of any private shipyard, and of any subcontractor, including any insurance company or broker, of any private shipyard, which has submitted to the Navy Department a bid for the construction of any vessel, who have interviewed, whether in person or by telephone, or corresponded with any officer of the Navy or with any official or employee of the Navy Department with respect to the legislation or to the business of such shipyard, or of such subcontractor, during the preceding year; such list shall contain statements of the subjects of such interviews and correspondence and shall include detailed accounts of all entertainment or benefit received by naval officers and by officials and employees of the Navy Department from any such official, agent, or representative; all such lists shall be published annually in full by the Secretary of the Senate as a Senate document; and (4) for payment to any private shipyard for plans and designs for vessels, whether as a part of the contract price for construction of a vessel or otherwise.

"SEC. 4. There shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Navy from the appropriations under the caption 'Increase of the Navy' in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes', approved ————, 1935, such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the establishment in the Navy Department of a section of design and planning which shall prepare the plans and designs for vessels constructed by or for the United States; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such technical assistants, clerks, and employees, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, and to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and technical services in the Navy Department and in the field, and for drafting and other supplies, printing and binding, books of reference, and periodicals), as he may deem necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section: Provided, That, notwithstanding any other provision of this section or of such act of 1935, the President may by Executive order expend all or any part of the appropriations made under the caption 'Increase of the Navy' in such act for the expansion of existing navy yards.

"[S. 3099, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

"A bill to prevent profiteering in the construction of naval vessels in private shipyards, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That no vessel, the commencement of which is authorized by the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes', approved ————, 1935, or by any subsequent act, shall be built in any private shipyard unless such private shipyard shall have agreed to build such vessel for an amount not greater than the Navy Department's lowest estimate of the cost of construction of such vessel in a navy yard plus (a) $500,000 in the case of a cruiser, (b) $1,000,000 in the case of an aircraft carrier, and (c) $300,000 in the case of a destroyer or of a submarine; and unless in the contract for such vessel, except in the case of a fixed-price contract, such private shipyard shall have agreed (A) to pay to the United States Treasury all profit in excess of 5 percent of the total amount of the contract covering such vessel, such excess profit to become the property of the United States, and (B) to insert a like clause in all subcontracts, whether of purchase or of construction, in excess of $10,000 made by such private shipyard in the performance of such contract."

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, if those who have been interested in preparing this report, including Mr. Raushenbush and members of the committee, have been "boring from within", as the Senator from Iowa seems to like to put it, I am going to refer him to certain pages of the committee's report on the shipbuilding industry to ascertain just who it is who is "boring from within." It is the shipbuilders; it is their lobbyists; it is those who have attached themselves to important and influential departments of the Government to help the shipbuilding interests gain the ends which they want so much to accomplish. Boring from within! Let the Senator from Iowa but refer to pages 305 and 306 of the committee's report, which deal with the political activities of the Electric Boat Co. in order to accomplish their ends.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I suggest that the Senator have those pages inserted in the RECORD at this point?

Mr. NYE. I think I made reference to the pages as being 305 and 306 of the committee's report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am suggesting that the Senator have those pages of the committee's report inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point so that the Senator from Iowa will not even have to take the trouble to go back and read the committee's report, but it will be right there in the RECORD for his information.

Mr. NYE. That is an excellent suggestion, and I ask unanimous consent that the pages referred to may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(y) Some indication of the interest of the Electric Boat Co. in political activities is given in the following exhibits:

EXHIBIT No. 198

[Copy]

NOVEMBER 5, 1932.

Mr. W. H. PUTNAM,
Chairman Republican State Ways and Means Committee,
Room 49, Allyn House, Hartford, Conn.

DEAR MR. PUTNAM: Please pardon my delay in replying to yours of October 19, which has been due to my absence. You are correct in thinking that I am very much interested in the election of Senator Bingham, as I feel that failure to send him back to the Senate would not only be an enormous loss to the State but to the Nation as a whole. I have been working actively in his behalf, and have reason to believe that as a result he will receive some 1,500 votes more than would otherwise have been the case.

I am enclosing my check for $50 as a contribution to your fund, which is additional to other contributions. I am sorry that I cannot make it more, but in these days of severely reduced incomes and greatly increased demands this is the best I can do.

While I was very nervous about the outlook a few months ago, I now feel that we are reasonably safe so far as Connecticut is concerned.

Very truly yours,

(s) L. Y. SPEAR.

EXHIBIT No. 181

ELECTRIC BOAT CO.,
HIBBS BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1928.

Mr. HENRY R. CARSE,
President Electric Boat Co., 11 Pine Street, New York City.

DEAR MR. CARSE: Successfully managed campaign for candidate Rules Committee, which is most important to us when any legislation is up.

Brought in some Western States, New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, and Michigan in Fort case, and New Jersey, Michigan, New York, Illinois, South Dakota, and Pennsylvania in Martin's case.

Candidates successfully elected to Rules Committee: Hon. Joseph W. Martin, Jr., Massachusetts; Hon. Frank Fort, New Jersey.

The Rules Committee is the most important committee in Congress. It absolutely controls legislation.

Thanking you, with kind regards, sincerely yours,

A. J. JOYNER.

EXHIBIT 183

MARCH 11, 1929.

Mr. HENRY R. CARSE,
President Electric Boat Co., 11 Pine Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. CARSE: Now that the session of Congress is closed and our legislative activities are temporarily held in abeyance, it is a pleasure indeed to report to you and to the board of directors that all of our legislative efforts have borne fruit.

The cruiser bill is passed; the submarine appropriations have been passed; and as I sincerely promised you the day we lunched together in New York, we did manage, after overcoming a number of handicaps and jumping some hurdles, to get the second deficiency bill through, and in doing so we succeeded in getting our claim through, and we expect to receive payment at 2 o'clock this afternoon or early tomorrow morning.

Members of the Navy Department have seen fit on several occasions lately to not only write but to personally express their appreciations and congratulations on the success of such parts of the program as we were directly interested in and for the help we gave the Navy Department. I am not prepared to write you, however, I shall be glad to verbally tell you what really happened with reference to the deficiency bill, and the part this office played in getting the bill through. I absolutely and positively believe, and feel safe in making the statement, that if it had not been for actions taken in this office on the day before the bill was passed, and the day the bill was passed, that the second deficiency bill would have gone over until next session; or, in other words, until the special or extraordinary session, which is called for the 15th of April.

My reason for not putting this in writing is out of respect for those who helped, and who were so powerful and friendly. The code of honor between men makes it unethical to name persons. However, my words and belief stand, and today we have succeeded again in having our claim and papers and certificates moved up ahead of over three-thousand-some-hundred other claims, and inasmuch as our claim is the very largest, you can quite readily understand the Treasury Department would naturally hesitate at any advancement, particularly at this time when there is a threatened deficit. There is no question but what the situation could have been maneuvered for the next 3 months because of the right of the Treasury Department to recheck and check, audit, and do a number of other things, which, while they are not doing it in our case, they are actually engaged in doing so in a number of cases.

Our designs are meeting with approval. Our advice and specifications are being received favorably, and, generally speaking, little is left to be desired up to this time, except that all-important part, the actual signing of any contracts that we might receive.

With good will and a friendly attitude existing in the Army and Navy, in Commerce and the Shipping Board, and the Treasury Department, and a good will does exist, which is true, as is the statement of pleasant friendly relations, we may well feel that a brighter future has opened up for this company, with less sales resistance, and pleasant hours free from the past worries and cares.

In the final, the writer wishes everyone in the organization, without exception, to feel and to know that all have played a part in loyalty, kind considerations, and cooperation, and that they are entitled to share the pleasure and delight in a final victory, and in my humbleness desire to express my sincere thanks to all.

Sincerely,

(Signed) STERLING J. JOYNER.

(Electric Boat hearings, part 1, Sept. 4, 5, and 6, 1934, hearings, pp. 289 and 290.)

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, then the Senator from Iowa will want to read again from pages 258 and 259 of the committee's report, which deal with the question of lobbying. From those pages he will secure further information as to who it is that is "boring from within" in the shipbuilding industry. I ask that those pages may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

C. LOBBYING—GENERAL

A great deal of political activity on the part of the shipbuilders was never or rarely put into printed form. The great banking or industrial interests behind the shipbuilding companies were not investigated in relation to their political influence or activities.

Certain bits of information on the subject were secured which are given, with testimony, below. They indicate a far greater activity than has so far been brought to light. Some evidence on the matter is continued in the investigation into the air-mail and ocean mail contracts, by the special Senate committee under the chairmanship of Senator BLACK (hearings under S. R. 349, 72d Cong.).

During the Senate munitions hearings several of the shipbuilding companies employed the same representative to aid them, paying him a total of $8,400. He also represented other munitions companies, including du Pont, Remington, and Curtiss-Wright, and received from these a total of $7,563.

New York Ship's activities included doing missionary work on the Navy appropriation bill; waving the House majority whip; beating certain sections of bill; and keeping officials under obligations to us (see galleys 54–55 GP, Jan. 23, Witness Humphreys).

The private shipbuilding companies have all been in politics to some extent. New York Ship's representative was interested in the reelection of Representative Britten, former chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, and others (see a). New York Ship also asked that the Congressman from Camden be put on that committee (see b). The method of publicity welcoming an investigation while privately killing it is described (see c). Interest in Tammany men in New York City is indicated (see d). The contradiction between testimony concerning lobbying given in the Shortridge hearings and the actual activities was brought out (see e). Influence was brought to bear through Mayor Hague, Governor Moore, and others in the method of stopping a possible P. W. A. loan to Gulf Industries, a competitor in the 1933 bidding (see f). Mr. Manning, of the Cord Corporation, testified that it was quite a job to take any business out of politics that sells anything to the Government (see g). Mr. William F. Kenny, an important political figure in New York City, was on the board of New York Ship, representing the Brady utility interests (see h). Mr. Wilder, former president of the predecessor company of New York Ship, and head of the lobby for the Jones-White bill, testified, "So it goes down the long history of the thing, the political power used to force the Navy to do things that it itself would not do. I feel that the Navy is in a vice, controlled by these three big yards" (see i). Mr. A. P. Homer, when connected with the Democratic National Campaign Committee, made a special plea to the shipbuilders (see j). In 1922 and 1923, a brother of the Secretary of the Navy was employed by New York Ship (see k). The president of the National Council of Shipbuilders and the president of United were at the same time using influence at the Republican National Headquarters (see l and u). Mr. Andrew W. Mellon's interests in the Bethlehem Co. was discussed (see m). The United States Steel subsidiary, Federal Ship, considered the Cord interests, which acquired New York Ship in 1933, "well connected" in Washington (see n). Mr. Newell, of Bath Iron Works, was questioned concerning the use of political influence and correspondence with the President's secretary referred to favors done for one of the President's children (see o). Bath Iron Works was solicited for subcontracts by a Member of Congress serving on the Merchant Marine Committee (see p). Mr. Newell, of Bath, spoke of contracting politicians in Maine (see q). United's interest was discussed at length, including the relationship of Mr. Powell, president of United, with then Representative Prall (see r). The use of local community influence to move a destroyer to United was brought out (see s). Mr. Powell's explanation of the rental agreement with Representative Prall is given (see t). In connection with the 1933 awards a reference is made to the securing of two destroyers for $6,800,000 through Dave Hogan, who was identified as secretary to Mr. McCooey, a prominent Brooklyn Democratic leader (see v).

The Washington representative of United, Mr. Malone, in 1934 wrote of being able to get out a 50-tanker appropriation for $50,000 (see w), and pointed out "there is no virtue in being Quixotic just at this stage." Mr. Malone explained this as a "case of sort of wishful thinking." The statement in a Kiplinger letter that the shipbuilding industry "depends on political pull, favoritism, back-scratching to get subsidies", and so forth, was commented on by Mr. Lambert, of Westinghouse, "while it has considerable truth in a number of the statements made, it seems to me a rascally thing to write and broadcast loose statements of this kind * * *" (see x).

Some of the Electric Boat Co. letters show an intense political activity and a kind of reciprocity with naval officials (see y).

The private yards have all been in politics to some extent.

(a) New York Ship's interest was indicated in part by testimony on April 5 (galleys 99 and 100 WC).

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. There are just a few letters I would like to have Mr. Bardo identify. Did you get this letter from Mr. Foster, concerning the reelection of Mr. Britten? Can you identify that [handing paper to witness]?

"Mr. BARDO. I can identify the signature. The signature is all right.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. That is his signature?

"Mr. BARDO. Yes, sir.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. He writes there about the interest—what is the date of the letter, Mr. Bardo?

"Mr. BARDO. July 8, 1932, Senator. I do not recall the particular letter, but this is his signature all right.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. He says [reading]:

"'Today I ran into Jim Barnes up on the Hill.'

"Mr. Barnes represented what company?

"Mr. BARDO. Todd Shipbuilding.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. Anybody else? How about the Aluminum Co.?

"Mr. BARDO. No.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH (continuing reading).

"'He is very anxious to talk to you about the hard time Fred Britten expects to have in getting reelected this year, also about several others who are likewise in difficulties. He only mentioned Britten's name.

"'I suggested that he write you, but for some reason he thought it best that I pass the word along so when you were next in Washington he might discuss the matter with you.

"'My impression is that he wants some financial support along the lines I spoke to you about some time ago, namely, to give active campaign support to merchant-marine friends in Congress who are expecting to find rough competition this fall. His fear is that should there be a Democratic landslide, their opposition to subsidies in any form would work against the present Jones-White Act and hamper prospective legislation pending to aid private operators.

"'ADDISON G. FOSTER.'

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. I offer that letter for the record.

"(The letter referred to was marked 'Exhibit No. 1905.')"

(b) "Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. A little earlier in the matter, Mr. Bardo, we find a letter from you to Mr. Tilson, asking that the Representative from Camden, Mr. WOLVERTON, be put on the Naval Affairs Committee. Do you remember that [handing paper to witness]?

"Mr. BARDO. That is correct.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. Was he put on?

"Mr. BARDO. I do not remember. What is the date?

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. It is 'way back; 1926.

"Mr. BARDO. I think he was. That was his first time in Congress. He asked me to write a letter, because I happened to know Mr. Tilson very well, and I think he was put on.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. I offer that letter for the record.

"(The letter referred to was marked 'Exhibit No. 1906' and is included in the Appendix on p. —.)"

(c) At a time when New York Ship was attempting to have its taxes lowered from an assessment of $14,500,000 to $5,705,000, the figure finally agreed upon, the company officials considered the possibility of a congressional investigation (Jan. 21, galley 33 GP).

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. I show you, Mr. Parker, a letter from Mr. Bardo, concerning what seems to be this tax matter. Will you look at that and see if you have ever seen that before? [Handing paper to witness.]

"I would like to read that, Mr. Chairman. It was dated about the time that these taxation matters were taking place, December 23, 1927, and while it mentions some costs of governmental ships, the Saratoga and the Lexington, it also refers to the tax matters. [Reading:]

"'I have just received copy of House Resolution No. 55, introduced by Congressman McClintic December 13, copy of which is attached hereto. I had a short talk this morning with Judge Parker, who stated that on your return from Washington you had requested that certain information be developed by Mr. Parker with the thought of inviting the investigation referred to.'

"Mr. Parker, is that you, or is he referring to Judge Parker? Do you know?

"Mr. PARKER. I assume he means me.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH (continuing reading):

"'Publicly, of course, we could not say other than that we welcome an investigation. Privately, we want to use every honorable means to see that the investigation is not started and that the resolution referred to dies a natural death in the Committee on Rules, to which it had been referred.

"'There is altogether too much dynamite in a congressional investigation, and we are altogether too vulnerable from the standpoint of political attack to leave anything undone which will forestall the investigation. We have troubles enough with our tax situation and our new high-speed line development without having the waters muddied up by a congressional investigation, the effect of which would be harmful either to ourselves or to the industry as a whole.

"'Who can say what statements Admiral Capps, for instance, if he were called before a congressional investigation, might make with respect as to what he regards as inefficiency and the lack of proper administration of the yard? He made these charges in one of our conferences. If he made them before a congressional committee, we never could catch up with the story, and it may well be that we will be confronted not only with our tax situation but in addition by a resolution from Congress asking somebody to investigate all of these things which obviously would be dragged out in an investigation of this kind.

"'I expect to have a conference with Congressman WOLVERTON on Wednesday next.'

"That is the Congressman from Camden, is it not?

"Mr. PARKER. Yes, sir.

"Mr. RAUSHENBUSH (continuing reading):

"'The names of the House Naval Affairs Committee and the House Rules Committee are shown on the attached list.

"'Personally, I am strongly opposed to any encouragement of this investigation for the reasons which I have generally outlined.'

"Does that bring to your mind at all what activities were being carried on in connection with this very tax-matter business?"

The taxes from 1922 to 1925 were settled without audit within one-half hour (exs. 1242, Jan. 21, galley 33 GP).

Mr. NYE. Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa will want to refer, I am sure, to the interest which his very good friend and leader, Mr. Everett Saunders, displayed in this game of "boring from within", and with reference to that I will refer him to page 273 of the committee's report to the Senate, which I ask may be incorporated in my remarks at this point.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will not the Senator read that page?

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Nebraska would like to have that read. Before reading it, it should be noted that the Mr. Saunders referred to is Everett Saunders who had been rather prominent in the party of the Senator from Nebraska and myself.

Mr. NORRIS. He was private secretary to the President of the United States.

Mr. NYE. He was private secretary to the President of the United States, and then he was later associated with the Senator from Iowa in the Republican national headquarters at Chicago in the most recent Presidential campaign.

The reference in the report which the Senator from Nebraska wanted referred to in a more definite way is on page 273, from which I read as follows:

(1) The political interest of another company, United Drydock, located in New York City, is indicated, in part, in a letter dated September 30, 1932 (galley 39 FS).

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Was that during the campaign?

Mr. NYE. This was during the campaign of course.

Mr. Raushenbush—

I am quoting now from the testimony before the committee—

Mr. RAUSHENBUSH. About this time, just as a matter of record, because the Du Pont representative introduced the subject a while ago, I have a letter from Mr. Powell to your Mr. Williams, dated September 30, 1932. [Reading:]

"Capt. ROGER WILLIAMS,

"Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.,

"90 Broad Street, New York, N. Y.

"(Naval appropriations file no. 8121.)

"This morning Gerrish Smith and I called on Mr. Ted Saunders at the National Republican headquarters in New York, and made an oral statement to him of the political effect on the employees of the private shipyards of the award of the three destroyers to navy yards and requested him to use his influence with the President to direct construction of the three remaining vessels in private yards. He was interested and asked that the statement be reduced to writing, which was done, and a copy of the statement is enclosed herewith. He stated he did not know whether his influence would have an effect on the President, but my personal impression is that he will try to have the President award these three vessels to private shipbuilders.

"I believe it would be very effective at this time if any Republican Congressmen or Senators that you can reach telegraph to Mr. Everett Saunders, care of Mr. Jeremiah Milbank, Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, and to the President, and if you would also wire Mr. Saunders so that he will know that it is the industry that is speaking.

"Gerrish Smith is off to Washington and asked me to write this letter in his absence.

"Very truly yours,

"(Signed) J. W. POWELL."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NYE. I gladly yield.

Mr. CLARK. In view of the fact that Mr. Raushenbush is a registered Republican, and, as I understand, has never voted any but the Republican ticket in his life, it would seem that in answering these questions Mr. Raushenbush was not "boring from within."

Mr. NYE. Quite so, and as one becomes acquainted with the record that has been made during the inquiry it is not difficult to understand, knowing the associations of the Senator from Iowa, why he would want to cast reflections upon the report of the findings which the committee investigating the munitions industry has submitted to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. NYE. If he and his kind have it in mind that they can frighten the committee to the point where they will dispense with the services of one like Stephen Raushenbush, who has played so large and so splendid a part in accomplishing its findings, they have another guess coming, I am sure.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I do not recall, Mr. President, whether it was in the report of the committee or not, but I am certain the Senator from North Dakota will recall the testimony before the committee, including the letter relating to an incident in which the New York Shipbuilding Co., whose bonds were all owned by Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, at that time Secretary of the Treasury, was involved. Mr. Mellon received a telegram from the president of the New York Shipbuilding Co. complaining bitterly that he had not been given the allotment in the construction of new vessels to which he thought he was entitled, and which he understood had been the agreement he was to have. He requested the Secretary of the Treasury to overrule the Navy Department and see that his own company should receive the allotment to which he felt himself entitled. That was also probably "boring from within."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what happened? Did he succeed in getting the allotment?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Mellon was more prudent than the president of the shipbuilding company, and his correspondence unfortunately was not preserved, but the fact developed during the course of the committee's investigation that he got the full allotment. We were unable to find Mr. Mellon's answer to the telegram of the president of the New York Shipbuilding Co., but that company got its cut.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is what the answer was?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That was a pretty good answer.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate not longer than 5 or 10 minutes in supporting the attitude taken by the Chairman of the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

In the brief time which I shall occupy the floor I begin by expressing regret that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has not seen fit to be present. I took the trouble to notify him sometime ago that the Senator from North Dakota was occupying the floor upon the subject of his attack from cover upon the report of the Munitions Committee on day before yesterday, and that upon the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota I expected to occupy a few minutes on the same subject.

As one member of the Munitions Committee who signed the report presented day before yesterday on the shipbuilding industry, let me say that the Senators who signed the report stand behind it 100 percent; that we challenge any contradiction of the facts adduced in that investigation upon which that report is based, and we are willing to debate the question of the validity of the conclusions drawn from the facts alleged at any time and at any place.

Let me say further that while the secretary of the committee, Mr. Raushenbush, naturally participated in the preparation of the report, as he had participated very actively and with very great ability and splendid patriotism in the investigation upon which the report was based, the members of the committee accept full responsibility for every line of the report, and do not either yield their responsibility or charge Mr. Raushenbush with responsibility for the report.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, when the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] was kind enough to yield to me, Mr. Raushenbush was so sensible of his own responsibility, so much interested in the scope of the investigation, so convinced that the investigation might serve a great purpose to the Nation and so anxious not to embarrass the success of the investigation, that he voluntarily came to me, and I understand to other members of the committee, and told us that his ancient fight on the Power Trust and some of his political writings might be embarrassing to members of the committee.

Members of the committee to whom these remarks were made told Mr. Raushenbush that we were not employing him on account of his private political views; that we cared nothing whatever about his private political views; that we were employing him for the ability which we believed he possessed as an investigator, and that so long as his conduct of the investigation was satisfactory to us he would be retained, and whenever it was not satisfactory he would be discharged and someone else employed.

In my opinion, there has never been an investigating official connected with any committee of the Congress or any other department of the Government who has proceeded with more intelligence, with more energy, with a greater spirit of self-abnegation, and with more signal success on a very small expenditure of money, than has Stephen Raushenbush.

Mr. President, we all knew when we started into the investigation that if we made it effective, if we drew blood, if we began to create sentiment in the country and abroad against this international racket, the committee would be attacked; that it would first be scoffed at; that if anybody could find anything against members of the committee their motives would be impugned, their character attacked, their bank loans would be called if possible, and anything possible would be done to embarrass the conduct of the investigation.

Mr. Raushenbush started on a very small salary, the limit we were able to pay him under the law, knowing full well what he was going into. The attack which has been made here on Mr. Raushenbush is simply in pursuance of that situation which he knew, and we all knew, would exist.

As a matter of fact, this was not the first attack which was projected by the munitions manufacturers on Mr. Raushenbush. The first attack, on which they got cold feet before they actually had the courage to go forward with it, was based on some alleged domestic affairs of Mr. Raushenbush.

I am sorry the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is not here. I desire to state for the RECORD that the Senator from Iowa, knowingly or unknowingly, is not the originator of this latest charge against Mr. Raushenbush and against the Munitions Committee. The Senator from Iowa is marching under the banner of that unspeakable scoundrel, William B. Shearer, generally known as "Big Drum" Shearer, the agent provocateur who received many thousands of dollars from the shipbuilding companies for going to Geneva to sabotage a disarmament conference and who, later, after denouncing the shipbuilding companies and threatening to expose them, threatening to kill one of the principal officers, after threatening personally one of the principal officials of the shipbuilding companies with a scandal greater than Teapot Dome, was later employed by the same shipbuilding companies to go up and down the country interviewing newspaper publishers, Senators and Representatives, undertaking to get up a war scare about Great Britain based on a fake report, which was claimed to be a secret report from the archives of the British Navy.

I am willing to acquit the Senator from Iowa of any deliberate knowledge that he was simply acting under the auspices of Mr. Shearer, who is still here on the pay roll, as was testified before our committee, of at least one shipbuilding company. I am willing to assume the Senator from Iowa did not know under whose direction he was proceeding. But I have in my possession a letter dated May 3, 1935, directed to "Hon. BENNETT CHAMP CLARK, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.," addressed to "Dear Mr. Senator", and signed by W. B. Shearer. Let me say that on receipt of this letter I filed it in its proper place, which was the waste basket. Then it occurred to me that it might possibly be useful at some later time in connection with this matter, so I dug it out and preserved it in my files and I am glad I did. The letter reads:

> DEAR MR. SENATOR: No one doubts that Senator GERALD P. NYE is a good American and that he realizes the importance of adequate national defense.

I am sure the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] will be complimented at this encomium from Mr. Shearer, the same man who in a previous letter wrote his employers, in that case the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., informing them that he felt justified in denouncing anyone who disagreed with him as a pacifist and as unpatriotic, the same man who referred to the present Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Claude Swanson, and to the present senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], to mention only a few, as being "dangerous radicals."

Continuing Mr. Shearer's letter:

> Writing in a book, the Socialism of Our Times, published in 1929, Mr. Raushenbush states, "The students coming from the colleges today can do something more than be filled with wholesome and cleansing indignation. They can be of enormous use to the (Socialist) movement, as Government officials. * * * One good man, with his eyes, ears, and wits about him, inside * * * can do more to perfect the technique of control over industry than a hundred men outside."

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that that is precisely the extract, including the elisions, used by the Senator from Iowa on the floor here day before yesterday.

Mr. Shearer continues:

> Who made Mr. Raushenbush chief investigator for the Nye committee?

Well, Mr. President, I am able to answer Mr. Shearer's question. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] made him the chief investigator. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] made him the chief investigator. The Senator from Idaho who now occupies the chair [Mr. POPE] made him the chief investigator. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who sits on this floor, made him the chief investigator. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and myself made him the chief investigator; and we did it after very careful examination. I may say cross-examination in the case of the Senator from Michigan and myself, because we got Mr. Raushenbush down here after the other members of the committee had tentatively agreed on him and cross-examined him for an hour and a half as to his ideas of conducting the investigation, and did not vote for him until we were thoroughly satisfied as to his qualifications.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. I think it might be well to inject the thought that no one on the committee who had a hand in appointing Mr. Raushenbush is apologizing for him at this time.

Mr. CLARK. I am exceedingly well pleased with the result of our selection.

Mr. Shearer continues:

> It would appear that Mr. Libby and Miss Dorothy Detzer, moving spirits and the master pacifists of the National Council for the Prevention of War, had something to do with it.

Mr. President, speaking for myself, I had never seen or heard of Mr. Libby or Miss Detzer at the time I voted for the selection of Mr. Raushenbush; but, having since become acquainted with them, I say without hesitation that I should very much prefer to have the recommendation of such public-spirited citizens as Mr. Libby and Miss Detzer, whether or not one agrees with them on a particular question, than to have the recommendation of an unspeakable scoundrel and hireling like William B. Shearer, the tool of the shipbuilding interests.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. I may add here that, while I am sure Miss Detzer and the gentleman named in Mr. Shearer's letter quite approve the splendid record Mr. Raushenbush has made, the RECORD ought to bear the information that Mr. Raushenbush was not their first choice for that place with the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Missouri may recall, as I think the chairman of the committee may recall—and I may say frankly—that at first I raised some question regarding Mr. Raushenbush's qualifications; that is, his fitness for the particular kind of work.

Mr. CLARK. That is perfectly true.

Mr. GEORGE. I am pleased to say that I have found Mr. Raushenbush at all times a very open-minded, straightforward agent of the committee, and he has performed for the committee a most valuable service. I think I should make that statement in justice to him.

Mr. CLARK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. Shearer goes on in this letter of May 3:

In the fall of 1934—

This apparently is an attempt to impugn the integrity and veracity of Mr. Raushenbush—

In the fall of 1934, and prior to the Senate's second appropriation for the Nye Committee's investigations, Mr. Raushenbush states that he had to borrow money to carry on the investigation. From whom did he personally borrow it?

Mr. President, of course I do not know that that is any of Mr. Shearer's business. I never heard that Mr. Raushenbush made that statement. I myself made the statement on the floor from information which I happened to have. While I think it is none of Mr. Shearer's business, I am glad to answer. Mr. Raushenbush advanced the $200 out of his own personal funds before the second appropriation, as members of the committee carried certain items of expenditures at the same time.

There is attached a copy of Mr. Raushenbush's insidious political philosophy as it appeared in full in the book entitled "The Socialism of Our Times." The book was edited by Harry W. Laidler and Norman Thomas and included contributions from such noted internationalists, pinks and reds, as Morris Hillquit, Roger N. Baldwin, Paul Blanchard, Soloman De Leon, Alexander Goldenweiser, Valdimir Karapetoff, Lewis Waldman, etc.

And I may say, Mr. President, that the mimeograph enclosure in Mr. Shearer's letter is precisely the same which was inserted in the RECORD on day before yesterday by the Senator from Iowa.

Raushenbush differs from the Bolsheviks merely in that he believes in "a boring from within" rather than a bloody revolution.

Raushenbush surely has, as master mind, "bored from within" on NYE.

Sincerely yours,

W. B. SHEARER.

Mr. President, both the motive and the method of this attack on the committee through Mr. Raushenbush are so obvious that I do not desire to waste time in further discussion of them. The Senator from North Dakota has indicated some of the activities disclosed and proven before our committee which might be well classified as "boring from within." I simply desire to say, so far as I am concerned as one member of the committee—and I think I speak for every member of the committee—that if the Senator from Iowa or any other Senator, or anybody else within or without this Chamber, desires to impugn the validity of the report of the committee, I invite them to come out from behind Mr. Shearer's smoke screen and meet the issue in the open by either attacking the facts which we have set up or the conclusions which we have drawn from those facts; and I can assure the Senator from Iowa and Mr. Shearer and everybody else that the members of the committee will be glad to meet them on those issues at any time and at any place, in this Chamber or without it.

INCREASE OF TAXATION

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I was hoping to get a little information from the Senator from Missouri—not that I should want anything told that would violate any committee confidence—if he has any information on the tax bill that we might know. I have been sitting around here for a day, waiting to find out what has happened to the bill, and if there is a bill, and what is the situation; and, not seeing the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I thought, perhaps, the Senator from Missouri might enlighten us, since he is one of the two Senators participating in the debate yesterday.

Mr. CLARK. It had not been my intention to discuss that subject. I may say to the Senator from Louisiana that the Finance Committee yesterday afternoon voted to have hearings on the proposed amendments to the joint resolution extending the emergency taxes; that the hearings were, by agreement, to start this morning at 10 o'clock; but upon the committee gathering this morning at 10 o'clock we were informed that the experts who had drawn the amendments and schedules, after working all night until 4:30 this morning, had been unable to prepare an explanation of what was in the bill which it had been proposed to report out of the committee on yesterday; and the committee is still waiting for the experts to be prepared to figure out what is in the schedules which we were asked yesterday to vote upon.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Do I understand that the experts are to wake up before the committee is to meet?

Mr. CLARK. I am unable to answer the Senator from Louisiana. I say only that the meeting has been postponed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Missouri was present when the committee met this morning.

Mr. CLARK. I was on my way around to the committee room when I discovered that the committee had adjourned about 2 minutes after meeting, on the ground that the experts were not prepared.

Mr. BARKLEY. I happened to be present at the time, and the chairman of the committee announced that it was understood yesterday that the Treasury experts who were to gather certain information as to the probable results of each schedule and each bracket in the amendments as prepared were first to be heard. Brief hearings were voted with the understanding that those who had participated in the conferences resulting in the framing of the amendments, who are ordinarily referred to as "Treasury experts", would be first heard in order that we might know as nearly as we could know how much money would be raised by the amendments which have been suggested. The Treasury experts did work until early this morning, and had not finished their calculations as to the amount of revenue so that they could report to the committee; and for that reason the committee took a recess. At that time, however, only one man had requested to be heard before the committee, and that was the Honorable Benjamin Marsh, who, no doubt, will be able to contribute very much information to the hearings on the subject.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to make it perfectly clear that I am speaking in no critical sense of the labors of the experts. The statement was made before the committee yesterday afternoon that the preparation of this measure had not started until 9 o'clock night before last, and the experts had worked all night, night before last, preparing the schedules and were necessarily present at the session of the committee on yesterday to receive their instructions, and worked again last night. Naturally I have no criticism of their activities in the matter, considering the fact that they started the preparation of the bill only after 9 o'clock night before last.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not mean to impute to the Senator any criticism of the experts; but he referred to the fact that we recessed in order that the experts might find out what was in the bill; and that sounded like a sort of half-compliment and half-criticism.

Mr. CLARK. I certainly do not desire to criticize the experts, in view of the pressure under which they necessarily worked. I do say that it is a rather anomalous situation to have the experts unable to report the morning after a very strenuous effort has been made by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Kentucky, and others to report the bill yesterday afternoon.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator, of course, understands that in every tax bill involving rates upon incomes of individuals, corporations, estates, and inheritances it is always difficult to arrive at anything like an approximate estimate of the amount of money that will be raised. That frequently happens after weeks of deliberation; and it is not strange that even after working all night even Treasury experts might find it impossible to get right down to brass tacks and know exactly how much in dollars and cents a bill is going to raise.

Mr. CLARK and Mr. VANDENBERG addressed the Chair.

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Missouri. Then I will yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CLARK. I simply wish to say that there is no quarrel between the Senator from Kentucky and myself. If we are to proceed in this way of getting up a tax bill after 9 o'clock one night and trying to report it out of the committee at 4 o'clock the next afternoon, I really think the most sensible thing to do would be simply to pass the rates in blank and authorize the experts, after they get together and hold a convention with themselves and figure out the items entering into that computation, to fill in the blanks.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator vote for such a bill?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CLARK. I would not; nor would I vote for this one, unless it received proper consideration and I had a chance to find out what is in it and upon what calculations it is based.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky for a little information for my own guidance. Can the Senator tell me whether it is still the plan to pass the tax measure by Saturday night, or has the program again been changed?

Mr. BARKLEY. Nobody has ever suggested that there was any command from anybody or any source that this measure was to be passed by Saturday night.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was not that the original announcement, after the White House conference night before last?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The newspapers were all in error in that respect?

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not see any such announcement, and I understand that no such announcement was made on the responsibility of anybody in authority.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Did not the Senator from Mississippi indicate on the floor that the nuisance tax joint resolution was to be used as the vehicle for these other taxes?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but there was no announcement, as I understand, that the joint resolution had to be passed by Saturday night. On the contrary, there was discussion as to how much revenue would be lost per day by the delay in the passage of the joint resolution for as much as a week, or any other number of days.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Did not that indicate very definitely that the whole thing had to be done by Saturday night?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it indicated that all possible speed was necessary, but not that the loss of a few days' revenue would be material, or that it would in any way interfere with the budgetary plans of the Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will permit me—I desire to be accurate——

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I am sure of that; so do I.

Mr. VANDENBERG. My understanding now is that it is all wrong that it was ever proposed to attach the new share-our-wealth taxes to the joint resolution extending the nuisance taxes and to pass the joint resolution by Saturday night.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator, as usual, is partly right and partly wrong.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is pretty good; I thank the Senator for the concession.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is still the plan to attach the amendments to the joint resolution, but there is no understanding that it has to be done by Saturday night. On the contrary, if the Senate Committee on Finance carries out its program as adopted yesterday, if anyone shows up outside of the one witness who has requested that he be heard, and hearings are held for as much as 2 days, beginning tomorrow, it will manifestly be impossible to pass the joint resolution by Saturday night.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, is it the plan to postpone the passage of the nuisance-tax joint resolution until these other taxes may be added to it?

Mr. BARKLEY. So far as I know, the taxes which will be offered as amendments will be attached to the joint resolution, and all of them acted upon together ultimately, when the Senate shall act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So we are still continuing, then, upon the theory that the whole problem is to be taken as a unit in the Senate, and the new share-our-wealth taxes—were they the taxes to which the Senator referred?

Mr. BARKLEY. "Share our burden" is the latest appellation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And God knows it is a burden!

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not be called on to carry any more than his share.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it the plan to continue, then, with the nuisance-tax joint resolution until these new income, corporation, and inheritance taxes are attached to it?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the plan of the Senate committee to report certain amendments which are now under consideration and offer them on the floor of the Senate to the joint resolution involving the extension of the excise taxes which have already been under consideration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And to hold the excise-tax joint resolution here until there is a settlement of the other question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have a few remarks to offer on the new tax matter. I was merely seeking information. I find my friend from Michigan and some of his well-meaning cohorts no doubt still befuddling the matter; and apparently, from what I have been learning today, there is no definite plan ahead, but apparently there is a definite bill which has pretty well been agreed upon. I would take it that the schedules of rates published in the newspapers is apparently what has been proposed by this measure. May I ask that of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is approximately correct. The Senator understands that there are three propositions involved.

Mr. LONG. I understand the whole thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Inheritance taxes——

Mr. LONG. Income and corporation taxes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Income and corporation taxes.

Mr. LONG. Yes; and gift taxes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And gift taxes. They are all in separate amendments and separate schedules, and I understand that those tentative schedules were given to the press and published in the morning papers. Of course, there has been no agreement in the committee on any rates. They were published largely for the information of the public, so that if anyone desired to request a hearing on them, he might do so if there were any protests to be made or any recommendations to be made. But so far as the committee is concerned, I will say to the Senator that no rate has been agreed to by the committee. The rates published were tentative rates suggested, and they are now under consideration.

Mr. LONG. Who suggested these rates?

Mr. BARKLEY. The rates were suggested after a conference of the chairman of the committee with representatives from the Treasury and representatives of the joint committee on taxation and a number of men who have had long experience in drawing tax bills.

Mr. LONG. The point I am getting at is this: This is the White House recommendation on the tax bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether it is the White House recommendation or not. I am quite satisfied it was not prepared at the White House.

Mr. LONG. I understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whether or not the White House has been apprised of these proposed rates or suggestions I am not informed. I have not conferred with anyone at the White House about it.

The Senator understands that the President in making his suggestions in his message, and, as I understand it, in conferences which occurred subsequent to that, has not taken it upon himself to suggest rates, but thinks that is a matter for Congress to work out.

Mr. LONG. That is just what I want to find out. I understand the contrary, and the public press understands the contrary, that the official administration bill is this particular bill which has been submitted to the committee, embodying the schedules of rates which have been published in the papers.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendments which are under consideration were prepared, as I have indicated, as a basis for the work of the committee. Somebody had to do it, and, of course, it was done under the supervision of the chairman of the committee, working with experts in the Treasury and others.

Mr. LONG. What I mean is that, as in the case of other administration bills, at least for the present this schedule would be the administration idea tentatively, I should say.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the idea really of the committee; that is, the chairman of the committee, who, of course, has more responsibility in the initiation of legislation than anyone else on the committee; and the chairman, after it was understood and decided that these amendments would be offered on the pending joint resolution, did what he, of course, ought to have done; he proceeded to try to work out some tentative schedules upon which the committee might work, but there has been no vote in the committee on any one of them.

ARE WE TO REDISTRIBUTE WEALTH?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would assume that at least for the present the so-called "schedules of inheritance taxes, gift taxes, income taxes, and corporate taxes" are at least those of the administration's recommendations or tentative recommendations to the committee. That would be assumed from the remarks of Senators as I glean them.

Let me say this to my friend from Michigan and to my friend from Kentucky, and to some of the members of the public press, about this schedule of rates. This is referred to as a "share-our-wealth" proposal. That is the designation given to it by many newspapers. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], following the statement which I see is attributed to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], referred to these schedules as "share-the-burden" amendments.

What the newspapers say is that the Treasury experts estimate or the administration experts calculate that this new bill or the new amendments embodying the four schedules will raise $340,000,000 a year. I look over the schedules with my more or less experienced tax mind, and I do not think they will raise $340,000,000, from my knowledge of some common business events. Nevertheless, I do not want to dispute any estimate that has been made, although mine differs considerably; but just accepting the estimate of the Treasury officials and of the experts of the administration, that this is supposed to yield $340,000,000, I wish to say that it does not comply top, side, nor bottom with the declarations contained in the message of the President of the United States.

The message of the President reads as though it were a share-our-wealth message. It contains all the clauses and all the expressions and all the declarations and all the prayers which those of us who are advocating redistribution of wealth have ever uttered. It would do credit to the share-our-wealth expressions of Daniel Webster, of Abraham Lincoln, of William Jennings Bryan, of Lord Bacon, and of any other scholar or student or government who has ever advocated redistribution of wealth. But when the administration bill comes in it can hardly be said to be kinfolk with the message of the President of the United States. The bill proposed is not a third cousin, it is not a fourth cousin, it is not a hundredth cousin to the message sent to us by the President of the United States.

I desire to read the kind of expression used by the President in his message. I am going to show by the figures sent to us by the Treasury Department that evidently someone is out of step.

Here is something I read from the President's message:

> In the modern world scientific inventions and mass production have brought many things within the reach of the average man which in an earlier age were available to few.

What is he talking about here? This is along the lines of what we have been advocating, that these good things which inventive sciences have brought within the reach of all should be shared by all. I read these clauses, much as they may be found in other documents which are placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> With large-scale enterprises has come the great corporation, drawing its resources from widely diversified activities and from a numerous group of investors. The community has profited in those cases in which large-scale production has resulted in substantial economies and lower prices.

Then I skip and read further:

> In addition to these three specific recommendations of changes in our national tax policies, I commend to your study and consideration a number of others. Ultimately we should seek through taxation the simplification of our corporate structures through the elimination of unnecessary holding companies in all lines of business.

That, I suppose, was in line with what I said on the floor of the Senate. At the time we had the holding-company bill before the Senate I said that the bill ought to be universal in its application. I said that it ought not only to apply to electric-light companies or to electric-power companies, but it ought to apply to every big corporation in the country, and I said there was no justification for leaving any large corporate structure out of the law prohibiting the existence of holding companies. I said so at the time the bill was under consideration in the Senate; and right today, if I were in charge of the House of Representatives, as this administration is, I should go over there and amend the holding-company bill so that it would not only apply to public-utility power and distributing companies but I would have it cover every corporation in the United States, because that is contemplated by the message of the President, and that is logical. If it is fair to prohibit holding companies in the field of electric distribution, it is fair and it is proper to prohibit them in all other fields of business, and it ought to be done. So here is another golden chance, which is about to fly out of the window, to comply with the recommendations of the President of the United States, which can be done without any serious debate on the floor of either House.

I wish to refer back in the earlier part of the President's message:

> Our revenue laws have operated in many ways to the unfair advantage of the few, and they have done little to prevent an unjust concentration of wealth and economic power.

I hope the Senate will catch the burden of these remarks contained in the message of the President:

> The movement toward progressive taxation of wealth and of income has accompanied the growing diversification and interrelation of effort which marks our industrial society. Wealth in the modern world does not come merely from individual effort; it results from a combination of individual effort and of the manifold uses to which the community puts that effort. The individual does not create the product of his industry with his own hands; he utilizes the many processes and forces of mass production to meet the demands of a national and international market.

Therefore, in spite of the great importance in our national life of the efforts and ingenuity of unusual individuals, the people in the mass have inevitably helped to make large fortunes possible. Without mass cooperation great accumulations of wealth would be impossible save by unhealthy speculation. As Andrew Carnegie put it, "Where wealth accrues honorably, the people are always silent partners." Whether it be wealth achieved through the cooperation of the entire community or riches gained by speculation—in either case the ownership of such wealth or riches represents a great public interest and a great ability to pay.

In other words, the ownership of wealth should be in the hands of the people, so says this message, and that is what is intended. I agree with that message. I not only agree with this message of the President of the United States but I agree with every other message and promise which the President has made on this subject since I have been paying any attention to his utterances along this line. I agree with the message which he gave out at Chesterton, Pa., or Chesterton, Md., I believe it was. I agree with the declaration and promise which he made at the National Democratic Convention at Chicago. I agree with the declaration which he made in Atlanta, Ga., before his nomination. I agree with the same declaration he made in San Francisco, Calif., and the same declaration which he made at Columbus, Ohio, and the same declaration which he made on the 5th day of May 1934, I believe it was, or the 12th day of May 1934, at the N. R. A. Congress, which was assembled here in Washington.

All these declarations have been to what effect? They have been to this effect: That wealth in the hands of the money masters and fortune holders of this country taxed into the people's hands, where it is in unusual, unhealthy quantities, and concentrated into few hands. It should be distributed into the hands of the people. That is exactly what it means. That is exactly what he says; and that is sound, that is fair, and that is the only thing which is going to save the country.

Now, it is said we are to have a bill for this purpose; and they send in that bill. What is it? The bill proposes to do what? Does it propose to distribute wealth? Let us see if it does. By the terms of the bill the sum of $340,000,000 per year is to be raised from this fund. Why, Mr. President, the interest alone on the debts of the American people paid to the money masters whom they owe is $24,000,000,000 a year. The interest alone is $24,000,000,000 a year.

There is that much surplus accumulation which goes into the hands of the men who are the holders of the obligations which the people of this country owe. It amounts to $24,000,000,000 a year. It will be $24,000,000,000 this year as it was last year and the year before. Talk about redistributing wealth when a tax bill is proposed here which, according to the Government's own claim, would yield $340,000,000 out of that $24,000,000,000 which the moneyed people are to gain in interest alone! According to the Government figures, as the holders of the obligations get $72 in interest this year we will make them kick back $1. That is what this bill provides on that one line alone. They gain $71 where they pay $1 in taxes.

The administration today is going in the hole at the rate of $3,000,000,000 per year. This year it will cost $3,000,000,000 in obligations which this Government has to issue and which will fall upon the unborn generations to come, to carry on the distress work we are now doing. Our national deficit this year will be $3,000,000,000. If the tax bill, which it is claimed will effect a redistribution of wealth, raises $340,000,000, we shall find it raises 10 cents every time the Public Treasury goes a dollar in debt. This entire tax bill would yield us 10 cents to offset every additional dollar deficit which the Government accumulates. In other words, instead of redistributing wealth, instead of currying down the big fortunes by this tax bill, we will have to get 90 cents more to add to the 10 cents raised by this tax bill before we will be even with the board on the amount of money which we are now spending.

One further illustration along that line. Three hundred and forty million dollars—it is not that much, but I am admitting it to be that much—$340,000,000, that is not as much money as this nuisance tax will yield in a year's time. These nuisance taxes yield $500,000,000 a year, and to have a whole lot of hubbub and flurry that we are enacting a great redistribution-of-wealth bill, when the whole thing put together will amount to just a little bit more than one-half of the insignificant nuisance tax schedule which is going through the Senate, is too preposterous and ridiculous to attract the attention of anyone seriously concerned in the fundamentals of giving opportunity to 125,000,000 people, instead of giving opportunity to a few hundred or a few thousand families.

I am not very much surprised to see confusion reigning over this proposal. I understand it came like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky to the administration and anti-administration cohorts in the Senate. I was one of the astounded persons when I heard this message being read. It was almost like a repentance which came from the tomb. It is almost, Mr. President, like being suddenly shocked into a realization of something that was too real to be believed, and I can naturally understand that some of my friends in the Senate and outside of the Senate, and that some of the wise elders of the public press, received this message with varied emotions. Some thought it a good thing. I did. Others thought it a questionable thing. Some were appalled at such a message coming from the President of the United States. However, when it came here I was, after a few moments, no longer abashed, for the reason that it was a restatement of what had been said at the Democratic National Convention. If I might be permitted, I will mention what was said by the President of the United States at the Democratic National Convention.

At the Democratic National Convention the President of the United States appeared on the platform for the purpose of giving his interpretation of the platform and dedicating himself to carrying out the purposes of the platform and the will of the Democratic Party. When he had reached the particular point of dealing with the immediate subject he said that the world was looking to us to provide a real opportunity so that the people of the United States might share in the distribution of the national wealth. The interpretation he put on our platform throughout the campaign was that we were dedicating our nominee to the proposal to share the national wealth among the people of this country.

Mr. President, here is an editorial, a part of which I am going to read. It appeared today in all the Hearst newspapers in the United States. It does me no credit, and seeks to do the administration less credit even than it does me. I read now from the New York American of Wednesday, June 26, 1935, page 2. The editorial is headed:

Kingfish swallows donkey.

[Laughter.]

There is no more amazing spectacle in the history of American politics than the present administration's capacity to gobble up ideas and plans that belong to other men and parties.

President Roosevelt having sunk the Democratic national platform from keel to smokestack, adopted and tried to put into practice the national Socialist platform.

The Supreme Court having told the President in no uncertain terms that socialism was one thing and the American Constitution another, President Roosevelt then blandly took over Senator HUEY P. LONG'S soak-the-rich and spread-the-wealth doctrine—a doctrine molded in the criminal brains of the leaders of the Paris Commune and sanctified in the brain of an oriental fanatic, Nicolai Lenin.

Just there, Mr. President, let me say, to begin with, that the share-the-wealth or spread-the-wealth or, if the editorial writer wants to term it such, the "soak-the-rich" doctrine was not the property, politically or otherwise, of Senator HUEY LONG; nor was it originated by Mr. Lenin; nor was it originated by the Paris Commune. For the benefit of those who inspired this particular editorial, let me say that the doctrine that wealth had to be redistributed came with the birth of man on earth. It did not come from me; it did not come from Russia. I repeat it came with the birth of the first man on earth. It came from the command and from the lips of the Creator of mankind; it came from the Lord; and any man and any set of men at this late day, particularly in view of the recent repronouncement of the President of the United States, who undertake to argue against the philosophy of the redistribution of wealth, if they want to blame some one for having been the particular creator of that line of logic, will have to blame it upon the One who gave mankind existence on earth. Not only do I say that Mr. Lenin and the Paris Commune were not the originators of this logic, but it will be found, Mr. President, let me say for the benefit of the editorial writers, in all the teachings of Socrates and of Plato and of Confucius; it will be found in all the works of Lord Bacon and in the lines of Shakespeare; it will be found in the lines of Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, Daniel Webster, Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and even in the words of Herbert Hoover, the last preceding President of the United States. The philosophy that the wealth has got to be redistributed and that a nation and the people of a nation cannot survive unless they redistribute wealth had its foundation with the birth of man and has had among its followers leading statesmen of America and of every other country; but there has never been a country that has been saved, assuming this one shall be saved, which has waited so long to bring about a redistribution of wealth. By that I mean to say that there has never been a country which avoided the chasm of wreckage that waited until wealth had become concentrated into so few hands as has been the case in America, and if America is to be saved it will be due to a speedy and actual redistribution of wealth to be effected in the United States.

A bill contemplating the raising of $340,000,000, I wish to say to the Hearst newspapers and to all other newspapers, is not a share-our-wealth bill. While it may have relationship to our program to the degree of one-fourth of 1 percent, as it has in this case, we would vote for the infinitesimal one-fourth of 1 percent and battle for the 99¾ percent in future campaigns; but in no sense of the word does the bill that has been mentioned in the public press as the administration's bill carry out anything like a redistribution of wealth or what we call the "sharing of our wealth."

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has been rather insistent that it be known as the "share-our-wealth" proposal. He wants it understood that it is a share-our-wealth proposal. I think the Senator from Michigan and those who follow him—and he probably will be the nominee of the Republican Party next time for President of the United States, and the party could do worse——[Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LONG. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask the Senator from Louisiana to withhold his grin when he makes that observation. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may recall that during the convention of 1896, which resulted in the nomination of William McKinley, Thomas B. Reed, who was then Speaker of the House of Representatives, was a candidate. He was getting a very respectable vote but not sufficient, and finally a Member of the House went up to the Speaker's desk and leaned over and said, "Mr. Speaker, do you think they are going to nominate you at the convention?" Reed replied, "Well, they could go farther and do worse, and I am afraid they will." [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I do for a question.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana in view of what he says, that the Republican Party could do worse than to nominate the Senator from Michigan, if he has any aspiration for the Republican nomination?

Mr. LONG. Well, that is not a question. Coming back to the Senator from Michigan, his remark about the bill yesterday was, "Senator LONG's bill to share the wealth"; his remark about it today is "Senator LONG's bill to share the wealth." That is also the remark of the public press.

There is not much difference between the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Kentucky; they belong on the same side, even though one be called "Democrat" and the other "Republican." There ought to be a very small side where they both could sit, and I would put them both over there on that side and take away two-thirds of the seats that would remain, if it were left to me, as my idea of how to put the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Michigan where they belong. What is the use of talking about the Democratic Party and Democratic principles and the Republican Party and Republican principles when neither of them mean what they say? [Laughter.]

The Bible says, "Do ye not after their works." You may follow their words but you may not follow their works. Both of them undertake to tell us that they realize the distress of the American people; both of them undertake to assure us that they realize that there has got to be a redistribution of wealth! but it is held up as a holy horror if actually a bill is going to come before the Congress to bring about that result.

It is all right to read the President's message, and every member of the Democratic Party, and nearly every member of the Republican Party, sitting on both sides of this Chamber nods his assent and nods his approval of every word that is contained in the declaration that there has got to be a redistribution of wealth; but when "the mountain labors", and smoke comes from the top and steam from all the sides and the "mountain labors" through the night and labors through the day and labors through the week, what does the mountain bring forth? It brings forth not even a mouse; it brings out the tail of a mouse. [Laughter.] That is what is brought forth by a bill of this kind.

At least, however, there was created a furore that excited the staid and half staid and half liberal and half conservative Republicans, on the one hand, and administration Democrats, on the other, the old die-hard dependable Democrats, the good old kind of Democrats who can be depended upon always to swap horses with the good old dependable Republicans. When they all came in here on a Monday morning with a look on their faces like Blue John at sundown, we thought there was some hope for the people. I was happy. Nothing in the world makes me feel better than to see that clabber-milk look come on the faces of all of the old dyed-in-the-wool Republican and Democratic politicians. [Laughter.] It made me feel happy. The sadder they are the better I feel. But, lo and behold! it looks like we have a sham battle fixed up here. The Senator from Kentucky is going to accuse the Senator from Michigan of being reactionary, and then the Senator from Michigan is going to get up and charge the Senator from Kentucky with being a Socialist, and then we are going to have to get in the middle aisle to keep them from forgetting the rules of the Senate. It looks like there is going to be a fight between them. Smoke and hell and high water going up all over the country, according to the newspaper headlines. It looks like they are going to crawl over in the middle aisle and battle it out with six-shooters and dirks before morning.

Lo and behold! when they finally get through what are they fighting over? They are fighting over a little old bill that will give the people of the United States one dime every time they put themselves a dollar further in debt this year. [Laughter.]

Let me read further from the Hearst editorial:

> The President absorbed the screaming demagogy of Senator LONG in toto in his soak-the-rich and spread-the-wealth message to Congress of June 20.

This newspaper itself does not know what it is talking about. He has not done any such thing—oh, yes; I beg the newspaper's pardon. That line is true:

> The President absorbed the screaming demagogy of Senator LONG.

I shall have to admit it is demagoguery, because in the old Greek parlance that meant the language which was acceptable to the majority. That is not meant as a derogatory term, and I do not take it as such, because when I advocated free school books in Louisiana that was termed "demagoguery"; when I advocated free bridges instead of toll bridges it was called "demagoguery"; and when I advocated paved highways instead of dirt roads that likewise was called "demagoguery."

The President's message, it is said, takes in all the philosophy of "spread the wealth", and it does; but does that hurt anything? Why did not Mr. Hearst or his editorial writer take issue with Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt when he made this same announcement on the platform of the Chicago national convention? This thing which he is condemning Mr. Roosevelt for saying in the message which he sent to Congress is exactly the same thing Mr. Roosevelt said, I think, on the 2d day of June 1932, on the Chicago national convention platform. It was following that platform utterance and his declaration there that Mr. Roosevelt received the extended support of all the Hearst newspapers. Remember, on the pledge made by Mr. Roosevelt that the people were going to share in the distribution of the national wealth, was he supported by these papers?

Why call this the "Demagoguery of the Senator from Louisiana" any more than the demagoguery of the Greek philosophers; any more than the demagoguery of Abraham Lincoln, of Daniel Webster, of James Monroe; or any more than the demagoguery of Moses, when it was well understood by all of us who supported Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt that he had promised the redistribution of wealth and that the American people should "share in the redistribution of national wealth."

I read further from the editorial:

First, the Socialist platform.

The Socialists never proposed any such thing. That statement goes to show that some of the newspapers still do not know anything about party politics. The Socialist platform never has proposed a redistribution of wealth. The Socialist platform proposes the national ownership of wealth or the destruction of wealth in one sense of the word. You can search every utterance I have ever made and you will not find one word which has advocated the destruction of wealth. On the contrary, I have advocated the preservation of wealth because by advocating a redistribution of wealth I have advocated the perpetuity of the capitalistic system. I have advocated the redistribution of wealth, which means that wealth is saved and wealth is used and wealth is preserved and is allowed to flourish for the benefit of the people who have a right to its use.

But, Mr. President, those who are opposing the redistribution of wealth are urging its destruction, because in the concentration of wealth there is a point where fire and flame must, as a matter of reasonable and necessary consequence, destroy that which is held back and denied to the people, who not only have the right to demand it, but whose very living demands that they shall have the use of it.

The Socialist platform advocates no redistribution of wealth, but the Democratic platform does. The Democratic Party from Jefferson down to Franklin Delano Roosevelt has promised the people of the United States and pledged the party to the principle of the redistribution of wealth. It is too bad we cannot get the newspapers to be truthful with themselves. If only they would present the truth it would be well. Russia did not redistribute wealth. It waited until the time came when the flames destroyed the wealth, and then nationalized all wealth. I am not for the nationalization of wealth where it can possibly be avoided.

I continue reading from the editorial:

But what has really taken place is this: The Democratic Party has died the death.

I am not so sure but that may not be true. The Supreme Court somewhat revived us by declaring the N. R. A. unconstitutional. If it had not been for that I would call the Democratic Party dead today. The Supreme Court did pump life back into our veins by declaring unconstitutional that politic monstrosity, by which decision that bit of Soviet Government in America was taken out of the Democratic Party. So I agree with that declaration.

The editorial continues:

The Democratic Party has died the death. The remains have been taken over by Senator HUEY P. LONG.

[Laughter in the galleries.]

I want to deny any participation in any ceremony with any corpse, Democratic or otherwise. I want to say further that if the Democratic Party keeps its word—hear me, now—if the Democratic Party keeps its word, if it actually does what it promised the people in the Chicago convention and redistributes the wealth of the country, there are not enough parties and not enough newspapers in the whole civilized world to beat the nominee of the Democratic Party. If the Democratic Party will keep its pledge, if it will actually redistribute wealth, it has the opportunity of its lifetime. I make the prediction that there would then be a 50-year period that the Democratic Party would rule the country, if it would keep that platform pledge to redistribute the wealth of the United States.

Then I make another prediction: If the Democratic Party does not do it, watch what happens before the next election of a President of the United States. I have the figures in my hand to tell the story.

There has been an increase of unemployment from June 1934, to June 1935. Hear me, Mr. President! There has been an increase, not a decrease, in unemployment from June 1934 to June 1935, of 700,000 additional people. That many more people are unemployed in June 1935 than were unemployed in June 1934. That is the record. I took the time to telephone and get the information this morning before I came to the floor of the Senate. Times are not getting better, gentlemen of the Senate, so do not fool yourselves. The mere fact we are baiting our people and throwing out a little money here and there to keep hair and hide together does not indicate that times are getting better.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLT in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator be willing to give the source of the figures which he has just mentioned?

Mr. LONG. I should be very glad to tell the Senator, but I was asked not to give them out today unless it was necessary. It is the same authority from which we all get our figures. I was asked to await a verification of the figures because they were going to be published tomorrow, it was thought.

Mr. WALSH. They are official figures?

Mr. LONG. They are official, from the same source where we all have been getting such figures. I do not suppose it would be resented if I gave them out. I went over this morning to the office of the newspaper called "Labor", and we telephoned the usual source this morning and got the figures, Mr. Keating and I telephoned to the source which we usually consult.

Mr. WALSH. I was wondering if the Senator was sure that the figures are authentic. That is the reason for my inquiry.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator will find the source from which I obtained the figures will verify their accuracy.

So things are not getting better, gentlemen of the Senate. Do not fool yourselves. They are not getting better. They are getting worse. We have ten to fifteen billion dollars more public debt than we had 3 years ago. We have more people unemployed, by 700,000, than we had a year ago. We have an unemployment list in industry alone which mounts up to some 11,000,000 people—think of it!—in industrial life in this country today. That is not taking into the calculation at all the farming unemployment, which is as great as the industrial unemployment. There are 11,000,000 people unemployed today in industry, 700,000 more than there were last year, and we had the blessed Blue Eagle all the time! [Laughter.]

The Democratic Party now has the opportunity of its life. We have tried every other thing on earth. We have tried everything that Hoover wanted to try. Mr. Hoover cannot complain that he had anything that could have solved this problem, because since he went out of office we have tried everything he had. He might have come here and have urged, and his Republican brethren might have urged, that had Hoover been elected, things would have been better. I answer them by saying, "How could they have been better when we have kept Hoover's crowd down there and done everything Hoover recommended since Roosevelt has been in?" That is the answer to them. One of them is just the same as the other.

This article says:

And Franklin D. Roosevelt, elected by the people of the United States on a traditional Democratic platform, has been subjugated and subdued politically by the Senator from Louisiana.

In the first place, nobody knows better than these newspapers how much truth there is in that statement. I have not seen the President, and I have not heard from the President, and he has not seen me or heard from me in so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, did not the Senator write him a letter day before yesterday?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I wrote him a letter, but I had it read to the Senator from Michigan and his colleagues of this body at about the same time I mailed it.

Mr. COPELAND. Has the Senator received an answer yet?

Mr. LONG. No; I have not received an answer yet, but that does not make any difference. How many times have I written letters which never were answered? I will bet that if the record could be searched, it would be found that we have all written letters to which we did not get any answer.

I quote again:

The Kingfish not only swallowed the Blue Eagle but chewed up the Democratic donkey as well.

[Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the occupants of the galleries are not in order, and that it is the duty of the occupants of the galleries to preserve order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The officers of the galleries will maintain order, and not show any signs of approval or disapproval of the speech, or of any action of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, to begin with, I never approved the Blue Eagle. Furthermore, I was glad the Supreme Court knocked it out. I have had nothing whatever to do with N. R. A.—top, side, or bottom. In this respect, I agree with this newspaper. However, let me say this, reading these two lines together:

"Mr. Roosevelt was elected on the traditional Democratic platform"; but this newspaper does not know what the traditional Democratic platform is. The traditional Democratic platform was, no. 1, the distribution of wealth, since the day it was first written. Since the day that the Democratic Party was first created, and back before that, the backbone of the Democratic Party was the Declaration of Independence in 1776; and the first thing put into it was to preserve the principle of the distribution and of the people sharing the wealth of the country. Go back and read and take the words of Jefferson himself, which, if I had the time, I would read to the Senate, in which he said that this country had to avoid an aristocracy of wealth; that an aristocracy of wealth was more to be dreaded than an aristocracy of kings. Those were the ideas of Jefferson; and so it was that when Franklin Delano Roosevelt mounted the rostrum of the Democratic convention in Chicago on the 2d day of June 1932, and said that the people of the United States should be allowed to share in the redistribution of wealth, he was reuttering the very principles of the traditional Democratic platform upon which Jefferson was elected.

I think I have quoted nearly enough from this article. I do, however, quote the following:

Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, the administration leader in the upper House, and HUEY P. LONG are now cheek-by-jowl on the soak-the-rich and spread-the-wealth platform of Presidents Long and Roosevelt.

It may be intended for a little fun. As a matter of fact, I do not know what the Senator from Arkansas is for. That is for him to say; but I will say that if the tax bill which is being talked about is supposed to be something that is espoused by me as being in keeping with the principles I have enunciated, which I took from persons who were here hundreds of years before me—if this bill is given the color of being a Huey Long bill, I wish to say that it is not, top, side, nor bottom, a bill of the kind or order that I would advocate. This bill raises $340,000,000 this year. The bill I propose would raise $165,000,000,000 this year. That is the difference between the bill I propose and the bill of the Finance Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the Senator, then, while the article from which he reads announces that the "Kingfish swallowed the donkey", the Kingfish is complaining because in some mysterious way the donkey has escaped.

Mr. LONG. No; I am not complaining because the donkey has escaped. What I am complaining about is that the Democratic Party has been created and founded upon the principle that it would keep the wealth redistributed among the people of the country, and it promised at the last national convention that the people would share the wealth of America if the party went into power; and the President has come in here with a message saying that it ought now to be done, and what I am complaining about is that we do not carry out our tradition, or our platform, or our promise, or the effect of the President's message.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has stated that his proposal would raise $165,000,000,000 this year.

Mr. LONG. In a year's taxes on capital.

Mr. WALSH. Would it raise that sum each year, or this year?

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; not each year.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator would take it all in 1 year?

Mr. LONG. We would raise by a tax about two-fifths of all wealth in 1 year. Then we would give the taxpayers, as the law now does, a reasonable time to settle and adjust it, as is now our law.

Here is what I would do, I will say to my friend: I would provide a capital-levy tax, the first form of tax we ever had. I would take the fortune of $2,000,000 and tax it 1 percent on the second million. I would take the fortune of $3,000,000 and tax it 2 percent on the third million. I would take the fortune of $4,000,000 and tax it 4 percent on the fourth million. I would take the fortune of $5,000,000 and tax it 8 percent on the fifth million. I would take the fortune of $6,000,000 and tax it 16 percent on the sixth million, 32 percent on the seventh million, 64 percent on the eighth million, and 99 percent on the ninth million.

In other words, I would take into the Treasury of this country two-fifths of its wealth that is in the hands of the money masters of this country, who have wrecked this country and who have wrecked these people because they have the money and the property in their hands, and they cannot make any use of it, and they will not let the country make any use of it, and they will not let the people of the country make any use of it. I would take, by taxation, all the property which a man has above a certain number of millions of dollars, and I would forbid swollen fortunes.

Mr. President, I shall not send this editorial to the desk to be read, because it contains a few more references that are not quite so complimentary. So long as it joins me up with the President-to-be, I have no complaint; but it gives me a running mate for Vice President on the Democratic ticket. So I am not going to put the article in the RECORD, because it might confound my brother members of the Democratic Party as well as the Republican Party.

I wish to conclude by saying that I hope the party and the President will carry out the message of the President. I hope the party will redistribute wealth. Let us make words the law for one time. If the party does redistribute wealth in accordance with its platform, I shall be with the party. If the bill does not tax more than one-fourth of 1 percent, as hideously infinitesimal as that may be, I shall vote for it; but I am going to offer an amendment to whatever bill is brought in here which will carry out the pledge of the Democratic National Convention and the message of the President of the United States. I shall offer as an amendment to whatever is produced here a measure containing the exact things which were said by the President of the United States to be needed, and containing the promises of the Democratic Party at the Chicago convention.

The answer of the President and of this Senate on the promises of the party and the President will be their position on my proposals when made.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. COPELAND to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2582) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Keyes	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bachman	Costigan	Logan	Robinson
Bailey	Dickinson	Lonergan	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	Long	Schall
Barbour	Donahey	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Duffy	McGill	Sheppard
Bilbo	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Black	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bone	George	Maloney	Steiwer
Borah	Gerry	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gibson	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Gore	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Guffey	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Nye	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Holt	Overton	White
Clark	Johnson	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, my motion to make the shipping bill the unfinished business is before the Senate, and I should like to have it voted on, if I may.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, just before we adjourned last evening, I was discussing this particular bill. Many of the Senators were not here, and at that time I had made only a cursory examination of the measure. Since then I have had occasion to study the bill to quite an extent, and before the Senate takes a vote, I wish to call attention further to some of its provisions.

As I said last evening, it seems to me that if the bill should become a law it would mean that the scandals which have taken place heretofore involving the Shipping Board and the scandals with reference to the mail subsidies would be inconsequential compared with the scandals which would follow.

The bill first sets forth a declaration of policy, with which I have no complaint whatsoever.

The second title sets up a board or authority, to be composed of five members, who shall be paid $12,000 a year, and provides that they shall make certain investigations with reference to the scrapping of vessels, and with reference to the difference between the cost of constructing vessels in the United States and the cost of the construction of vessels abroad. I have no objection to those provisions.

I am not at all sure if we are to have a merchant marine that it may not be necessary to have some kind of a subsidy provided, but I am certain that when the provisions of this bill are called to the attention of the Members of the Senate most Senators will be surprised and astounded to find what the bill actually provides.

Title III provides for the adjustment of ocean mail contracts. I read:

> SEC. 301. Sections 401 to 413, inclusive, of title IV of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, are hereby repealed, subject to the limitations and exceptions hereinafter in this act set forth: Provided, That any contract lawfully entered into prior to the enactment of this act shall remain in force and effect in the same manner and to the same extent as though these sections were not repealed subject to the powers herein conferred upon the President and the authority with respect to such contracts.

Then it provides that the President may under certain circumstances cancel certain of these contracts, and that if he cancels the contracts, or if the authority cancels them, they may agree upon the amount of damages which the shipowners have suffered by reason of the cancelation of the contracts entered into.

I desire to call the attention of the Members of the Senate to the fact that we have just gone through an investigation conducted by the Senate committee headed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and participated in by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and other Members of the Senate, which brought to light a most unsavory scandal with reference to ocean and air mail contracts, and brought to light a condition which was almost inconceivable. Likewise, we had an investigation of the old Shipping Board which showed that money was being lent to the shipowners for one-eighth of 1 percent. Then there were the other scandals with reference to the transportation of the mail by water, where it was revealed that it cost us something like $2,000 to send a pound of mail in certain vessels. With the facts brought out by all these investigations staring us in the face, shipowners have the audacity to come before the Congress and ask for a subsidy. They have the audacity to ask us to pass a bill which if it should be enacted into law would make it possible that all the other scandals would sink into insignificance.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator should add that there is a still further and even more recent disclosure which is very pertinent to the contemplation, namely, the disclosure before the Munitions Committee that the shipbuilding industry of the country is a very closely held, closely knit, if not actually collusive industry, and that the Government may well find itself entirely at the mercy of a collusive, monopolistic industry in making these amazing contracts.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly. I was coming to that, Mr. President. As the Senator from Michigan says, the investigation conducted by the Munitions Committee shows that there was collusion between all the shipbuilders of the United States with reference to building vessels for the Government. The pending bill proposes to have the authority enter into contracts with the same monopoly which has been exposed here, and to grant subsidies. First, under the terms of the bill, it is proposed that the Government shall grant a subsidy to the shipowner who desires to build ships.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Before the Senator gets away from that point I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan a question. He has been very much distressed, and he has a right to be, about collusion in shipbuilding. The Senator proposed some amendments, which have been incorporated in the bill, in an effort to guard as much as possible against such collusion. However, I take it from what the Senator now says that he is not satisfied that protection has been afforded. Is it the present position of the Senator from Michigan that he prefers to have the Government build and own the ships?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me answer, first, the initial comment of the Senator from New York. He has been very hospitable to every suggestion which any member of the Munitions Committee has made in the effort to protect the language and text of this bill against any ultimate collusion. I desire publicly to express my feeling of obligation to him for his hospitality in that respect. As a result we have written into this bill such protections as it is possible to put into words. I am unable, however, to escape the feeling, and I think I have so stated to the Senator, that it is impossible to put into words a complete protection against the system at the mercy of which we must find ourselves whenever we are building big ships. So that the basic challenge remains in spite of the protection which we have been able to attempt to put into words.

The bill is better than it was before we amended it. I think the hazard and the jeopardy, however, will continue so long as there are only three big shipbuilders in the country known as "the big three" and about three or four only of the lesser shipbuilders, who are known as "the little three" or "the little four", with a constant interlocking relationship between them in respect to information and bids and contracts and construction, and so forth.

As to the other question which the Senator asks me, I am unable to answer it. I wish I knew the answer. I do not know it; but I am very sure that the answer which is contemplated in this bill continues to be an utterly hazardous answer.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me in order to permit me to answer the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I take it, then, that in his heart the Senator from Michigan really believes that the only safe way to proceed is to have the Government itself engage in the building of the ships?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not at all clear, Mr. President, that it may not be entirely possible to leave ship construction out of the Government's formula entirely, and concentrate upon ship operations in meeting the differential. In other words, I am not sure that it is necessary or advisable to attempt to protect American construction of ships. Perhaps the advisable answer is to protect only the American operation of ships after they are constructed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The President made it very clear in his message that we must maintain an American merchant marine. No one can look at the graphic charts and fail to realize that unless we find some means of rehabilitating the American merchant marine, in a period of about 7 years we shall have no American merchant marine, because all our ships, or practically all of them, will have passed the period of economic usefulness.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana further yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask the Senator at that point—he has referred to the President's message—whether it is his judgment that the President approves the pending bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I know the Secretary of Commerce has approved a bill which is equivalent to this; so I take it the President has tacitly approved this one.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] yesterday undertook to assert that the bill was manifestly at odds with the President's message.

Mr. COPELAND. I concede at once that if we were to take the words of the President in his message literally they seem to indicate that he is opposed to lending money for the building of ships.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not want to press the Senator as to the President's message, because I can see that it is frequently difficult to understand precisely what the exact objective is toward which he aims.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that the President's message cannot be read without discovering, first, that he denounces the loans made for the building of ships. Secondly, he makes the statement clearly and concisely in three different messages which he has sent to the Congress that he desires the regulation of rates and the regulation of ship operation placed in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator bear with me further?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. In the message which the President sent relating to ship subsidies he said that for the time being regulation should be left with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but he said definitely in the last message which he sent to the Congress of the United States——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I am reluctant to interfere with the discussion by the able Senator from Montana. I wish to say that I had expected to speak for about 5 or 7 minutes on the question of tax-exempt securities, but I do not think it would be either right or proper to interfere with the discussion of the Senator from Montana at this time. So I wish to give notice that at some convenient opportunity during the day I propose to address the Senate on a proposed constitutional amendment to tax income on securities hereafter issued by the Federal or by State Governments. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. In the President's message of June 7, 1935, he uses this language:

> Another bill for the regulation of intercoastal and coastwise trade and some of the inland waterway carriers prepared by the Coordinator has been introduced and is before the Congress for action. I recommend that this bill be considered by the appropriate committees and pressed to early passage. I can see no reason why the responsibility for the regulation of intercoastal, coastwise, and inland waterways should not be vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission, with proper provision for the departmentalizing of the work of the Commission.

What does this bill propose? It proposes that the same authority which sets up and gives subsidies to the shipping interests should also regulate the rates they charge to the general public.

Before the Interstate Commerce Commission Mr. Farley, who was formerly on the Shipping Board and who is now engaged in the business in connection with some of the shipping interests, testified from his experience on the Shipping Board that it was not a good idea and it was not a good practice to have the same organization which controlled the subsidies and controlled the ships to have the regulation of their rates.

Before concluding I will show the complete inconsistency of the position taken by the committee with reference to that matter. However, I had not expected to touch upon it in this discussion.

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

Mr. COPELAND. In just a moment I will be through. I think there never has been any difference of opinion, however, insofar as the regulation of foreign ships is concerned, that it should be reposed in this regulatory body.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator means in the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. COPELAND. No; in the maritime authority.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Eastman bill itself does not provide for regulation of foreign lines.

Mr. WHEELER. The Eastman bill originally did so, but the committee amended it so as simply to take over the regulatory features in the case of foreign shipping that are now reposed with the Department of Commerce or with the proper bureau.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, who has a tax measure which he desires to have considered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I first desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2582, the so-called "merchant-marine bill."

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent—I have spoken to the Senator from New York about it—that the Senate may consider at this time House Joint Resolution 324, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not rise to object, but the parliamentary procedure would require the withdrawal, by unanimous consent, of the motion of the Senator from New York or, at least, laying aside that motion.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from New York if he will agree to the temporary laying aside of his motion?

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I submit the request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to understand the present status of the tax situation. May I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi, in view of the statement he made on the floor yesterday, has there been any change?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I was going to make an explanation with reference to the whole matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to hear the explanation first, if I may, reserving my right to object.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi is going to make his explanation at this time, I wish to suggest the absence of a quorum. It is a very important matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Keyes	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bachman	Costigan	Logan	Robinson
Bailey	Dickinson	Lonergan	Russell

Caraway	Hatch	Nye	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Holt	Overton	White
Clark	Johnson	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi that the pending motion be temporarily laid aside, with a view of the Senate considering House Joint Resolution 324?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Mississippi had a statement to make prior to the request being agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I can make the statement while the reservation is made on the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. President, House Joint Resolution 324, as Senators will recall, was passed by the House on June 20; it came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance on that date. The joint resolution, as passed by the House, provides for a continuation of the so-called "nuisance" taxes for 2 years. In the aggregate the amount of revenue involved is about $500,000,000 annually. The committee reported the joint resolution with but one amendment, the amendment providing for a continuation of the taxes involved for 1 year instead of 2 years.

It will be recalled that after the committee had reported the joint resolution to the Senate the President's message with reference to taxation was sent to the Congress. In that message the proposal was submitted for the taxation of corporations under a graduated scale; also, to carry into higher brackets the surtaxes on incomes above a million dollars, and, further, to impose a tax on net inheritances.

Senators are familiar with the development with reference to that matter. It would now seem impossible for us to have ready the amendments designed to carry out the suggestions of the President, to have them receive that degree of consideration which the questions involved, perhaps merit, to attach such amendments to the joint resolution, have it go to the House, be considered there, and passed by Saturday night.

That is due to the fact that there is a different viewpoint among Senators with reference to one or the other of the suggested new plans of taxation. If the effort were made to attach to the joint resolution now pending the amendments designed to carry out these plans, there would be a failure to pass the measure by June 30, in which event the taxes now in force would lapse. Every day the lapse continued would cost the Government in revenue between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000; indeed, it might cost more than that sum, for the reason that there are certain excise taxes upon sundry commodities which are paid in the aggregate, and such taxes would so be affected that we would lose more than a million and a half or two million dollars a day. Anyway, if the joint resolution should not be passed by Saturday night and these taxes covered by the measure should not be continued, the Government inevitably would sustain quite a severe loss.

I conferred today with the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Representative DOUGHTON, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, all of whom were present at the conference. I told this group of gentlemen of the situation which prevails in the Senate and in the Committee on Finance, and we exchanged views as to what would be the wise policy to pursue.

I am informed by this group, including the Speaker and the chairman and all the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, that if the Senate should pass the joint resolution extending the so-called "nuisance taxes" without further amendment, they would immediately take up the suggestions carried in the President's message; that they would give speedy and expeditious consideration to those suggestions, with the view of reporting proposed legislation to the House; that the strong influence of that group of gentlemen would be exerted to the end of securing enactment of legislation carrying out the President's suggestions substantially, and that they would oppose any adjournment of Congress until action shall have been taken by the House upon the recommendations contained in the President's message.

I have talked to many Senators about the matter. So far as the adjournment of Congress is concerned, until legislation respecting the suggestions of the President as contained in his message shall be considered they will oppose adjournment. So far as I am concerned, in view of the statements I have made here, if the joint resolution extending the operation of these taxes for 1 year can be passed, the feeble influence I may be able to exert will be used along the same line. So far as I am able to do so, I give assurance that every consideration will be given to the President's message, with the hope that legislation may be enacted which will carry out substantially the suggestions contained in his message, and I shall oppose adjournment of Congress until some such action shall be taken.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator let me proceed a moment?

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. I know how anxious Senators are to adjourn and go home. I share in that desire, because since I came here last December I have not left for one day. Certainly the Committee on Finance has had its proportionate amount of work during the present session of Congress. I look forward with great hope and much happiness to going home after the Congress shall have adjourned. I think we can obtain a reasonably early adjournment of the Congress if we all cooperate toward that end. I am hopeful that the action which is here suggested will not keep us in session very much longer than if the message had not come to us.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think all of us agree that the logical way to meet the suggestions contained in the President's message would be to have a bill for that purpose originate in the House and then come to the Senate. In order that there may be no misunderstanding about the assurance which the Senator from Mississippi has given us, I wish he would let me know whether I state it correctly.

If the Senate passes the joint resolution and extends the operation of the nuisance taxes, the Senator from Mississippi gives us his assurance that the Speaker and Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House will proceed without delay to prepare and introduce a bill carrying out the recommendations of the President; that the Committee on Ways and Means, which they can control, will at the present session of Congress report such a bill to the House of Representatives, and that the same gentlemen will do the best they can to prevent any adjournment of Congress until such action shall be taken.

Have I stated the situation correctly?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has stated the facts substantially. The only modification I might make would be with reference to the joint resolution. The Committee on Finance has changed the period of its operation from 2 years to 1 year. I do not know what action the House may take with reference to that amendment; but that is not a very material matter.

The other modification, if it be a modification, is embraced in the statement that the Committee on Ways and Means is now considering, and expeditiously so, the so-called "Guffey bill", which had been reported by a Senate committee and which was ready to be taken up for consideration by the Senate; but because of the tax features involved it was thought wise, even by the proponents of the legislation, to have it originate in the House. The Ways and Means Committee has been working hard to formulate that proposed legislation and report it. It may take 2 or 3 or 4 days to complete that task. However, the assurance I have is that just as soon as possible the Ways and Means Committee will begin consideration of the tax matter, and, with all expedition, report it to the House.

Mr. NORRIS. It will be done at this session of Congress at least?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I also understood the Senator to state that, so far as the leaders of the majority in this Chamber are concerned, if the House shall pass a tax bill, every effort will be made to prevent an adjournment of the Congress until action shall be had upon it in this Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not put myself in the category of leadership, but, as an individual Member of the Senate and of the Finance Committee, I shall oppose an adjournment of the Congress until we carry out in good faith the suggestions I have made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator to say he had consulted with the leaders in this Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. I have consulted with the leader on this side of the Chamber, and I think he shares the views I have expressed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. If an expression on that matter is due from me, or is appropriate, let me say that I have heretofore announced publicly that, in my opinion, the subject matter of the President's message, which is now under discussion, should be disposed of during the present session. So far as I am concerned, while I recognize that it may occasion a delay in the final adjournment of the present session of Congress, I shall adhere to that policy. I am also satisfied that Senators on this side of the Chamber with practical unanimity take the same view.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield further?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As one of those who are very anxious to have action upon the recommendations made by the President in his recent message on the tax question, so far as I am personally concerned, I am entirely satisfied with the assurances which the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Arkansas have given. I express it as my opinion that the method now proposed is the more orderly way in which to proceed. I only wish to add that my insistence upon attempting to act upon the joint resolution was in lieu of assurance that there would be action by the House upon a separate measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I am somewhat shocked by the sudden change in attitude of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. Among others I was assured on the floor of the Senate yesterday that the joint resolution extending the so-called "nuisance taxes", as well as an amendment to the revenue act, must be passed by Saturday evening. Personally, and I believe I can speak for the Members on this side of the Chamber, we have no objection to the present attitude of the Senator from Mississippi. I think it is the more orthodox proceeding in connection with a revenue bill. Of course I hope, and I believe I express the hope of all Members of the body, that this will not prolong the session of Congress.

I ask the Senator from Mississippi, at this time, if he proposes to bring up the measure this afternoon, if he obtains unanimous consent to do so?

Mr. HARRISON. I am hopeful of getting it disposed of this afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the hope of the Senator to pass the joint resolution without the attachment or supplementation of any amendment whatsoever?

Mr. HARRISON. I am hopeful of bringing the measure to its final passage with no amendment except the single amendment recommended by the Finance Committee, changing the time of operation of the taxes from 2 years to 1 year. I hope we can dispose of it this afternoon and put it behind us.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the idea of the Chairman of the Finance Committee that he will oppose any amendment other than the one changing the operation from 2 years to 1 year?

Mr. HARRISON. I certainly shall do so, and I hope the Senator from Oregon will join with me in that opposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that the pending motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2582, known as the "merchant marine bill", be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 324? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the word "thereof", to strike out "1937" and insert "1936", and on page 2, line 1, after the word "thereof", to strike out "1937" and insert "1936", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That title IV, as amended, and parts I, II, III, and IV of title V, as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, are further amended by striking out "1935" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1936." Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "1935" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1936."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments are agreed to, and the joint resolution is passed. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the joint resolution is passed—because I might not get consent afterward—I wish to make a request.

In view of this recurrent sanity in the matter of procedure, I have no disposition to discuss the rather amazing contemplation which we originally thought we confronted when apparently we were going to be asked to rewrite the basic tax laws of the Republic in 72 hours; but I do ask unanimous consent, as indicative of the response of the country to what seemed to be our understanding as to what was expected of us, that certain editorials be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Sun of June 25, 1935]

THE NEW HYSTERIA

There is something hysterical about the new rush at Washington. The sudden determination of the President to drive his so-called "wealth-sharing program" through Congress causes the innocent bystander to look at the calendar. Is this 1936 and are HUEY LONG and his forces threatening the renomination of Mr. Roosevelt? The calendar says no. The recent performance of the President can be attributed only to panic. He is doing now what a calmer politician of his principles would do next spring if at that time a third party loomed up with a strong appeal to the radicals.

The most pitiful feature is the apparent willingness of the Democratic leaders in Congress to bend their own opinions to suit President Roosevelt. They know that a rise in income taxes will hurt business. They know that the proposal to increase the tax on large corporations while reducing the tax on small ones is not only unfair but absurd to the extent that big corporations with hundreds of thousands of small investors would be penalized at the expense of small corporations held by a few stockholders. They know that the elimination of tax exemption from Government securities, while right in principle, would be little more than a gesture at a time when the market is choked with tax-free bonds issued in the lush and careless years. And they know that this shift further to the left by Mr. Roosevelt is a blow at public confidence.

Yet there must be men in Congress, men like CARTER GLASS, who will employ every legitimate means to prevent President Roosevelt from putting through a program founded on ideas foreign to both of the great parties.

[From the Baltimore Sun, June 26, 1935]

VENGEANCE OR VIRTUE?

The central question to be asked, in considering the tax program which the administration is preparing to put through Congress, turns on the purpose of the new rates. Are the new taxes to be punitive or are they to be laid for the purpose of putting the Treasury on a sound basis? If they are to be punitive, the idea ought to be stubbornly resisted. If they are for the purpose of putting the Treasury on a sound basis, the idea ought to be warmly supported.

Soon or late, the country must face the condition that exists in the Treasury. We cannot go on forever with enormous expenditures which are paid in large part with the proceeds of borrowed money. But for the control which the Government has over the banks, we probably should not have been able to go as far as we have gone. And even with such control, we cannot go on indefinitely with that policy. One day, the Government must begin to pay its bills with real money, taken from the people in open and aboveboard taxation. Unless it does so, the time will come when the most merciless of all forms of taxation will come down upon the American public. That is, repudiation.

In the opinion of the Sun, today is not a single hour too early to begin to lay taxes, open and aboveboard taxes. Today is not a single hour too early to begin to move in long strides toward a balanced Budget. Naturally, a sound condition in the Treasury, based upon a balanced Budget, calls for more than new taxes. It also calls imperatively for a rein upon expenditures. But in our present state of affairs, new taxes there must be. And there is no better way to insure a rein upon expenditures than to call upon the American people to face the music in additional taxation. No effective rein is possible so long as billions are borrowed each year by the Government.

Of course, to call for new taxes is not to call for any kind of new taxes. The law of diminishing returns must be taken into account. Mr. Roosevelt said in his recent message that a prudent government seeks "ample revenues without discouraging enterprise." If rates are pushed beyond all reason, so that business men turn all profits over to the Government when an enterprise is successful, and pocket the loss when an enterprise is unsuccessful, they naturally slow down in their ventures. And the result is that the Government has less on which to lay a tax—either on incomes or on estates—while the general business life of the community, including employment, begins to wither.

But, bearing this well-known rule in mind, the sooner the Government begins, with careful study, to lay new taxes, the better it will be for the American public. The very wealthy must set their backs to bear it. So must the well-to-do. Income taxes are now high; estate taxes are now high. And in virtually all parts of the country one or both of these taxes are now levied by States as well as by the Federal Government. But severe taxes are better than ultimate repudiation of the Government's debts. A very definite condition confronts the American public and is more important than all the theories that can be summoned. The condition is the impossibility of spending stupendously without paying.

And what goes for the very wealthy and for the well-to-do middle classes goes also for the so-called "small fellow." The Government needs a stern fiscal policy. In a stern fiscal policy, the small man has his duties. If Washington wiped out the Rockefellers and the Astors, the tax yield would not be a fraction of the receipts necessary. If the well-to-do were made to yield the last cent before the point of diminishing returns were reached, the yield would not be sufficient. If Washington means business, it will also lower the tax exemptions of the so-called "little fellow" and make some increase in his rates. And it may also have to impose new taxes on him before many months pass.

All of this is on the assumption that the administration is thinking about the Treasury situation and a balanced Budget. If the administration is merely thinking about hurting somebody, or about turning the flank of the Long-Coughlin agitators, or about shifting public thought away from its defeat in the N. R. A. case, then the intelligent sections of the American people should rise up in their might and force Congress to stop, look, and listen. If the idea is simply, for political reasons or for vengeance, to prevent any man in the future from possessing a large income or creating a great estate, it is a blow at American enterprise and therefore a blow at the American standard of living.

No fair-minded man needs to bother these days about redistribution of wealth if he believes at all in American institutions. There is redistribution, and plenty of it, as an incident of any straightforward policy of taxation that aims simply at a sound Budget. What is necessary is straightforward taxation to clean up a mess.

[From the New York Times of June 26, 1935]

HOW NOT TO DO IT

Whatever may be said of the intrinsic merits of estate and legacy taxes, nothing can be said for the proposal to rush them through in 3 or 4 days. No bill for the purpose has yet been even drafted, much less introduced and referred to a committee. It is stated that the Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and Treasury officials are "racing against time" to throw together some kind of hurried measure. As the deadline is set for Sunday, this would leave only 3 days to get the bill out of committee, debated, and passed by both Houses of Congress, with a congressional conference agreeing upon the conflicting details. As a form of legislation, this is veritable midsummer madness.

It is hard to believe that the administration leaders are sincere in professing the intention to do this thing in this way. There should be no such leap into the dark with a measure so complicated and difficult. Even to frame it properly would require the work of experts in taxation for a long time. Instead we have a lot of guessing, which is considerately called by its authors "tentative", respecting provisions that will be put into the bill. Such haphazard plans ought to be thoroughly sifted at committee hearings and in congressional debate. But it is proposed to have neither. Members of Congress are to be told, in effect, "Vote first and make your analyses and speeches afterward." From some unknown quarter comes the estimate that the new taxes will yield $340,000,000. How soon and over what period is not said. But even if it were all to be realized within 1 year, which is highly improbable, the sum would seem petty when compared with the President's estimate that it would be large enough to reduce the national debt and balance the Budget. But all the estimates thus far put out are manifestly no better reasoned or articulate than children crying in the night.

No such legislation should be attempted under whip and spur at the tail end of a tired and dying session of Congress. It will be presented, if at all in this way, as a sort of inducement to weary men to vote with their eyes shut, so as earlier to go home and rest. This method only adds to the topsy-turvy appearance of the situation which the President suddenly precipitated.

[From the Washington Post of June 26, 1935]

IRRESPONSIBLE

Two distinct issues, which must not be confused, have been raised by the President's demand that his tax program be immediately translated into law. The one is the social and economic desirability of that program. The other is the procedure to be used in making it a reality. However vital the matter of the President's proposals, the manner of their enactment remains the more important question. For while destructive taxation can threaten the welfare of the Nation, destructive government will jeopardize the very foundations on which our civilization rests.

The procedure which Mr. Roosevelt has chosen to jam this policy through is intolerable. No milder word will serve. This Congress had been in session 5½ months and adjournment was in sight before the message of June 19 was delivered. To almost everyone it came as a complete surprise, and administration leaders, to say nothing of the opposition, at once realized the necessity for careful study of what the fragmentary proposals imply. "The proposed tax legislation", said Senator HARRISON, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, a week ago today, "will, of course, originate in the House."

On June 24, just 5 days after the message itself, came the command from the White House that legislation embodying the principles outlined shall be enacted this week. If these principles were the counsel of perfection, the embodiment of the wisdom of the ages in the field of taxation, this dictatorial procedure would still be disgraceful. A week ago Senator HARRISON could not envisage the destruction of parliamentary tradition involved in treating a new tax program as a Senate amendment to the resolution continuing the excise taxes. Indeed, nobody with any real respect for the orderly processes of democratic government could have anticipated such an outcome. Yet here it is by command of the man who on March 4, 1933, took solemn oath to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 7 of that Constitution states clearly that "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills." The qualifying clause has been interpreted by the second chamber with great latitude. Never before, however, has a President requested that the Senate should initiate an entirely new tax program as a rider to legislation already passed by the House. If this is "preserving" the Constitution, then words have ceased to have any meaning.

Moreover, this cavalier attitude toward the organic law can no longer be regarded as exceptional governmental strategy. Mr. Roosevelt's Postmaster General, at a Democratic rally in Elmira the other day, devoted himself to the astounding thesis that Executive violations of the Constitution are unimportant if they are what the administration considers socially desirable. Referring to the N. R. A., he said that "the principle may have been wrong, judicially considered, but it was eminently right from the humanitarian and utilitarian points of view."

That doctrine verges upon the doctrine of anarchy. It borders on the reasoning which John Wilkes Booth employed to justify his assassination of Abraham Lincoln. It is thoroughly vicious doctrine, for it assumes that purely arbitrary power shall decide what is right and wrong. It is completely stupid doctrine, for it fails to realize that all human progress is contingent upon the supremacy of revisable law. And it is profoundly dishonest doctrine when it is voiced by those who have voluntarily sworn that they will devote themselves to upholding the organic law.

There is no doubt that the Constitution can profitably be amended from time to time, for which procedure provision is made. There is no doubt that our Federal taxation system needs sharp revision to bring it in line with current fiscal needs. But those are not the issues which the President has now raised. The question which he has defiantly flung in the face of every thinking American is whether government should be responsible or irresponsible; democratic or dictatorial; reactionary to the methods of the Caesars or progressive along the flexible lines mapped out by the founders of this Republic.

Mr. Roosevelt is reported to have said that his tax program must be jammed through à la Hitler—without analysis, hearings, or examination—because otherwise the sincerity of his share-the-wealth advocacy may be questioned. That may seem the issue to him. But to the Nation the issue is whether Mr. Roosevelt is the trustee or the uncontrollable master of the priceless heritage which he holds temporarily in trust. With such an issue there can be, if this democracy is to endure, no temporizing and no compromise.

[From the Washington Daily News of June 24, 1935, and printed in other Scripps-Howard newspapers throughout the United States]

NO TIME FOR THE BUM'S RUSH

While we favor the general objectives expressed in the President's tax message, we don't like the "let's jam it through and go home" talk that is now in the air.

The subject does not lend itself to the bum's rush manner of law making. It is not a thing that should be decided with a sideswipe, by a Congress in a hurry to wind up and get away.

Nor is it a matter to be passed on merely as a play in a great game of politics. The issue is taxes—not HUEY LONG.

If it could be assured that Congress would stay long enough to finish the task with due labor and deliberation, that would be fine. But we are skeptical about any such possibility, and believe there is real danger of a lick-and-a-promise performance.

With HUEY LONG steaming up the politics of the tax issue, it is now indicated that the Senate may try to improvise a hasty program and pass it as an amendment to the pending nuisance tax extension bill, which must be acted on finally within 6 days. That, we believe, would be a serious mistake.

It is not a job to be done on a HUEY LONG tempo. Under orderly procedure, any tax proposal should first be considered by the House Ways and Means Committee, then acted on by the House, then studied by the Senate Finance Committee, and finally passed on by the Senate. There should be no short cut in handling a tax proposal that is as ramified and complex as the one suggested by the President.

The writing of an inheritance tax law, for example, requires much more than the mere fixing of a schedule of rates. Experience with the Federal estate taxes has shown that the administration of such a law is not easy. Careful provisions need to be made for a long-term liquidation of inheritances.

And much more than casual study should be given to the proposed graduated tax on corporations. Wrapped up in this proposal is the controversy that has raged since the trust-busting days, over the size of industrial units. The whole scheme of mass production is affected, as well as the equity of discriminating against the small stockholders of a large corporation and in favor of the large stockholders of a small corporation.

The taxing power is government's most potent tool. It can be used like a surgical knife to remove a malignant growth from the social system. But it should never be used wantonly and recklessly, like a bludgeon, to maim and bruise.

[From the Washington Daily News, and other Scripps-Howard newspapers, of June 25, 1935]

SHOOTING FROM THE HIP

Except for political expediency, there is no reason whatever for the administration squeeze play on the tax bill. A preponderance of the people, we believe, are strong for the President's general tax objectives—so far as they understand those objectives. A majority of the Members of Congress have long wanted to enact a tax measure of the type outlined in the President's message—and have waited only for Presidential bidding.

With practically all other important legislation out of the way, Congress could, if it wanted to, take up the tax measure and, after orderly deliberations, pass it before adjournment. There is no need to short-circuit hearings before the House Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committees, no need to shut off opportunity for study and debate in the committees and on the floors of Congress.

Intelligent consideration of this bill—probably the most vital tax measure in the Nation's history—is impossible under the administration's marching orders to have done with it in 6 days. That is where the squeeze play comes in. The bill is being attached to another measure extending the nuisance taxes which expire July 1.

Congress, which has not yet seen the bill it is expected to pass in less than a week, should demand time to study and legislate in orderly fashion. It should refuse to treat important tax reforms as a casual amendment to another measure on the Senate rush calendar. If handled by this hurry-up administration plan, these complex and far-reaching tax provisions will not even be considered by the House Ways and Means Committee, where all tax legislation should originate, nor considered except as a lump proposal by the House itself.

Section 7, article I, of the Constitution, reads: "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills." The latter clause makes the administration strategy constitutional. But it is not statesmanlike, and it is not democratic.

One part of the President's tax program, for example, which calls for due deliberation, is that dealing with income taxes. As thus far revealed, this part has all the political strength and fiscal weakness of a Huey Long share-the-wealth scheme.

In his message to Congress the President asked for "a definite increase in taxes now levied upon very great individual net incomes." By way of illustration, he suggested that the graduated tax, which now evens off at the million-dollar-a-year level, be continued upward so that the man who gets five millions a year will have to pay higher rates than the man who gets a mere million.

That is fine as far as it goes. Politically this is a foolproof idea. Nobody wastes sympathy on multimillionaires. Belief that they should pay more is practically unanimous.

The weakness in the scheme is that it won't raise much, if any, additional revenue. In the last year of record, 1933, the Nation boasted 46 more-than-a-million incomes. These 46 persons reported a total net income of $81,558,981, and paid a total tax of $25,848,146—little enough, to be sure. But if the Government had taken all of their net incomes the additional revenue would not have been enough to pay for one week of work-relief expenditures.

If our Government is to get substantially greater revenue from income taxes, it will have to make a heavier touch on the incomes of the plain rich, the moderately well-to-do, the middle class—in fact, all incomes except the very lowest.

The Government now gets the bulk of its revenue from the middle and lower classes. But it doesn't do it by honestly and openly taxing their incomes on the basis of capacity to pay. Instead it levies indirect taxes on the things they buy; the things they need. These taxes have the virtue of producing revenue, and are politically popular with Congress, on the theory that the tax goose will not squawk if it does not realize it is being plucked. Typical of such levies are the nuisance taxes. They yield about a half billion dollars a year, all but a small fraction of the yield coming from the 95 percent of our population whose incomes are below the present tax level, or from those whose slightly better incomes Congress has not the courage to tax directly.

In the 5 years ending this month our national debt has increased about twelve and one-half billion dollars. That being true, it would seem that the administration and Congress should be looking for some revenue-raising taxes that will really help pay the bill; and higher income taxation, not merely from the top but graduated from the bottom to the top, is obviously the fairest method of getting that revenue.

Just as important factors are involved in the inheritance tax and the corporation tax. These questions, too, call for something more than shooting from the hip.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of June 26, 1935]

GOVERNMENT BY INTIMIDATION

When Mr. Hitler makes up his mind what laws are to be passed he assembles the members of the Reichstag and tells them what to do. They do it.

The latest news from Washington—the most threatening and disturbing in a generation—differs from Berlin reports only in unessential details. Mr. Roosevelt suddenly makes up his mind to enact his new tax plan as a rider to the reenactment of the nuisance taxes. Since the latter expire June 30, this means that Congress has until midnight Sunday to pass a tax program as wide in scope as it is revolutionary in effect.

Five days ago the country was told of the plan for the first time. Five days hence Congress is ordered to pass it. The national debate has hardly begun. In the time left, Congress can scarcely draft a bill, let alone hold adequate hearings on one. Debate can be only a farce. The most that Congress can do is to take what its Führer hands it and like it.

The whole proceeding is a travesty upon popular government. There is not even the excuse of a national emergency such as undoubtedly existed in the spring of 1933. Nobody pretends that there is need of haste—except possibly in the political needs of the President.

Yet the Democratic leaders of the House and Senate, summoned to the White House, meekly announce on leaving that the bill will be passed. Which taxes will be included? Oh, all four—yes; all four are "must." The President says so.

We can see no useful purpose to be served by mincing words. The form, the shell of the process is the American Constitution. The heart is fascism, unadorned and unconcealed. President Roosevelt does not thrust out his chin or strike a solemn pose. His assumption of authority is as light-hearted as everything else that he does. But the scorn for the legislature is one with Berlin or Rome. In a very real sense, if these orders are obeyed, Congress will have abdicated. It will no longer be a coordinate branch. It might as well not be in session. In this case, since the bill is a revenue bill, the Constitution goes to the length of specifying where the bill must originate—in the House, since that body is supposed to be most closely in touch with the voters! This form may be complied with or it may be evaded through the Senate's power of amendment. But so long as President Roosevelt is in the White House and pursues these methods and Congress bows to them, the constitutional clause is a bitter mockery.

There are able and courageous men in Congress in both parties in both Chambers. They know, and all Congress knows, that the President's demands are an insult to the legislative branch. Why are they so totally unable to stand up and insist upon their rights as coequals with the Executive? Because, partly, of $4,800,000,000 which Congress handed the President at his request last winter, which he had no intention of then spending and which he has hardly yet begun to spend, but which he has used as a club with which to beat mutinous Senators and Representatives into line. For a further reason, there has been the consistent effort of the "new dealers" over 2 years to undermine the American system of a federal state restrained by checks and balances and to centralize power in a dictatorial Executive at Washington. The effort has prevailed in far too many minds of the administration. The abject submission with which the congressional leaders bowed to the President's dictatorial demands is apparently an accurate measure of the distance which the present Government has traveled from the America of Washington, of Hamilton, of Jefferson, of Jackson, of Lincoln, of Cleveland, of Theodore Roosevelt, of Woodrow Wilson.

The end is not in sight. But if Congress does not in the next 5 days summon enough courage to assert its right and perform its duty to act as a legislature rather than as a Nazi Reichstag, it is difficult to see any health or hope in it. The rescue of the Constitution must wait upon the ballots of '36.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to propound to the Senator from Mississippi just one other inquiry. If the bill shall pass the House and reach the Senate, will the Senator from Mississippi, as Chairman of the Finance Committee, permit hearings on the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator refer to the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. No; the revenue bill, if it shall come over to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Senator ask whether we would have public hearings?

Mr. McNARY. The Senator understood me.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I did not.

Mr. McNARY. If and provided the revenue bill about which the Senator has been speaking shall pass the House and come to the Senate, will the distinguished Senator from Mississippi permit public and open hearings on the measure?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I used to serve with the Senator from Oregon on the Agricultural Committee, and I imbibed his instruction at that time. I do not assume to speak for my committee on that question, but I shall be governed solely by a majority of my committee in deciding whether or not there shall be public hearings. Personally, I shall not oppose reasonable hearings on the subject, because our committee desires to get all the facts we can get.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oregon that the Finance Committee yesterday determined by a rather decisive vote to have open hearings on the measure; and I certainly think if there is occasion for hearings the committee will be likely to follow the same course.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator just one further question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The program has changed so rapidly and so many times in the past 10 days that I am wondering if the Senator can assure us that this is the final program.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish I knew. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the colloquy which occurred between the Senator from Michigan and myself earlier in the day with respect to the program which at that time was thought to be imminent, but as to which certain developments were in progress of which I had no knowledge, I ask unanimous consent that the colloquy be expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. I object.

Mr. President, I understood my friend from Mississippi yesterday to say that the President was very anxious to have these amendments placed on the joint resolution with reference to nuisance taxes. May I inquire whether or not the President's view of that matter has changed?

Mr. HARRISON. That is a question about which I will make an explanation, if the Senator desires me to do so.

Mr. LONG. I do not desire an explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator does not desire any explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish to have the Senator understand that I was not asking an explanation. I was asking him if there had been any change in the President's attitude on the joint resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. There has been no change at all in the President's attitude with reference to this matter. There may have been a change in my attitude about some matters, but not in the President's attitude.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in that connection I think it proper to say that from the beginning both the Senator from Mississippi and I thought the correct course to pursue was the one which apparently is now being taken. The only reason why that was not done, so far as I know, grew out of the fact that it was represented that the situation of the Ways and Means Committee in the House was such that it might be several weeks before the new tax measure could be reached. In view of that situation it was suggested that the tax program to which we are referring be placed as an amendment on this joint resolution.

It was realized that the Congress had been in session a long time, and that there is a general desire to conclude the session. It was also realized that there is a demand, as we believe, both in the Congress and in the country, for the enactment of the program referred to, and it was in an effort to respond to that demand as promptly as possible that it was yesterday thought a course different from that which is now being taken might be pursued.

I have realized from the beginning, however, and I know the Senator from Mississippi has, that the origination of tax measures is peculiarly the province of the House of Representatives. It was suggested by some Members of the House of Representatives that inasmuch as this is a joint resolution dealing with taxation, the constitutional provision would not apply, but I desire to say that I am in hearty sympathy with the course which the Senator from Mississippi has taken.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I am not in disagreement with the procedure which is proposed. On the contrary, I very thoroughly approve it. I rise merely to make a brief announcement.

Some days ago I had prepared and printed an amendment which I had intended to offer to the pending joint resolution. It is an amendment providing for certain import taxes on eggs in various forms. The proposal is of considerable importance, and I should like very much to have it considered by the Senate at this session, in view of the statement made by the Chairman of the Finance Committee, and in view of the apparent fact that the Senate generally is in accord with the procedure which he has suggested, it seems clear that it is entirely inopportune to offer the amendment at this time. I shall, therefore, await another opportunity. I sincerely hope that this amendment may be considered and agreed to at some later day.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to make one statement.

The pending joint resolution cuts down from 2 years to 1 year the extension of these taxes, including the gasoline tax. I had thought at one time I might submit a motion to cut the gasoline tax from 1 cent to one-half cent a gallon, but in view of the situation which has just developed I shall not do so at this time; I will reserve that motion for some future occasion when the new revenue bill comes over from the House, unless it be taken care of in the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments to the joint resolution are agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be engrossed and the joint resolution read a third time and passed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from New York to take up his bill is now pending.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask if the joint resolution has been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been disposed of.

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President; it was regarding the joint resolution that I desired to speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution, then, has not been disposed of. The Chair did not know that the Senator from New York desired to address the Senate on the joint resolution. He thought the Senator desired to speak upon his bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That simply continues the hectic record of the legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have two amendments which were sent forward to the Finance Committee. One relates to whale oil and the other to toilet soaps. May I ask the Senator in charge of the measure whether the committee gave some thought to the amendments?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, Mr. President. The Senator from New York has spoken to me several times about his amendments, and I know how much interest he has in them; but the Committee on Finance thought if they should open up the joint resolution to one amendment, they would have to open it up to innumerable others. So, in the interest of getting plenty of money for the Government, we thought it wise to pass the joint resolution with no change save the 1-year extension. I hope, therefore, the Senator will not insist on his amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, my thought about the matter has been that the whale-oil amendment, particularly, would bring more money to the Government; but if the Senator's position is as stated, and the committee feels the same way, of course, I am helpless.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments of the committee are agreed to, the amendments will be engrossed, the joint resolution ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point some correspondence with the Commissioner of Customs and some data showing the collection of customs duties on copper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JUNE 3, 1935.

Hon. JAMES H. MOYLE,
Commissioner of Customs, Treasury Department,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: Please be so kind as to send to me a statement of the imports of copper, under section 601 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as extended, together with a statement of the amount of revenue collected by customs as a result of such imports, for the years 1932, 1933, 1934, and to the date of this letter, 1935.

I shall be grateful if you will also include in the table a statement for each of said various years of the amount of copper manufactures on which added duty was imposed by the Revenue Act of 1932.

Please observe the enclosed table printed in the proceedings of the Senate on April 13, 1934, which table you were so kind as to supply me last year. An extension of those figures, employing the format of that table, will be suitable.

Please send me two carbon copies of the new table and please return the enclosure.

Thanking you, and with esteem,
Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CUSTOMS,
Washington, June 12, 1935.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of June 3, 1935, accompanied by an excerpt from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which shows a tabulation of imports of copper and copper manufactures dutiable under section 601 of the Revenue Act of 1932. You request that this tabulation be brought up to date and that the amount of copper manufactures on which added duty was imposed by the Revenue Act of 1932 also be shown.

There is enclosed a tabulation which brings these data up to date insofar as the information is available. The amount of copper manufactures on which added duty was imposed by the Revenue Act of 1932 is not available for any month of the calendar year 1935.

The enclosure forwarded with your letter is returned herewith.

Very truly yours,

JAMES H. MOYLE,
Commissioner of Customs.

NOTE.—Prepared by Division of Statistics and Research, Bureau of Customs, Treasury Department.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion to lay on the table is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the joint resolution now passed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is passed and beyond hope. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

TAXATION OF FEDERAL AND STATE BONDS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, we have had assurances from the responsible leaders that there will be legislation to carry out the President's tax program. Thus far no reference has been made to a very important paragraph in the President's message of June 19, wherein he recommends that the Congress enact a joint resolution looking toward a proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States so that the income from securities hereafter issued by the Federal Government, and the income from securities hereafter issued by States and municipalities, shall be taxable.

Let me read that, as I think, important paragraph of the President's message:

I renew, however, at this time the recommendations made by predecessors for the submission and ratification of a constitutional amendment whereby the Federal Government will be permitted to tax the income on subsequently issued State and local securities, and likewise for the taxation by State and local governments of future issues of Federal securities.

Mr. President, I am not seeking to put myself forward; but surely he would be a singular man who did not, with much gratification, observe that the President has submitted in his message a recommendation which is almost specifically and directly in accord with the suggestion advanced by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in the last Congress.

It will be recalled that in the Seventy-third Congress a joint resolution was introduced proposing to amend the Constitution so that the Federal Government shall have the power to tax the income on securities hereafter issued by States and municipalities, and the States and municipalities shall have the power to tax the income on securities hereafter issued by the Federal Government. That joint resolution was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I do not recall that the action of the committee was unanimous, but, with possibly one or two dissenting votes, the joint resolution was recommended to the Senate for passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution referred to and the report of the committee thereon may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution and the report were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S. J. Res. 7, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

"SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of such State."

[S. Rept. No. 738, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany S. J. Res. 7):

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution No. 7, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes, report the same favorably to the Senate without amendment and recommend that the joint resolution do pass.

This proposed amendment strikes at an evil in our system of taxation which is already great, and if unchecked will grow—indeed, has grown—to such magnitude as to threaten the existence of our institutions. We must assume that the Constitution of the United States as it now stands not only permits the issuance of tax-exempt securities by both the Federal and the State Governments but prevents the Federal Government, on the one hand, from levying an income tax on securities issued by the several States, and the States, on the other hand, from levying an income tax on the securities issued by the Federal Government.

Students of our form of government recognize, of course, that the question is complicated owing to the very nature of our constitutional system of dual Governments, Federal and State.

The existence of conditions that enable any municipality or political subdivision to issue tax-free securities directly permits a certain class of property owners to partake of the comforts and benefits of government without bearing any share of the expense burden of government.

All private property should pay its just proportion of the expenses of maintaining the Government.

The issuance of tax-exempt securities permits—

(1) A large portion of property to escape taxation, thereby causing great loss of revenue.

(2) It violates the sound tax principle of "ability to pay" and it unfairly discriminates among taxpayers.

(3) It discourages investment in new enterprises.

(4) It encourages extravagances of governmental agencies.

(5) It grants private subsidies and special privileges, obnoxious to our system.

(6) By withdrawing money from private enterprise it increases the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by the Government and thereby adds to the cost of living.

(7) It creates, and quite naturally, social unrest.

It will be observed that the form of this amendment forbids discrimination against securities issued by the States, or under their authority, in favor of national securities, and that the States, on the other hand, are forbidden to discriminate against the securities issued by the Federal Government.

Vigor and vision are the supreme need of the hour, and unless we act with promptness on this subject the National Government and some of the States will bog down and sink into the grasp of the all-smothering, all-destroying quicksands of insolvency.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether there is a similar joint resolution pending before the Committee on the Judiciary at this time?

Mr. ASHURST. In answer to the able Senator from Massachusetts, let me say that the author of the joint resolution which was reported favorably in the last Congress has introduced the same measure, and a subcommittee has been appointed to consider it. I believe I am authorized to say that at an early date a report will be made on the joint resolution, and every legitimate effort will be exerted to induce the Senate to adopt it before adjournment.

Mr. WALSH. There is no reason, therefore, why the Committee on the Judiciary should not consider that portion of the President's message?

Mr. ASHURST. The Committee on the Judiciary would be the appropriate committee to consider the proposed constitutional amendment. However, we admit that there are other committees well equipped properly and ably to consider a proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest that the Senator have his committee make a report.

Mr. ASHURST. We shall do so at an early date.

Mr. President, I have been asked many questions by Senators, by members of the press, and by letter as to what the proposed constitutional amendment seems to accomplish. It is, I might say, reciprocal in its nature. The author of the proposed amendment is entitled to no great credit for any inventive genius, and is pioneering no new ground, because it is a rescript in haec verbae of the amendment which was reported favorably from the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives some 10 years ago, and which lacked but a few votes of being adopted by that body.

The joint resolution which I am discussing, and which the committee expects to report, would permit, on the one hand, the taxation of the income from securities issued by the Federal Government, provided no discrimination would result as against securities issued by States or under their authority in favor of national securities; and each State, on the other hand, would be permitted to tax securities issued by the Federal Government, provided the levying of such a tax by a State would not result in discrimination in favor of securities issued by it or under its authority. In other words, the several States would be given the same rights with reference to taxing the income from Federal securities as the National Government would be given with reference to taxation of the income from State securities.

I read the resolution, omitting the preliminary features and the resolving clause:

SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of such State.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is the purpose of the Senator, then, to have the Federal Government tax the securities of the school districts in my State?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. And in Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, whatever benefit the States would derive by taxing Federal securities would all be centered in Chicago and New York and the other great financial centers where the Federal bonds would be issued, whereas the interest on all the Federal bonds would be paid by the taxpayers of the rest of the United States. Is not that true?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have reread the debate which took place in the House of Representatives on February 8, 1924, and noted with mute admiration and much respect the able argument of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in opposition to a similar amendment at that time. He was, in my judgment, the leader in the House in opposing the proposed constitutional amendment.

As is his wont, as is his habit and custom, he not only sounded the depths and shoals of the classics, he made excursions into philosophy, and I believe a rereading of the speech of the able Senator from Texas will amply repay any person. I am certain that his address on February 8, 1924, had more to do with the defeat of the joint resolution than did any other speech made in the House. But conditions have changed mightily within 10 years. The earth has shifted beneath our feet, and even the skies above our heads have paled. A vast deal of water has run under the bridge. Whilst the beauty and the classic arrangement of the powerfully eloquent appeal of the Senator would move us at this time, events have occurred which have changed conditions.

Mr. President, I did not intend to launch into a lengthy speech in favor of taxing securities issued by Nation and State, but it is obvious that vast appropriations have been and are being made, and money must be obtained. Notwithstanding the able and numerous excursions into literature made by my friend from Texas, there lives no man who can truly say it is morally right and just that I may have my breast pockets filled with securities the interest on which may not be taxed by Nation or State. There does not live an intellectual genius sufficiently agile or resourceful to defend a system under which A or B may have his strong box filled with securities issued by State, Nation, county, or precinct, interest on which may not be taxed, whereas the humble farmer's home may be taxed.

I shall not tire the Senate this afternoon by repeating the numerous arguments which might be made in favor of the taxation of income from securities issued by Nation and State.

Mr. President, let me say that the proposed constitutional amendment has encountered much difficulty in the House of Representatives and in the Senate because many able men have overlooked the reciprocal feature. If a State desires to tax the income from Federal securities, it must in return grant to the Federal Government the right to tax income from securities issued by the State. The proposed amendment does not prevent the issuance of tax-exempt securities, but it does make it possible, by the reciprocal nature of its provisions, for a just and fair arrangement to be made so that billions upon billions of dollars may not escape their just burden of taxation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I am in entire sympathy with the general philosophy of preventing any further issuance of tax-exempt securities. I do not believe it is wise or just to issue tax-exempt securities. But I wish to suggest to those who are advocating these amendments, that in my opinion, if a Federal proposal goes to the States incorporating the power of the National Government to tax city and State securities, it will never be ratified. The States will never give up their right in that regard, in my opinion. It is a serious thing for one sovereignty to surrender to another sovereignty the power to tax its instrumentalities or to tax the bonds or securities it may issue. We ought to think seriously about the form of the proposal with reference to preventing the issuance of tax-exempt securities by the National Government. If we provide in the proposed amendment that the National Government shall have power to tax city and State securities, in my opinion we will kill the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. It will follow, if we tax State and municipal securities, that we should authorize the States to tax Federal securities. It would be inconceivable to me that the Federal Government should claim the right to tax the securities of a Commonwealth and deny the Commonwealth the right to tax national securities on equal terms.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with that. But even that will not satisfy the States. That appears on its face equitable as between the National Government and the States, but is it?

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just going to say that once we take that power it is likely to result in an impairment of both National and State credit. The States would tax the Federal securities as much as possible, and there might be a disposition on the part of the Federal Government to tax State securities as high as possible.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if one sovereignty is given the power to tax another sovereignty, the second sovereignty is surrendering a right to protect itself, surrendering a right to protect its own securities and its own credit, because it will have no control over the amount of the taxes which may be levied upon its securities.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the irresistible logic, therefore, of the arguments of the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is that whilst, of course, a constitutional amendment would be required to enable such securities to be taxed hereafter, and a constitutional amendment would be required to enable a tax to be levied on the income derived from securities issued by municipalities erected by the States, a constitutional amendment would not be needed to enable us to provide that hereafter no more tax-exempt securities shall be issued.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is this thought in that connection: The present Congress might declare against the issuance of Federal tax-exempt securities, and the next Congress might repeal the act, and we should have no stabilized or permanent policy. If a provision were placed in the Constitution forbidding the issuance of tax-exempt securities, the result would be that those already issued would be greatly appreciated in value.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. There would be a permanent policy on the subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think there ought to be a permanent, definite policy on the part of the Federal Government against the issuance of tax-exempt securities. I am speaking of this as a practical policy. In my opinion, we ought to consider very seriously the question of submitting an amendment giving the Federal Government power to tax State securities, because as a practical proposition, in the first place, I do not believe it will ever be ratified. I say this, not in support of tax-exempt securities, but as one opposed to them. It may be that each sovereignty will have to take up the problem. I am speaking as to the practical way to accomplish something along this line.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am bound to say that I do not agree with the President in all things. I do not, of course, agree with any man in everything. However, I will say that I found much satisfaction in the President's message. The President directly recommends that which was contained in the joint resolution reported by the Judiciary Committee last year.

Let me again read the President's message of June 19:

> I renew, however, at this time the recommendations made by my predecessors for the submission and ratification of a constitutional amendment whereby the Federal Government will be permitted to tax the income on subsequently issued State and local securities and likewise for the taxation by State and local governments of future issues of Federal securities.

Mr. President, I should not cut much of a figure in an argument if opposed by such able and accurate scholars as the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; but I do assert that our Government and the States themselves are about to fall down and sink in the sands of national and State insolvency. Of course the able Senator from Idaho points out that which is obvious—"The power to tax is the power to destroy." I can see that, with his cautiousness and his prudence and his statesmanlike qualities, he anticipates that the time might come when a State would be injured and made to suffer, and perhaps even be exterminated, if heavy taxes were laid on the income from all securities issued by it. It is not possible to erect any form of government without some injustice being done to some persons. We run a risk if we adopt this amendment or any other; but I think it is a risk we can well afford to run.

Geniuses do not rule the world; geniuses have little to do with the progress of civilization. Common sense rules the world.

Mr. SMITH. At times.

Mr. ASHURST. At times?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Here I am beset by the scholarly farmer from South Carolina. I feel, however, that I shall be able to withstand such attacks.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. LONERGAN. I wish to say to my friend from Arizona that on January 16, 1934, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] had inserted in the RECORD a long report on this subject which I prepared.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say that I should not be just if I did not at this time say that I have had, in my researches on this subject, the constant advice and help of the senior Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I presume it is futile to engage at this time in a general debate on this proposed amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I should not like to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of what the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Arkansas have suggested, with both of whom I agree, that we could not think of asking the States to ratify an amendment to the Constitution which would allow the Federal Government to tax their securities without giving them the same rights which the Federal Government would enjoy, let me suggest if that were brought about, there would, of course, be 48 separate rates of taxation upon the income from the Federal securities in the hands of the citizens of the States. Does the Senator believe it would be wise or practicable to subject Federal securities bearing a uniform rate of interest to all holders to a rate of taxation which would be different as to 48 States, resulting really in different rates of interest on such securities, without materially affecting the credit of the United States Government or the willingness of the people to invest in Federal securities?

Mr. ASHURST. That is a long question; it is a searching question; but my answer to it is, "no." That is, I am not afraid. I do not anticipate any trouble.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will realize that there would be different rates of taxation in the different States on Federal securities.

Mr. ASHURST. That might be true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would not those who bought securities be actuated by a condition which would almost compel the Treasury Department to issue Federal securities at the highest possible rate in order that it might induce persons in the 48 States to buy them?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my opinion is that for the next decade, or the next 20 or 30 years, the securities which people will seek in order to sustain them in their old age will be bonds issued by the Government of the United States or some State or some city.

Consider, for example, the securities issued by the State of Maryland. I am not in the investment business; but, if I were, I should regard a Maryland bond as a prime security. It is unnecessary to give the reasons, and I am not discriminating against other States.

I had not intended to precipitate a debate; but many Senators have asked me what was to be done, and what was to be said about the portion of the President's message where he specifically recommends just what the Judiciary Committee last year suggested should be done. I do not wish to be spinning much and weaving nothing. I am not seeking any new burdens. There is no need for a constitutional amendment to tax the income on securities hereafter issued by the Federal Government. Of course, if a third of the Senate is going to vote against a proposed constitutional amendment which would be reciprocal in its nature, it is useless for me to beseech Senators to work and worry, if they do not intend to permit such an amendment to be passed.

Let me say that I have the greatest respect for the opinions of other Senators. There is no stronger State-rights man in the Senate than am I. However, after an investigation—not of a few months, but of years—I do not perceive any peril arising from such an amendment reciprocal in its nature. I have consulted on the subject with 4 Secretaries of the Treasury, and at least 2 Presidents. They were all in favor of such an amendment, reciprocal in its nature. Because of its reciprocal nature, no one saw any peril arising from it to the States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Suppose there was held in a State a great number of municipal and State bonds issued in that State, but very few Federal bonds. There would be paid in taxes, under the Federal power to tax, just the difference between the bonds which the State's citizens held of the Federal Government and the local bonds.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say, in answer to my able friend from South Carolina—who never rises without illuminating and adorning the subject—that the proposed amendment is not retroactive in its nature. It is purely prospective. I wonder if my able friend from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] will not answer a question: Did he not introduce a measure proposing a constitutional amendment under which the income on securities issued hereafter could be taxed?

Mr. BYRD. My amendment proposed to tax income on securities issued in the future.

Mr. ASHURST. I am very pleased to know that, because the Senator thinks so clearly that I am sure he would not presume to introduce a retroactive amendment. Inasmuch as the proposed amendment to which I am referring is not retroactive, but is purely prospective, I fail to see how any State could be injured. There would be ample opportunity for the State to protect itself. It could not be injured by an amendment, the action under which would take place in the future.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the only thing which would cause me to oppose any such amendment as this is that there is every tendency, it seems to me, in all the bills introduced, to get the camel's nose under the tent and invade the rights of the States; and I know of no more potent way to do so than to give the Federal Government the right to go into the 48 sovereign States and tax the instrumentalities of their governments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I fear the Senator sees objections and possible injuries which are not distinct to my perception. Frankly, if this were with me a matter of first impression I might feel I was wrong. I beg my honorable friend to believe I have studied it for many years and consulted many authorities. I ask him to believe me when I say if I thought that State rights would be invaded, that the integrity or sovereignty of the States would be impaired by such an amendment, he would find me standing with him, as I did very recently on a bill which I thought invaded State rights. But I do not perceive in what fashion any State would be injured if the Federal Government should require the owner of a bond, issued by a city or a State, to pay an income tax on such bond. I fail to perceive any possibility of injury.

There is a consideration greater than that. I do not want any State destroyed, but there is a greater peril than that. We do not know, in the absence of accurate advice, just what the facts are; but Senators would be astonished to know how vast are the resources of untaxed wealth which have been piled up in this country. Ten years ago I had prepared a set of tables showing the amount of tax-exempt securities issued by the Federal Government, by the States, counties, cities, towns, precincts, municipalities, and districts. The figures are stupendous and their magnitude is growing by the day and by the hour. Before the silver has come to the temples of the younger men here, the problem will be of portentous proportions, and future Congresses will have to wrestle with it, and they might be retroactive in their action. Now at this time when the President has recommended the proposal, when we need the revenues so badly, why halt and pause?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think even a greater danger than the Federal Government taxing the securities of the States would arise from giving the States the power to tax the securities of the Federal Government, and for this reason——

Mr. ASHURST. May I interrupt the Senator? I myself have been guilty of an erroneous expression. I fear I have persisted in saying we should tax securities. I mean we should tax the income of securities. The able Senator, too, means to tax the income of securities, no doubt.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. I may say to the Senator—and, of course, there is nothing personal in this illustration—that it is perfectly possible to conceive of a time in this country, in the event of war, or period of other great stress, when certain States might not be in sympathy with the Federal Government and might, through the medium of excessive taxation of Government securities held in such States, to a great extent destroy the credit of the Government. I am going to use even this illustration. Suppose the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] who has had, I believe, some quarrel with the Federal administration, and who has a very friendly law-making body in that State, should have enacted a very high tax on incomes derived from Federal securities. It would make it almost impossible——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am serious about this.

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order that I want my friend to use the Governor of Georgia rather than myself as a horrible example. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is not well taken. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. TYDINGS. In such a case it would be perfectly conceivable that a citizen of Louisiana would feel that the taxes imposed were so burdensome that he would not prefer to buy the securities of the Federal Government. I think, while there may be danger of the Federal Government taxing the income derived from bonds of the States, it would be an even greater danger to allow the States to tax the securities of the Federal Government—and I have always thought I was a firm believer in State rights.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator from Maryland has drifted into an error similar to that which many of us make. Suppose this tax about which he is talking on Federal securities had to be uniform on all securities.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the point.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose when the States wanted to tax Federal securities, they had, by the same operation, to tax their own security at the same rate. Would not that prevent the injury of which the Senator from Maryland is fearful?

Mr. TYDINGS. It would go far, but may I point out to the Senator from Nebraska that, State-rights man that I am, I would much rather see the Federal Government have the right to tax the securities of the State, to tax that vast source of revenue, than I would to have the States have the right to tax the securities of the Federal Government, because it is perfectly possible that there may be ways and means of discrimination so that the securities of the Federal Government would not have a uniform sale over the country in time of need.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator; but if we granted the power to tax income from Federal securities, and the same law required exactly the same tax upon State and municipal bonds within the States, I think we would have met at once the danger which is feared by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not agree with that entirely, but may I say once more that I think it is a very dangerous precedent to allow the States to have control, even remotely, over the credit of the Federal Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator on that point. As between the two, the one I would want to protect would be the Federal Government, because in time of war or of great emergency it might be fatal if the Federal Government should be unable to raise sufficient funds. That is the only reason why I think the Federal Government ought to have the power to tax the income of a Governor or an attorney general of a State, the same as the income of Senators and Representatives is taxed. It ought to tax everything alike. There should be no discrimination. A great fear seems to be lurking in the minds of many when we start out by saying the right to tax is the power to destroy. If we couple with the tax proposition a provision that it shall be uniform on everybody and upon everything, I think that danger at once disappears.

We ought to be able now, through the Federal Government—and I believe the amendment to the Constitution intended that it should be within the power of the Federal Government—to tax all incomes, in the words of the amendment, "from whatever source derived." But the Supreme Court has decided we cannot do it, and, of course, we have to abide by that decision.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question with reference to uniformity. Would the Senator require every State to tax the income from Federal securities at the same rate, or would he prescribe the maximum?

Mr. NORRIS. I should require that if a State wanted to tax incomes from Federal securities it should tax income in that particular State at the same rate, so there would be no difference whatever between the tax on the income from a Federal bond and the tax on the income from a State or county or municipal bond.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield further to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska, of course, within a State there would be uniform taxation on that type of security, but one State might have a higher rate than another. There could be no limitation placed upon the right of a State to levy taxes.

My objection went primarily to the condition where States, for some purpose, might hamstring or curtail the credit of the Federal Government.

While I have not thought the thing through, and am only finding my way in this discussion, at this point I should say that while I might favor, on reflection, in order to tax large incomes from State and municipal securities, having the Federal Government tax those securities even though it would add to the cost of floating them, I do not believe in any case I could ever bring myself to support an amendment allowing the States to tax the credit of the Federal Government.

Mr. NORRIS. There perhaps would be, as the Senator says, a rate of taxation in Maryland different from the rate of taxation in New York. There now are differences in the rates of taxation on everything. I do not suppose two States can be found in the Union where the tax rates are just the same. That would be true if the incomes from securities of the Federal Government should be taxed; but if the States had to tax their own securities at the same rate, there would not be any danger of their attempting to destroy the Federal Government, because they would destroy themselves by the same act.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I desire to make a concluding observation.

I can see why many Senators very properly would not desire to have the Federal Government tax the income of the States. They think that is an invasion of States rights, and that observation is well supported by reason. Already, however, the Federal Government does that. It taxes corporations in the States; it taxes interstate commerce in the States; and it taxes so much in the States that I can see in real effect, and from that angle alone, very little difference in taxing money which is invested in Federal securities, and represents property.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I really intended this address of mine to be more in the nature of an assurance to the Senate that we should bring in a constitutional amendment. I thought I should be received with open arms and with hosannas, and complimented on the assiduity and the zeal with which I was proceeding. I have explored far enough to see that even if our committee should bring in a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment, we might never be able to secure its passage.

Mr. NORRIS. I share with the Senator that view. I confess I became very much discouraged. If we were able as a Federal Government to tax incomes, as our Constitution says, "from whatever source derived", I believe we should relieve our country of a great deal of embarrassment. It seemed to me that when the Supreme Court decided that we could not tax securities of State governments, or State salaries, or anything of the kind, it was going, as apparently most people go, on the theory that "the power to tax is the power to destroy"; but nobody was proposing that we should levy on State securities a tax different from the tax we should levy on Federal securities. Nobody was proposing that we should tax the income of the Governor of the State of Iowa at a different rate from that at which we should tax the income of a Senator from Iowa. Until Congress did pass that kind of a law—I cannot conceive that it ever would, unless it did, unless it undertook to levy taxes upon State officials or State securities at a higher rate than the taxes levied upon Federal officials or Federal securities—it seemed to me no discrimination could be involved in it. There could not be any attempt to destroy. A levy of the kind contemplated is taxation. It is not made with the intention of destroying anybody or injuring any State.

In the face of our divided opinion, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], at the last session of Congress, or the session before that, offered an amendment to a revenue bill in which he proposed to make the levy, and let the matter again go to the Supreme Court. It was defeated in the Senate. We could not even get a majority vote for it, much less a two-thirds vote such as a constitutional amendment has to have; so I felt very much discouraged.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. That amendment was adopted by the Senate, I think, and was eliminated in conference.

Mr. NORRIS. The one of which I am thinking was not adopted. It was defeated.

Mr. LONG. I desire to say that I have voted both ways on this question, as I have been accused of doing on another matter.

Mr. ASHURST. When the Senator from Louisiana shall have been here as long as I have, he will find himself voting three or four ways on every question.

Mr. LONG. Shortly after I came to the Senate, I expressed the hope that we ought not to undertake to tax municipal and State securities. One night, when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] offered his amendment, all of a sudden I concluded, along with the majority, that I would vote for it. My friend, the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], came to me a few minutes later and said, "The proposition you voted for was Mellon's original scheme of taxing municipal securities." I got to considering the matter again, and I felt considerable doubt as to whether I had voted right on the matter the last time.

I am not at all clear but that we shall get ourselves into pretty deep water in undertaking to permit one government to tax the securities of another government, because what would be accomplished by the Federal Government taxing the courthouse of the State, and the State in turn taxing the post office of the Government? That is what this proposal really means.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course I deny the correctness of the analogy of the able Senator from Louisiana. I say there is a vast difference between the Federal Government taxing the courthouse in a county and taxing the income of securities issued by a State.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Nebraska. If it could be shown to the Senator from Nebraska that we should pay out more in increased interest on our bonds when they were taxable than we should get back in taxes, would that be an argument?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that would be an argument; and, if the Senator from Arizona will yield——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have always taken it into consideration, though I think a great many people who are crying out—and I am one of them—for taxation of what are now exempt securities do not take into consideration the fact that these securities draw a lower rate of interest than they would draw if they were taxable. I think that follows. So it is really taking the money out of one pocket and putting it into another, with some exceptions.

The great drawback about the present condition, to my mind, is that we create in the minds of the American people an impression that there are wealthy people who are selected to pay less taxes than others. A great many of them have invested their money in tax-free securities.

I think there is more feeling than is justified against those classes of people. For instance, I do not think it is disreputable to own tax-free securities. As poor as I am, I myself have some of them; and I do not blame any man for making that kind of investment. In fact, when we build our schoolhouses and our courthouses and issue bonds for the purpose, they are tax-exempt under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. If somebody did not buy them, however, we could not build our schoolhouses and our courthouses.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are exempt in another State. One State can tax the securities of another.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; but it does seem to me that by our dual system of taxation we create dissatisfaction and lack of contentment in the minds and hearts of people. Perhaps it is unjustified, but it is there just the same; and it would all be ironed out if we made everybody pay a tax on his income, even though in the end there would be no difference in the amount received by the Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that when this matter was up some years ago, Secretary Mellon testified before a House committee that if a tax should be put on Federal securities or on State securities it would raise the interest rate 1 percent annually on all of them. Take the case of the schools out in Nebraska: A schoolhouse is built there, and bonds running for 40 years are issued. One percent a year for 40 years is 40 percent of the bond issue.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in the case the Senator puts, the matter is practically as long as it is broad; but I think it will be found that if we take all the elements into consideration, the people lose money by the escape from taxation of certain classes of securities, although the amount they lose may be very much exaggerated. But it does permit the existence of a class of people owning securities and owning property of that kind to escape taxation, while others have to pay taxes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator, and then I shall be through, that most of the tax-exempts are held by corporations, insurance companies, and savings banks, and they do not pay any surtaxes. The records show that they pay only the flat corporation taxes.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no such thing as a surtax on State securities. The surtax applies only to Federal securities.

Mr. CONNALLY. If they are taxed, they have to pay surtaxes.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The point I make is that if we tax them, they will have to pay surtaxes. Most of the tax-exempt securities are owned by insurance companies and other companies which pay no surtaxes.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know how the great bulk of them are owned, but it does seem to me that everyone must admit that we have two classes of owners of property. One class is composed of those who own property on which they pay no taxes, and the other class is composed of those who pay taxes on what they own, and even though the result would be just the same, it would be better, in my judgment, and would create more satisfaction and better contentment if they all paid taxes, even though in the end it did not make any difference.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. That very point has been the one in particular which has caused me more difficulty in considering this question than all the others combined.

Aside from the relative position of the States in taxing Federal securities and the Federal taxation of State securities, we all know that the reason why the income from such securities is not taxed is, at least theoretically, that the people whose obligations they are obtain a lower rate of interest because of their nontaxability.

I realize that when we find someone who has millions of dollars invested in tax-exempt securities the natural thing is to get out before a crowd of people somewhere and denounce him as a man who has concentrated all of his wealth in securities which pay no taxes. But we do not take the trouble at the same time to tell the people that, after all, they are saving money in taxes in the way of a rate of interest, because the security which is held by this man we are denouncing is tax exempt.

The fact which it seems to me we cannot lose sight of is that these are the obligations of the people, incurred in a sovereign capacity in order to furnish money to carry out some sovereign object, the object of government, and that the securities are made nontaxable in order that the obligations of the people in their sovereign capacity may obtain a lower rate of interest.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. BARKLEY. In just a moment. Even if we can satisfy ourselves and the people by saying to them that we are making everybody pay taxes on the securities they hold which belong to the people, I do not see any social advantage or any governmental advantage in requiring the people to pay a larger interest rate on the obligations they have incurred in bond issues in order to make someone who holds those obligations pay interest on the income from them.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. In the main, except for the last paragraph, I agree fully with the Senator. But it seems to me that the Senator must not forget, and that all of us must not forget, that while these tax-free obligations are obligations of the people, and they are saving money by a lower interest rate, we must tax someone. Suppose we treated all bondholders as we do those who hold tax-free securities, and taxed none of them, and let all bonds go at a low rate of interest. I do not think anyone would advocate that, because in the end we would collect no taxes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is only one step from taxing the income from a piece of property to taxing the property itself; just one step.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we could conceive the time ever arriving when, in addition to taxing the income from these public securities, we actually taxed the securities themselves by an ad valorem tax, I can very easily foresee the doubling or trebling of the interest rates now borne by many of these public securities, because in the city where I live, for instance, the rate of taxation, city, county, and State, is more than $3 a hundred, which is more than the interest borne by some of the securities which are outstanding. So that we have to consider that this is not something which stops at the taxing of income; it may go on to taxing the security from which the income is derived.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, so far from being irritated by these interruptions, I am grateful. I started out with the feeling that my announcement would be met with at least manifestations of approval everywhere. I am glad now that I made this exploratory speech. I do not think I surrender easily or quickly, but it is obvious that the Committee on the Judiciary would not be able to have the joint resolution agreed to in the form I have suggested, or in any form, even if the committee were unanimous.

One or two remarks have been made which, in justice to myself, I think call for a reply. One of the able Senators said something about denouncing people who hold tax-free securities. I do not believe that on the public hustings or in a public speech outside of the Senate of the United States I have ever referred to tax-exempt securities. I do not recall that in all the stormy political battles of my career I have ever referred on the hustings to tax-exempt securities. In the first place, the hustings would not be the appropriate place to make such a reference.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think I was the Senator who made the statement to which he is referring. I had no reference, of course, to the Senator; but it is true that some people do make such denunciations.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct. Let me say, moreover, that I agree entirely with the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that there is no moral obliquity, there is nothing wrong or unpatriotic in any citizen buying all the tax-exempt securities he pleases to buy. In fact, I venture the assertion that in times of stress, in times of peril, or when a district in a State desires to raise money, the man who buys tax-exempt securities is feted at the clubs, is banqueted, and is a hero; and properly so. He is investing his money at 3 or 4 percent, when he might put it into industry and make 8 percent.

I assure Senators, and particularly my able friend from Kentucky, that I have no word of criticism; I indeed have no ear to listen to criticism of citizens who have tax-exempt securities, be they great or small in volume. I wish to say again, in the most emphatic terms, there is nothing wrong in buying them, and the Senate is the only place where I have heard the insinuation that there might be something sinister about holding tax-exempt securities.

My small savings happen to be in Government bonds, and those bonds happen to be tax exempt; but I do not feel that I am subject to any reproach for investing my savings in securities of the Government.

I did not come to town yesterday, I was not born yesterday, and I have explored far enough at least to make me doubt very much whether we will be able to pass the joint resolution through the Congress.

In conclusion, let me say that four Secretaries of the Treasury, and that President Harding, President Coolidge, and President Franklin Roosevelt have recommended the submission to the States of exactly such a constitutional amendment as I have offered and as I presented at the last session of the Congress.

I yield the floor.

STATE HIGHWAY IN RAPIDES PARISH, LA.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 3038, being Calendar No. 996.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Is that the bill to which the present occupant of the chair objected on yesterday?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair does not object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. It is necessary that the highway be provided in order to use a bridge which has been constructed across the Red River.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill was unanimously favorably reported by the committee, and also favorably reported by the Department?

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3038) to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Rapides Parish, La., to the State of Louisiana for the purpose of a State highway across a portion of the Federal property occupied by the Veterans' Administration facility, Alexandria, La., which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the words "numbered 1", to insert "and State route no. 615", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the State of Louisiana, without expense to the Government of the United States, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain strip of land crossing the Veterans' Administration facility at Alexandria, La., along the Alexandria-Shreveport Highway, State route no. 1, and State route no. 615, in sections 1 and 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, Rapides Parish, La., upon condition that it shall always be used and maintained as a public highway, said strip of land being described as follows:

Beginning at a point in the located center line of the Alexandria-Colfax Highway at engineer's station 152+05.3, which point is in the south line of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, township 4 north, range 1 west, and north 89°54′ east, a distance of 325.5 feet from the southwest corner of the said northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, township 4 north, range 1 west; thence north 89°54′ east, along the said south line of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1, a distance of 51.37 feet to a point in the easterly right-of-way line of the Alexandria-Colfax Highway, said point being 50 feet easterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the easterly right-of-way line of said highway, the following two courses: Northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 3,204.03 feet, a distance of 283.92 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence north 17°6′ west, a distance of 1,637.37 feet to a point in the mesh wire fence enclosing residence lot, said point being 50 feet easterly and at right angles to the aformentioned center line; thence south 68°1′ west, along said fence line, a distance of 20.07 feet to a point, said point being 30 feet easterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the easterly right-of-way line of the aforementioned highway, the following courses: North 17°6′ west, a distance of 121.3 feet to the point of the beginning of a curve to the right; thence northwesterly along a curve to the right having a radius of 5,699.65 feet, a distance of 310.04 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence north 13°59′ west, a distance of 306.6 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 746.78 feet, a distance of 224.4 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence north 31°12′ west, a distance of 626 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 508.34 feet, a distance of 261.43 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence north 60°40′ west, a distance of 338.9 feet to a point, said point being 30 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line, same point also being 30 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the center line of the existing concrete highway from Alexandria toward Shreveport; thence north 29°20′ east, a distance of 10 feet to a point, said point being 40 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center lines; thence along the easterly right-of-way of the road from Alexandria toward Shreveport, the following two courses: North 60°40′ west, a distance of 113.15 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence northwesterly along a curve to the right having a radius of 429.64 feet, a distance of 363.79 feet, more or less, to a point in the north line of section 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, same being in the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property, said point also being 40 feet easterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the said north line of section 2 and the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property and crossing the aforementioned highway, the following two courses: West a distance of 40.84 feet to the center line of the existing concrete highway at engineer's station 197+93.8; thence west a distance of 40.7 feet to a point in a curve to the left in the westerly right-of-way line of the existing concrete highway from Alexandria toward Shreveport, said point being 40 feet westerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence southeasterly along said curve to the left having a radius of 509.64 feet, a distance of 198.9 feet to a point, said point being 40 feet westerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line and said point also being 30 feet northeasterly and at right angles to the highway leading to Regollet; thence along the northeasterly right-of-way of said highway leading to Regollet, the following two courses: North 60°40′ west, a distance of 75.24 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence northwesterly along a curve to the left having a radius of 1,303.57 feet, a distance of 397.58 feet, more or less, to a point in the north line of section 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, same being in the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property, said point also being 30 feet northerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along the said north line of section 2 and the north boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property and crossing the aforementioned highway, the following two courses: West a distance of 185.26 feet to the center line of the highway leading to Regollet; thence west a distance of 198.33 feet to a point in the westerly right-of-way line of the highway leading to Regollet; thence along the westerly right-of-way of the aforementioned highways, the following courses: South 81°18′ east, a distance of 307.35 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right, said point being 30 feet southwesterly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence along a curve to the right having a radius of 1,243.57 feet, a distance of 447.83 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence south 60°40′ east, a distance of 767.2 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence southeasterly along a curve to the right having a radius of 448.34 feet, a distance of 230.58 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence south 31°12′ east, a distance of 626 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence along a curve to the right having a radius of 686.78 feet, a distance of 206.37 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the right; thence south 13°59′ east, a distance of 306.6 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the left; thence along a curve to the left having a radius of 5,759.65 feet, a distance of 313.3 feet to the point of tangency of said curve to the left; thence south 17°6′ east, a distance of 131.58 feet to the corner of a mesh wire fence, said point being 30 feet westerly and at right angles to the center line of the Alexandria-Colfax Highway; thence south 51°36′ west, along said mesh wire fence, a distance of 21.47 feet to a point, said point being 50 feet westerly and at right angles to the aforementioned center line; thence south 17°6′ east, a distance of 1,617.88 feet to the point of beginning of a curve to the right; thence along the said south line of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 1 and the south boundary line of the Veterans' Administration property, north 89°54′ east, a distance of 51.21 feet to the point of beginning; containing in all 9.188 acres, more or less, and being shown in detail on a map showing the right-of-way required by the Louisiana Highway Commission through lands of the Veterans' Administration facility in sections 1 and 2, township 4 north, range 1 west, Rapides Parish, La., and dated April 24, 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE LATE SENATOR BRONSON CUTTING

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise at this time to make a few brief remarks concerning a former Member of this body and a distinguished citizen of my State.

I have delayed making these remarks for various reasons. Several Senators have expressed to me their desire to participate in a memorial service for former Senator Bronson Cutting. However, the session is rapidly slipping by, and it has been difficult to arrange a time when all Members can be suited as to convenience and hour.

I should not like to see this session of the Senate come to an end without some tribute being paid to a man who was so outstanding in my State as was the late Senator Cutting. It seems not only fitting but right that a Senator from New Mexico, the State of which he was so fond, should pay some tribute to him, and the words should be spoken here on the floor of the United States Senate, the place which was the scene of his great activities. Therefore, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, I wish to take the opportunity to make some brief references to my late colleague.

I shall attempt no high-sounding words nor flights of eloquence or oratory. I prefer to direct my thought to some of the things he did, to some of his traits of character, and some of the outstanding causes in which he believed and for which he fought.

His life, his character, his deeds, his actions tell their own story. While I shall mention only a few things today, his friends will recall many more. Let his virtues, his accomplishments, and his achievements be his eulogy. Let them write his epitaph. Somehow I believe he would prefer to have it so.

Senator Cutting was an outstanding figure in New Mexico. He occupied a high and conspicuous place in the affairs of my State, but he was not confined or limited to the affairs of New Mexico, for his interest and his influence were indeed Nation-wide. Liberal in thought, independent in action, he early demonstrated qualities of leadership which placed him in the foremost ranks of the public men of New Mexico and of the Nation.

It is of more personal things and traits that I would speak; and in that regard, Mr. President, what shall I say? Shall I say my late colleague was a man of great intellect, a man of culture, a man of ability?

For nearly 8 years he served with you in the Senate of the United States. You explored the depths of his intellect. You have long since known he was an honor graduate of one of America's greatest universities. You know that he continued research and study long after college days were over. You, his colleagues, saw him frequently demonstrate here in the Chamber of the Senate that he was a man of strong intellectual power.

Was he cultured? You who came in contact with him throughout the years of his service here know he was a man of gentle mien, of kindly disposition, always courteous and polite, modest, and not forward. Indeed, he was a man of rare refinement and culture.

Did he have ability? His record here answers that question. But even better than the cold record, Senators who engaged with him in debate, who sat with him on committees, knew he was a man of ability. He was, indeed, a man of pronounced ability, and the future promised for him even more than the past revealed.

Yes; Senator Bronson Cutting was a man of intellect, a man of culture, a man of ability. He discharged the duties of the high and honorable office of a Senator of the United States with credit to himself, to the State he represented, and to this honorable body.

Mr. President, of these and similar virtues one could speak at length. I could tell you he was a man of courage, for he was. I could recount instances where he repeatedly demonstrated his fearlessness in public and in private life. He did not hesitate to follow a course, notwithstanding obstacles and most strenuous opposition, once he decided that course was the right one. He was a courageous man.

He was a man who had a most keen sense of public duty and of responsibility for the obligations of public office. He held these duties and responsibilities high, and always sought to discharge them ably, honorably, and honestly.

Senator Cutting was intensely human; a man of sympathetic disposition, ever willing to assist his less fortunate brothers. He did not expect perfection in others. He knew and understood the weaknesses of human nature; he was always ready to overlook, forgive, and forget the mistakes and errors of his fellow man.

He went to my State a sick man, a very sick man. He well knew and understood the tragedy and sorrow of ill health, sickness, and pain. Perhaps it was because of his own experience that he never failed to lend a ready ear to the plea of misfortune and human suffering.

Throughout the length and breadth of New Mexico, in almost every county, city, village, and hamlet of the State, will be found men and women who have been aided by the sympathetic understanding, the helping hand of Bronson M. Cutting. In Taos, Rio Arriba, Dona Ana, Eddy, San Juan, Union, and Hidalgo and all the counties which lie between, in mountain fastness, valley, plain, desert, and mesa, live men and women who mourn today because their friend and benefactor is no more.

Perhaps the best tribute to Senator Cutting is found among the men and women in my State who were closest to him, those who were associated with him in business, who had been with him for many years and who knew him perhaps better than anyone else. They, his own employees, today sincerely and deeply mourn the loss of Senator Cutting, not because he was their employer but because he was their friend.

Not only in the State of New Mexico, but throughout all the United States, those who toil and labor mingle their tears with the tears of friends and loved ones of Senator Cutting. Labor knows a valiant champion of their cause is gone. He who was ready and willing at all times to lift his voice in the Senate of the United States or elsewhere for them and their rights can never plead for them again. Labor lost an ally and a friend when Bronson Cutting died.

A soldier went down in that tragic accident, a soldier who had served his country. The veterans of all wars wept unashamed on May 6 when their comrade lost the last great battle with man's ever-destroying adversary, Death.

A Senator of the United States, a brave man, a loyal friend, a courageous statesman, a worthy son of a worthy father and a brave spartan mother, is gone.

Senators of the United States may well revere his memory and pay tribute to his virtues.

There is a path to the vast unknown,
A trail which you and I
Must tread, and treading go alone,
The way of those who die.

I know not where that path may be,
Nor where its borders lie,
I only know it's waiting me,
The way of those who die.

And though that way be dark or fair,
Or dangers hover nigh,
May I go forth with valiant air,
The way of those who die.

And may I go with steady tread,
Brave heart and tearless eye,
And may I walk with unbowed head,
The way of those who die.

Just this one thing I ask and pray,
Of Him who made the plan,
God grant, when I shall walk the way,
That I may be a man.

Our comrade, our colleague, and our friend has walked that way. With steady tread, brave heart, and tearless eye he did walk the way of those who die.

In life and in death Bronson M. Cutting was a man.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, Senator Cutting was one of God's noblemen. It is difficult for the common man to realize or comprehend why Senator Cutting should have been taken in the strength of his vigorous manhood while others who have perhaps most of their years of usefulness behind them should be left. His untimely death brought sorrow to the heart of every liberty-loving person in the United States. His work had only fairly begun. His ability, unquestioned and recognized, had caused even the ordinary observer to believe there were before him many useful years before the sun went down upon his life, and that an untold amount of good would come from his efforts. His courage was undaunted. He always stood for what he believed to be right regardless of how powerful the influences might be on the other side. His religion was the religion of Abou ben Adhem, "Write my name as one who loves his fellow man."

Although himself possessed of great wealth, he was nevertheless the first to come to the relief of the poor in any just cause. Money was useful to him only as it might relieve the poor and oppressed. His strong hand was always outstretched to lift up the unfortunate brother who had fallen by the wayside, perhaps through no fault of his own. His death was a personal loss to every man who believes in righteousness and fair dealing.

THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Senate resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. COPELAND that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2582) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? It is desired to have a brief executive session at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I yield for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

THE CALENDAR—POSTMASTERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Alice L. Woolman, to be postmaster at Coweta, Okla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is a nomination which has previously been passed over. The present occupant of the chair asks that it go over again, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] not being present at the time.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that nominations of postmasters, with the exception of the one passed over, may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters, with the exception noted, are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that nominations in the Navy may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nomination of James T. Buttrick to be brigadier general in the Marine Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 27, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Heavenly Father, we wait in the shadow of Thy holy presence. Thou art so mighty that there are no bounds, so blessed that no terms can describe Thee, and Thy mercy so unfailing that it eclipses the grandest reaches of mortal beings. May we see our sins in the light of Thy countenance and know the joy and rest of forgiveness. We pray Thee to strengthen our faith in a good God, in His providential care, in the divine influence that gives courage in despondency, hope in despair, light in darkness, and firmness in resistance. The Lord forbid that we should be so self-centered, so self-assuring that we feel not the impulse to follow Thee. Imbue us with that wisdom that is priceless, which enables us to distinguish clearly the real values of life and puts a premium on high thinking and clean living. In the name of Jesus our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5599. An act to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. TRAMMELL, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. HALE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. GLASS and Mr. HALE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND THE RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT ACT

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein three brief letters from the California fruit interests.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, twice before during the present session I have found it necessary to make some remarks to answer propaganda which is being carried on in California directed against the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act. I would not take the time to controvert it were it not so deliberate an attempt to defeat the farmers' best interest under the pretense of protecting him. This propaganda aims to instill in the minds of the farmers and producers of my State a belief that they are being mistreated by such agreements as have been arrived at, and that these agreements are favoring industry at the expense of agriculture.

Everyone who has looked at the text of the completed agreements knows that such a conclusion is totally unfounded. No agricultural product has been harmed, and very great benefits and concessions have been obtained for agricultural products in every one of the agreements so far entered into. Moreover, the concessions obtained have resulted in greatly increasing the exports of all agricultural commodities, thus broadening our foreign markets and relieving home markets of a part of the very considerable surplus that still exists in almost all agricultural lines. I do not intend to go into a detailed discussion of the concessions that have been granted by foreign countries, but I do wish to say that those products of my own State which are built upon an export basis, and I refer particularly to fresh, dried, and canned fruits, canned sardines, and similar products, have received a very generous and favorable treatment in every one of the trade agreements so far negotiated. These industries, built in California upon an export basis, suffered tremendously between 1929 and 1934 as a result of the increase in foreign tariffs, and quota restrictions which were put upon our products. It is these increases and these quota restrictions that are being removed or reduced through negotiations under the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act.

It seems necessary for me to speak a third time upon this subject for there has recently appeared more of this propaganda, which has been disseminated quite widely throughout my State. I refer to an editorial and an article entitled, "Hit the Reciprocal Tariff Act Now", which appeared in the Pacific Rural Press, a California farm weekly, in its issue of May 25, 1935. Reprints of these two pages have been circulated by the thousands throughout the State by someone who evidently has an ulterior purpose in view. Among other things, the editorial and the article criticized the conduct of trade-agreement negotiations at Washington on account of their alleged secrecy. This misconception has been so thoroughly exploded time after time on the floor of both House and Senate that I hesitate to take the time of the House to go into it at all, yet I must call attention to the fact that the only secrecy lies in the fact that the actual interchange of views between the foreign negotiators and our own must take place under conditions where bargains can be struck. A 30-day notice of intention to negotiate a reciprocal-trade agreement with any country is publicly given by the Department of State, and at the same time a bulletin furnishing statistics showing the principal items entering into the trade between the United States and the country concerned is issued for the benefit of all concerned. Opportunity is then given for anyone to supply information and present views on any particular item or items making up such trade to the committee on reciprocity information, which in turn passes on the assembled data to the actual negotiators. It is obvious that at the time public notice is given of intention to negotiate an agreement, our own Federal agencies may not know all of the products or subjects to which consideration will be given. They do not know what proposals the foreign government will make. To name all those which may be considered at the time that the 30-day public notice is given is impractical, because as conversations proceed new subjects or products may be brought under consideration, and that would require additional public notice of not less than 30 days each, a procedure which would so complicate and delay negotiations as to interfere seriously with the carrying out of the purposes of the act. Moreover, if the products and subjects to be considered were announced prior to negotiations, it is obvious that our hands would be tied in dealing with the foreign country involved and the bargaining value of our concessions might be seriously impaired. Of course, that is probably what the opponents of the policy are aiming at.

The main article to which I have referred, however, urging the weekly's readers to write their Representatives and Senators at Washington urging the repeal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, purported to show that our imports of fats, oils, canned and fresh fruits, and canned vegetables greatly exceeded the exports of these commodities, the inference being that we should abandon our search for export markets and endeavor to cut down imports and replace them with home products. Four diagrams purporting to show in the form of pillars the total tonnage of exports and imports of these commodities for the year 1934 were made a part of the article. I regret that the rules of the House do not permit the reproduction of these pillars in the text of my remarks, but I shall endeavor to make clear to you just what they represented in the way of figures. They were based on the alleged tonnage of imports and exports, without regard to the value thereof.

Mr. Speaker, I do not quarrel with a man who differs with me on a question of policy. I am willing to meet his arguments with those that I believe sound. I do object, however, to the distortion of facts, the publication of half truths, the use of inaccurate figures, and the omission of others in an effort to deceive the public, and particularly to deceive the California producers of the products referred to in this article. Such was the course pursued by the authors of this article. The graphs referred to are truly pillars of false implications. The idea of balancing imports and exports of the same general class of products is something new in "Buy American." It is a further extension of an isolationist policy. Let us analyze the facts and figures behind these pillars and see the truth for ourselves. We can then judge just to what length those who seek to wreck the reconstruction program of the administration program will go in their efforts to tear down and destroy.

CANNED VEGETABLES

The chart showing the exports and imports of canned vegetables is more nearly accurate than any of the others. The chart states that in 1934 we exported 16,671 tons of canned vegetables and that we imported 49,171 tons. Actually, the Department of Commerce figures call for 16,672 tons of exports and 49,063 tons of imports. The principal item in the import side of the group is canned tomatoes, amounting to 41,200 tons. These canned tomatoes come primarily from Italy, and, together with tomato paste amounting to 6,133 tons, are consumed in the United States largely by the Italian population. They are a rather weighty commodity in comparison with their value. In depicting the trade in weight a more unfavorable picture is drawn for those in favor of balancing American imports with exports. Unfortunately for this propaganda, an analysis shows that the largest single export item happens to be primarily a California product—asparagus—of which 9,161 tons were exported in 1934. I do not believe the California asparagus growers will subscribe very heartily to the doctrine that they should abandon their exports in order that fewer imports may be received. In this connection it is interesting to note that asparagus has received special concessions in at least three of the trade agreements already signed. Although the tonnage involved is only 9,161 tons of asparagus, compared with 41,200 tons of tomatoes imported, the value of the exports of asparagus is more than two-thirds the value of the imports of tomatoes. The total value of our exports of all canned vegetables in 1934 was $3,286,000, compared with the value of imports of $4,518,000. While the chart, by comparing the weight of the imports and exports, apparently showed imports are three or four times as important as exports, the fact is that in value our exports amounted to about 75 percent of the imports of all classes in 1934. After all, what we are concerned with is bringing home to the producer of asparagus and our other vegetables the income from their properties that they are justly entitled to, and the increased development of foreign markets is one way to accomplish this.

MISREPRESENTATION OF FATS AND OILS

Let us now consider the chart depicting United States exports and imports of fats and oils for 1934. The chart stated that the total exports of these commodities amounted to 594,182,759 pounds, and that the total imports amounted to 2,480,480,300 pounds. The actual facts are, according to the December monthly summary of the Department of Commerce, that the imports and exports for 1934 were as follows:

[1] Dutiable from sources other than the Phillipines.

The above table does not include coconut oil derived from imported copra, which enters free of duty. This amounted to some 245,000,000 pounds in 1934; but even assuming that this should be included, the total shown by the Department of Commerce figures is more than a billion pounds less than that shown in the Pacific Rural Press. I prefer to rely on the figures of the United States Government.

An analysis of the import and export data behind the chart shows that it included competitive and noncompetitive, dutiable and nondutiable, food and nonfood oil and fats all combined without any regard to logic. You might as well add all farm animals—horses, cattle, hogs, and sheep—to obtain a total, as to add the pounds of all vegetable and animal oils to secure an accurate picture. Here are included medical oils, such as cod-liver and castor oil, and industrial products such as wool grease. Such a picture is misleading; it does not even tell a half truth. The authors of such a conglomeration apparently do not realize that each animal and vegetable oil has its own individual properties. For example, rapeseed oil is used primarily as an engine lubricant, linseed oil as a basic dry oil for paints and varnishes; lard is a food product and will not answer the purpose of rapeseed oil or linseed oil. The chart showing the pillars placed all of these exports and imports of fats and oil in the same category, disregarding the fact that each has its distinctive qualities especially fitting it for special purposes and uses and that one type is not a substitute for another.

Let us look at this from another angle: Coconut oil, coming principally from the Philippine Islands free of duty, amounting to 314,802,000 pounds, is the largest single item on the list. It has not been the subject of any reciprocal trade agreement, and would still be free of duty if the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act were repealed. Its inclusion here is a barefaced attempt to deceive California producers. The imports of dutiable competitive oil become wholly insignificant when compared with the total importations or with the total exports of all oils and fats. In monetary value, not tonnage, the summary of the Department of Commerce shows that our exports are nearly as large as imports of all these many diversified commodities. The chart is not only illogical but thoroughly deceitful.

What logic is there in adding pounds of commodities which vary so much in value per unit, for instance, cod-liver oil and coconut oil, as do the many items included in this category? If we are to balance imports and exports of groups of commodities, as has been done in this article, what are we to set off against coffee, rubber, or tin? How are we to balance these?

CANNED FRUIT ALMOST ENTIRELY EXPORT INDUSTRY

Now let us consider the chart which dealt with canned fruit. It stated that there were exported 119,097 tons of canned fruit during 1934 and that there were imported 275,220 tons. Below the chart appeared the following legend:

Canned pineapple imported from our island possessions is greater than our total canned fruit exports.

This is an absolutely erroneous statement and can only be considered as having been made in good faith if the author of the article will admit that he does not know what the legal status of the Territory of Hawaii is. Included in his figures are 540,936,000 pounds—270,468 tons—of canned pineapple from that Territory valued at $34,156,000. That comprises almost all the imports in this pillar. But the Territory of Hawaii is no possession. It is an integral part of the United States, and under no circumstances may tariff duties be assessed against shipments from these islands. The question of reciprocal trade agreement or of any other tariff policy has nothing to do with the produce of Hawaii; and it would seem that this is just another attempt to deliberately deceive the farmers who read this article. Why does not the author of the article urge a tariff against Oregon apples or Iowa corn? The actual figures, again from the Department of Commerce, of imports and exports of canned fruits during the year 1934 are as follows:

Canned fruit

	Pounds	Value
IMPORTS
Pineapples (dutiable)	4,082,000	$195,000
Pineapples (free from Philippines)	4,197,000	272,000
	8,279,000	467,000
EXPORTS
Grapefruit	28,161,000	1,578,000
Loganberries	4,294,000	329,000
Other berries	525,000	59,000
Peaches	59,461,000	3,923,000
Pears	64,023,000	4,396,000
Pineapples	20,386,000	1,632,000
Fruits for salad	33,787,000	3,471,000
Apples and applesauce	10,677,000	437,000
Apricots	12,691,000	977,000
Cherries	1,413,000	183,000
Prunes	839,000	83,000
Other canned fruit	2,938,000	242,000
Total	239,195,000	17,310,000

When we have eliminated the wrongly included shipment of pineapples from Hawaii and those from the Philippines, which come in free of duty and cannot be affected by any reciprocal trade agreement, it will be seen the imports of canned fruits are reduced to the pitiful amount of 2,041 tons of a value of $195,000, as against exports of 119,597 tons with a value of $17,310,000. No more conclusive picture can be drawn than this to show the vast stake that the fruitgrowers of California have in the restoration of their foreign markets now proceeding in orderly fashion by means of these same reciprocal trade agreements. The citizens of the country are entitled to know just what the canners of California, both commercial and cooperative, think of the reciprocity program and how they feel toward those who are attempting to wreck it, and I therefore insert the following letter, which was sent to and received by every member of the California delegation in the House:

CANNERS LEAGUE OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, June 12, 1935.

The Honorable FRANK H. BUCK,
The House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BUCK: We are addressing you at this time in behalf of the administration's reciprocal trade agreement program. We understand that certain interests in California have been agitating strongly against this program. We feel that a better and sounder export market and an improved international trade in general will result if the present trade agreement program is carried out.

California is primarily an agricultural State. Fruits and vegetables are its principal products and are distributed in the markets of the world in fresh, dried, and canned form. The maintenance of the prosperity of our State and of its thousands of growers is dependent upon its continuing and increasing this wide distribution, which includes the export market.

The Canners League of California represents, through its membership, canners who pack approximately 80 percent of the fruits and vegetables canned in the State. In 1934 the total pack amounted to over 26,000,000 cases, valued at nearly $100,000,000. We are enclosing a list of our membership. (There are 42 members.)

You are familiar, of course, with the existing high tariffs and other trade barriers which have been put into effect by other countries and which have resulted in a very marked falling off of exports. This especially applies to canned goods. It is our feeling that the procedure of the Government in negotiating trade agreements is a practical way of procuring modifications to these high tariffs and trade barriers to the end that exchange of goods may take place to the ultimate benefit of the countries concerned. We believe California has everything to gain in supporting the present reciprocal trade agreement program, and therefore respectfully suggest your opposition to rescinding the Government's policy.

Very truly yours,

CANNERS LEAGUE OF CALIFORNIA,
W. S. EVERTS.

MORE TRICKERY IN FRESH-FRUIT FIGURES

In view of the deceit and trickery so far disclosed in these charts, it will not surprise my hearers to learn that the fourth chart, dealing with fresh fruit, is equally deceptive. According to it, in 1934 we exported 329,261 tons of fresh fruit and imported 1,201,981 tons. The actual figures, again from the Department of Commerce, on fresh fruits, which I have classified by major varieties and according to whether they were dutiable or not, are as follows:

[1] 1,247,653 tons. [2] 389,439 tons.

Because customs figures in the cases of grapes, bananas, and pineapples from countries other than the Philippines are not taken on a pound basis, the tonnage of these items, as listed above is estimated, but the estimates are based on trade averages and are as accurate as can be obtained. If they are in any error, they are in favor of increasing the tonnage of these imported commodities, and so present, according to the authors of the article referred to, a more unfavorable situation. A careful inspection of these figures will show that the bulk of these fresh fruit imports are noncompetitive. They show that 1,197,287 tons of the total of 1,247,653 tons imported are pineapples, bananas, and other minor fruits which come in free of duty, and always have. They have not been subjected to any reciprocal trade agreement. The duty on them being zero, cannot be lowered. Nor can they fairly be considered as capable of being supplanted by domestic products. Only those who consider that bananas compete with prunes would make any such combination as is made in this chart. It will hardly be possible to educate the consumer into a philosophy which may be translated as "when you want a banana, just reach for a prune."

The imports of competitive fruits, insignificant quantities of lemons, grapefruit, limes, and grapes, the latter of which come in for the most part at a season when our own grapes are off the market, do not compare with the exports of oranges or apples alone. The value of imported lemons in 1934 was $50,000, as compared with $897,000 of exports. The value of export pears from California alone exceeds all the competitive fresh imports. Of course, no one with reason would attempt to classify all fresh fruits as being competitive. Regardless, however, of that phase of the question, the most casual reading of the above table shows that in value our total exports exceeded all such imports, including bananas, by $4,688,000, and exceeded all dutiable imports of fresh fruit by $29,176,000. Thus another of these pillar charts is revealed as only a hollow sham.

The largest single organization marketing California fruit in the fresh state, a cooperative handling the fruit of thousands of growers, is the California Fruit Exchange. I insert at this point copy of a letter received from its standardization and advertising manager asking me to convey its endorsement of the administration's trade agreement program to the other members of the California delegation. I convey it not only to the California delegation but to all the Members of the House. The letter of the Dried Fruit Association referred to will be inserted later.

CALIFORNIA FRUIT EXCHANGE,
Sacramento, Calif., June 14, 1935.

Congressman FRANK H. BUCK,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRANK: This organization wants to completely endorse the position taken by the Dried Fruit Association of California in their letter to the California congressional delegation under date of June 7, relating to the administration's reciprocal trade agreement program.

It is our feeling that the opponents of this program are either not informed as to the facts of the matter or have adopted their position because of narrow political reasons.

I trust that you will convey, in such manner as you see fit, our endorsement to this program to the other members of your delegation.

Very cordially yours,

F. W. READ,
Manager, Standardization—Advertising.

WHAT ABOUT DRIED FRUITS?

The most curious fact about the article that we have been discussing is not in its falsity and attempts to deceive the farmers that have been revealed, but its total failure to say anything about dried fruits. Outside of apples and some prunes, these are nearly all produced in the State of California. Why should we not have statistics on them? It is as if we were discussing the consumption of cereals in the United States and decided to omit flour, or were considering the meat industry and omitted beef. The reason why dried fruits were omitted is obvious, or will be obvious when you listen to the figures that I cite. They do not present what the authors of the article thought it necessary to show—a so-called "unfavorable balance."

For the year 1934, according to the Department of Commerce, there were imports into and exports from the United States of dried fruits as follows:

Dried fruits

	Pounds	Value
IMPORTS
Dutiable:
Raisins	1,002,000	$96,000
Dates	48,835,000	1,795,000
Figs	6,014,000	390,000
Total	55,851,000	2,281,000

	Pounds	Value
EXPORTS
Raisins	92,248,000	$4,647,000
Apples	24,733,000	2,279,000
Apricots	19,030,000	2,722,000
Peaches	6,832,000	586,000
Prunes	171,251,000	9,809,000
For salad	10,806,000	787,000
Pears	6,468,000	494,000
Other dried fruit	6,424,000	366,000
Total	337,992,000	21,690,000

The total value of these imports was $2,281,000, and of exports $21,690,000, nearly 10 times as much. Certainly this reveals the fact that the dried-fruit industry of the United States has been built upon export markets, upon demands of foreign countries. Removal of excessive foreign duties and of restrictive quotas are vital to the maintenance and expansion of these foreign markets. There is no chasing of a lean penny here. The dried-fruit market absorbs about 2,000,000 tons of fresh fruit in a single year. It represents a fundamental balancing influence in our horticultural economies. With this outlet dammed up, the fresh fruit would either be thrown back into other channels of distribution and cause havoc there or it would have to be sacrificed and wasted, with consequent staggering losses to the entire fruit industry.

Let us take the case of raisins as an example. Canada for many years imported an average of 20,000 tons of California raisins. As a result of a preferential agreement with Australia, Canadian imports of our raisins have fallen to an average of only about 6,000 tons for the past 3 crop years. We are now paying a Canadian duty as great, and sometimes greater, than the value of the raisins themselves. A decade ago Canada normlly imported 90 percent of her raisins from California, as compared with only about 40 percent at the present time. In 1928 California exported more than 115,000 tons of raisins to various European countries. This tonnage had dropped in 1933 to 40,000 tons. It is true that world consumption had also dropped, and so this might not in itself be particularly disturbing; but let us see what happened to competing countries, such as Turkey and Persia. Turkey's exports rose from a little more than 20,000 tons in 1931 to 60,000 tons in 1933, while Persia in that year exported nearly 40,000 tons, as compared to 17,000 tons in 1931. In other words, California's loss represented gains by our foreign competitors. These gains were attributable to trading agreements entered into between foreign countries, quota restrictions and increased tariff duties; so that an industry in California already suffering economic illness was further injured by these deals between our logical customers in Europe and other raisin-producing countries, and California actually paid the bill.

The loss of any one market may not injure an industry seriously, but when this injury is repeated and duplicated in markets all over the world, the sum total of the loss which the fresh, canned, and dried-fruit industry has sustained by foreign trade regulations, quotas and tariff increases, becomes appalling and foreshadows total disaster to the industry unless these barriers can be broken down. The breaking down of such barriers for the benefit of agriculture is the aim and object of the administration's reciprocal-tariff program, and in every agreement entered into so far, agriculture has been the beneficiary.

Producers of dried fruit and packers, whether commercial or cooperative, are united in their approval of the efforts the administration is making to restore this foreign trade. As proof of the attitude of this part of the industry, I here insert a letter from Dwight K. Grady, vice president of the Dried Fruit Association of California:

DRIED FRUIT ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA,
San Francisco, June 7, 1935.

The Honorable FRANK H. BUCK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN BUCK: Because an organized campaign has been instituted by certain interests in California intended to destroy the administration's reciprocal trade-agreement program, we are taking the liberty of addressing this letter to you.

This asscciation has in its membership shippers of dried fruits handling more than 95 percent of the State's production. Amounting to more than 500,000 tons annually, this production of dried fruits is the equivalent of nearly 2,000,000 tons of fresh fruits, produced by approximately 125,000 grower families. Among the members of this association are the large cooperative marketing associations and all the commercial factors of any significance.

This association deplores the somewhat intemperate methods employed by opponents of our program to restore foreign trade and wishes briefly to set forth the philosophy we believe to be representative of the majority interests of our State. Our statements will be brief and conservative.

California's exports of her basic commodities, including many specialties, reached their highest peak during the period between 1922 and 1930. Without referring to the many economic factors involved, the volume of these exports grew because they met an increasingly important foreign consumer demand. In most of these countries there were no inequitable restrictions operating to prevent an increase in our volume of business consistent with the increasing demand. This business has, since 1930, suffered a tremendous shrinkage—to the point, in fact, where some European markets are practically closed to our products.

The Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act actually gives the present administration the opportunity to restore trade relationships to their status during the period of our greatest export business. Trade agreements already announced support the conclusion that in practice this restoration is being developed. Spokesmen for some of the smaller specialty industries in California that have enjoyed high protection in the past have a fear, to use their own language, that they will be "traded down the river."

If their efforts to defeat the reciprocal program meet with success, they will have caused the major interests in California agriculture and horticulture to suffer losses of State-wide significance without having proven their claims to the effect that they are in serious jeopardy. The specialty industries that are most active in contesting the reciprocal program themselves grew and prospered during the 8-year period to which we refer, and therefore would seem to have little justification for opposing a return to the conditions existing during that era. It is a fact that some of the industries which are opposing reciprocal agreements with certain countries are themselves asking for concessions in agreements with other countries. On the other hand, the dried-fruit industry—we believe the canning industry—and the majority in the fresh-fruit industry are favorable to and will gain substantially from the completion of the reciprocal program. This gain, of course, will redound to the benefit of other industries as well, not merely through an increase in the exports of their products but through the restoration of the purchasing power that has been destroyed by the State's loss of export business.

We are not exaggerating when we advise you that under our present production schedules, if the markets which we have lost wholly or in part were restored to us, we would have no need in the dried-fruit industry for A. A. A. marketing agreements now regulating the major production. The return to us of our export markets on a basis of equitable tariff treatment would remove the necessity for surplus control and make possible the disposal of our dried-fruit crops during the year of their production, something not now possible, even though we are controlled by A. A. A. marketing agreements.

Because this letter is assuming more length than we had wished, we shall close with the respectful suggestion that there is no tangible evidence to support the minority alarm over the possibility of injury from reciprocal negotiations, while on the other hand, California stands to gain as much, if not more, than any State in the Union from the successful completion of the administration's reciprocal trade agreement program.

Should you desire it, we shall be glad to develop economic data in support of these conclusions and forward it to you. In the meantime please permit us to remain,

Very faithfully,

DRIED FRUIT ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA,
DWIGHT K. GRADY, Vice President.

The total value of the imports and exports of all three branches of the fruit industry of the United States for 1934 is as follows:

Imports:
Fresh fruits	$27,041,000
Dried fruits	2,281,000
Canned fruits	467,000
	29,789,000
Exports:
Fresh fruits	$31,729,000
Dried fruits	21,690,000
Canned fruits	17,310,000
	70,729,000

Certainly a conclusive refutation of the argument advanced that the foreign markets are a will-o'-the-wisp.

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS MUST SUCCEED

Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise to any producer of fruits, such as I am, and it should therefore be no surprise to the membership of this House that those who are looking after the welfare of the great fruit industry of the United States, and particularly California, should be interested in the success of the administration's program. It should occasion no surprise that they promptly called the attention of their Representatives in Congress to this misleading propaganda and forwarded them the endorsements I have quoted of the reciprocal trade-agreement program.

In 1932 there were approximately 1,100,000 acres of fruit land in California. An average of 50 percent of the fruit produced thereon formerly went into foreign trade in one of the three forms that I have just referred to. The total value of foreign exports from California decreased between 1929 and 1932 by 60.8 percent. In the case of some agricultural products, such as barley, oranges, canned asparagus, and canned sardines, the decrease was even greater. I have not discussed today such items as barley and sardines, because I am merely desirous of bringing home the truth to those who might otherwise be deceived by the publication that I have been discussing; but fruit is not the only California product that has faced a decline in its exports and needs the benefit of these reciprocal trade agreements.

The success of these reciprocal trade agreements is vital to the restoration of all agriculture, not merely the branches that I have mentioned. Let me repeat what I said earlier in the session, that those who are putting out this apparently plausible but insidious and actually false propaganda trying to undermine the work that the administration is doing have not a single constructive thought in their minds, but are wreckers pure and simple. If, through their efforts, they deceive the farmers of the State of California, who have not the time or opportunity to go fully into the facts, the responsibility of ruining a well-thought-out program must be upon them. As far as I am concerned, as far as those who understand the problems and who know the needs of the grower and the producer are concerned, we are appreciative of the benefits that have already been received in the agreements so far negotiated, and know that, far from being sacrificed, agriculture has been and will continue to be their prime beneficiary.

THE "DEATH SENTENCE" IN THE SENATE PUBLIC-UTILITY BILL

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by the Honorable SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, a Member of Congress, and also a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Hon. SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, of Indiana, delivered over the radio on June 25, 1935:

My friends, I appreciate the kind invitation of the National Broadcasting Co. to speak briefly on this bill. By way of introduction let me say that I have never owned a dime's worth of utility securities, nor in over 20 years in the practice of law have I ever received a dime from the light, power, or gas industry. No one connected with them has ever contributed a penny to my campaigns and no one ever will. I do not own the utilities and they do not own me. I look at the question only from the viewpoint of the good of the Nation as a whole.

I do not defend any of the evil practices that have gone on in this industry. I condemn them in their entirety. No member of our committee has cross-examined more relentlessly than I into those evils. I have read radio speeches of the proponents of the bill. The indictment of wrongdoing which they drew is in my judgment substantially accurate.

But agreeing, as I do, to the indictment, I do not agree on the sentence of death. My reasons are real and substantial. I shall state them briefly and I hope clearly.

My first objection is that to punish the guilty we harm the innocent, and do so unnecessarily. Certainly the investors who have put the savings of thrift into this industry are not crooks and ought not to be punished for what the crooks have done. We ought not to burn the barn to kill the rats. Moreover few rats stay in burning barns. And because the holding company came into existence only because of what our lawmakers, State and Federal, have done, lawmakers today should be especially scrupulous not to harshly undo what they themselves have done. This is not a situation for which Government is in nowise responsible. Government not only permitted but actually encouraged the development of holding companies and on the faith of what their own Government encouraged, millions of innocent people have invested the savings of a lifetime. Granted, therefore, that the holding company, in many instances, has permitted great evils to be practiced, the situation thus created should nevertheless be simplified with the least possible damage to those whose only crime was confidence in the industry and faith in their own Government and its officials.

Who are these people? They are not the crooks. They are the men and women who have worked, sacrificed and saved. It is said that some 5,000,000 people are directly the owners of this industry. At 4 to a family that means that some 20,000,000 men, women, and children depend in part for their livelihood on the earnings of this industry. When we speak of the "public interest" we cannot disregard these millions of our fellow citizens.

But let us go further. There are 65,000,000 indirect owners of this industry. I refer to those who in one form or other have their lives insured to provide for their wives and boys and girls when they are gone. This bill involves the women and children of the Nation. An average of at least 150,000 people in every congressional district have a personal interest in this bill. Nine percent of their money, paid as premiums on their life-insurance policies, has gone into the securities of the utility industry.

It has been said that those who own the securities of operating companies only cannot be hurt by the death sentence. No one could believe that if he were to read the protest filed by the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, representing deposits of $10,000,000,000 owned by 14,000,000 individual depositors, averaging $700 each. These mutual-savings banks are not operated for profit. They do not own holding-company securities. They own operating-company securities only. And yet they point out, with mathematical precision, how the forced and drastic dissolution of holding companies would inevitably react upon operating companies and their securities. The Senate bill, therefore, puts in jeopardy the entire investment in the industry. I call your attention, further, that under the Senate bill every operating company in the Nation, 10 percent of whose stock is owned by another company in another State may be compulsorily reorganized or dissolved, at the whim and discretion of a Federal bureau. This fact has not received the attention it deserves. The sentence of death lies over the operating as well as the holding companies of the Nation.

In the atmosphere of uncertainty thus created how can this industry go forward? It is this aspect of the question that concerns me even more than the plight of the investors. Not knowing whether they will own the business 5 years from now, who can plan extensions and additions to existing properties? Who is going to employ men? Who is going to provide jobs? Facing possible liquidation, who is going to invest money in this industry?

It is for this reason that the death sentence will be so damaging to recovery. The industry, if it knew its future, could do more to reemploy idle men than almost any industry in the Nation. It is still in its infancy. This one industry can spend in the next few years as much or more than the gigantic $4,800,000,000 Federal public-works program and create no debt for future generations of taxpayers to pay. Why make it difficult or impossible for them to do so?

There are those, like Senator WHEELER, who advocate Government ownership. I respect their sincerity, although I would hate to turn this great industry over to politicians and patronage. But if that is the real program, why not say so openly? Then that question can be threshed out on its merits.

This industry should, of course, charge only what will earn a fair return on actual value—with the water squeezed out. Yet the cold fact is that the increase in the cost of food alone—not the cost, but the increase in the cost—in the past 2 years has been five times the total cost of light and power in the American home.

It seems to me, therefore, that we should apply to this question the wisdom and common sense of a great American whose leadership in difficult days gave luster to the party of which I am a humble member. I refer to Woodrow Wilson. In 1910 he spoke as follows:

"Corporations do not do wrong. Individuals do wrong. You cannot punish corporations. Fines fall upon the wrong persons; more heavily upon the innocent than upon the guilty * * * upon the stockholders and the customers rather than upon the men who direct the business. If you dissolve the offending corporations, you throw great undertakings out of gear. You merely drive what you are seeking to check into other forms * * * to the infinite loss of thousands of entirely innocent persons and to the great inconvenience of society as a whole. Law can never accomplish its objects in that way. It can never bring peace or command respect by such futilities."

We are dealing, my friends, with one of the Nation's greatest industries, capable of harm in the hands of greedy men, but capable also of infinite good, and industry in which over $12,000,000,000, the savings of thrift and sweat and toil, have been invested, directly or indirectly, by 65,000,000 Americans—an industry furnishing employment at far more than average wages to hundreds of thousands of men and women—an industry capable of transferring at least a million men, now idle, from relief rolls to pay rolls—an industry which under the drive and push of American initiative and invention has unleashed unlimited power for factories and railroads and turned the gloom of Lincoln's boyhood cabin into the artificial sunlight of great parks where baseball is played beneath the stars.

And yet by more than one speaker on the floor of the Senate this great industry was described as a rattlesnake. I do not believe in rattlesnake legislation. I do not think wise laws can be written in that spirit and temper any more than I believe a surgeon can do a good job removing a goitre from the neck of his patient if at the same time he is stamping to death a rattlesnake at his feet.

It is for us to act as the surgeon works, using infinite care to cut away the tissues of death, but with equal care leaving untouched and unharmed the tissues of life and growth. That is the kind of bill I would like to see become law, and that substantially is the kind our committee has reported to the House. When the operation is over I want the patient to get well. I want the Nation to get well.

The frightful frauds which occurred in this industry all took place before the Securities Act and the Stock Exchange Act were passed. None, to my knowledge, have occurred since. I believe with wise and courageous administration of those laws and of the laws of the different States that few, if any, of these abuses will occur again. And if those laws need further strengthening I will go as far as the farthest to strengthen them. Pitiless publicity of the financial and corporate structures in the industry will do more than anything else to make new Insulls impossible. Why not give laws already passed a chance to prove their worth? Why keep the patient under ether for the next 5 years? I would like to get him out of the hospital and back to work.

In 1933 reform of an unsound situation in finance and banking was necessary in order to make recovery possible. But today more recovery is more necessary than more reform. I would rather now put a million idle men back to work than vent my wrath at the crooks in the utility game for crimes already committed. And let me say that I hope and believe that a new social conscience is at work which will frown upon the return of the crooks to the councils of American enterprise. I believe the average business man, who is certainly as honest as the average politician, realizes that the crooks and the exploiters are his enemies as well as the enemies of those with whom he deals. The head of a great industry, a great bank, a great labor or farm organization, occupies a position of trust and should deserve that trust as fully as if he were on the bench of the Supreme Court of the Nation. We need industrial statesmen today as much as we need statesmen in politics, and we need them bitterly. Unless they come, little we do here in Washington can save us from another terrible crash.

We depend too much on legislation written on Capitol Hill and not enough on the sermon that was preached on the Mount of Galilee.

I do not think even the death sentence in the Senate bill will wholly prevent recovery. Recovery is already under way, due, in part, to legislation already passed and due also to the gathering up, after a bad fall, of the matchless energies of this great people. But I do believe the death sentence will retard and delay that recovery. Why hinder it for a single unnecessary moment while the public debt, for want of recovery, is running up by the billions?

I close with another quotation from President Wilson. In 1914 in a message to Congress he wrote:

"Nothing hampers business like uncertainty. Nothing daunts or discourages it like the necessity to take chances, to run the risk of falling under the condemnation of the law before it can make sure just what the law is."

If Wilson was right, then I am not far wrong now. If the Senate bill is passed, for 5 long years this industry cannot "make sure just what the law is." Business cannot go forward—men cannot go back to work—with a death sentence hanging over their heads.

THE MERCHANT-MARINE BILL, 1935

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8555) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MAY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, to what point has the bill been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read section 534.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, yesterday's debate and consideration of the measure establishing a subsidized merchant marine brought forth interesting statements, not only on the floor but from the country at large, that I desire to call attention to.

In this morning's Post I find an article with this heading, "Amendments Put off Vote on Ship Subsidy."

In the Washington Times I find another article with reference to the same legislation, from which I will read a sentence.

The statement in this morning's edition of the Washington Post says:

A steady stream of time-eating amendments forced the House into adjournment early last night without a vote on the administration bill to subsidize construction and operation of the American marine.

The article in the Washington Times reads as follows, and I quote one sentence:

The measure has been classed as one of President Roosevelt's "must" bills, but Speaker BYRNS now classifies it as a measure which ought to be passed.

I challenge the statement of any publication or news agency that this specific bill is an administration measure. The distinguished chairman of our committee, whom I respect and admire, made a statement in the Committee on Merchant Marine to the effect that this is not considered an administration or, I believe the exact words were, a Government bill. Similar statements have been made on the floor of this House in answer to similar questions, and there seems to be no contention on the part of the proponents of this specific measure that it is an administration bill. I think this House should keep that fact in mind during the remainder of the debate on this measure; and when it comes to a vote on the question, especially in view of the fact that the President considers the matter of merchant marine of sufficient importance to send a special message to Congress in which he recommended certain specific changes that have not, by the admission of the chairman and ranking minority member on the Committee on Merchant Marine, been incorporated in the pending bill. In the light of those facts it would be presumptuous indeed for anyone to claim we are debating an administration measure. I desire to say no more at this particular period of the argument than to give exactly the sentences from the President's message which are as follows.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman at some point in this debate show to this committee or to the House wherein this bill jibes with the Democratic platform of 1932?

Mr. WEARIN. I am sorry to say to the gentleman that unfortunately I do not think that is possible. It just simply does not jibe.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Would the gentleman explain how any of the legislation being proposed here jibes with the Democratic platform of 1932?

Mr. WEARIN. I think that could be done very properly, in innumerable instances, and I should be glad to cooperate with the leadership of this House in doing so at some future date when we are not considering a subsidy bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. If this bill does not benefit the Government, if it does not benefit the taxpayers, nor the shipowners in a fair and just way, and if the President does not want this bill, why should we pass it?

Mr. WEARIN. I have consistently stated to the House that in its present form I am unalterably opposed to the passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am surprised that the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] should even mention any of the many erroneous statements that appear daily in the Washington Post and in the Washington Herald. So many of us who watch daily these statements have learned to pay no attention at all to any of the statements in Eugene Meyer's publication. Yesterday Eugene Meyer's Post told quite a lie about me, which appeared in his paper.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Texas is not speaking to the amendment. He is merely continuing a personal quarrel that he has with the newspapers.

Mr. BLANTON. I am keeping within the rule, and I am in order. I know the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the subject of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. It was said by these newspapers that this is an administration measure and that amendments have been placed on the bill by Democrats to thwart the administration. The gentleman from Iowa correctly stated that even our good friend from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], who is in charge of the bill, and in whom we all have confidence, has made no such statement, and has not contended that the bill must be passed just as it is written, word for word. I have a right to call attention to these and similar press misstatements, especially when I am rising in opposition to my friend's amendment.

You cannot believe anything in the Washington Post. This same man, Eugene Meyer, is the man who has peculated on the Government for 20 years and gotten rich off it. He has chiseled the Government and robbed the Government and defrauded the Government and made millions out of it, and then he talks about leading Congressmen on matters of legislation! There is not a Congressman here well acquainted with his record who has any confidence in him, or who would believe him on oath. Why, when he got hold of the Post he robbed the McLean heirs out of their family heritage.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman is out of order, and he cannot bind me, and I do not think he can bind any other Members of the House to any such statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I will let the gentleman defend Eugene Meyer if he wants to. All of us know that he robbed the McLean heirs out of $2,000,000 when he robbed them out of the Washington Post.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that the American people would be better off if we paid no attention to anyone who was affiliated with the Federal Reserve Board, which should be abolished.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I would not say that, because there are some splendid officials on and connected with the Federal Reserve Board.

In connection with its misrepresentations this morning about this bill, I want to show you just how far Eugene Meyer's Post went yesterday in an attempt to injure me, in relating proceedings on the bill to relieve the District Commissioners and 30 other officials from hereafter giving bonds for faithful performance, which the law has required them to do since 1878 in Washington.

This Post, on page 15, yesterday asserted that I was "defeated in half a dozen ballots", that I "resorted to parliamentary tricks", that I "resorted to a filibuster", and that I asked the committee chairman "to cut that out of her remarks", and that I was given "one of the worst legislative lickings had in years", that I offered "an unsuccessful motion to strike out all after the enacting clause", and that the trouble "flared up when the Texan objected to the consideration of the bill under unanimous consent", when each and all of said assertions made by the Post were incorrect.

Page 9994 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Monday, June 24, 1935, shows that my amendment was adopted on the airport bill, which relieved the United States Government from contributing or advancing any part of the $2,500,000 carried in said bill for a District airport. Page 9998 shows that by a vote of 58 ayes to 37 noes another amendment of mine was adopted, which relieved the United States Government from paying any part of the annual maintenance expenses of said Washington airport. Page 9998 shows that the bill carrying my two amendments was passed by the House, with a record vote, yeas 316 and nays 20, which shows anything but a "legislative licking."

UNANIMOUS CONSENT NOT REQUESTED

The other bill, to relieve officials of giving bonds, specially mentioned by the Post, was called up by the committee chairman, who did not have to have unanimous consent, but called it up as a matter of right, and requested unanimous consent to consider it in the House, which would have granted but 5 minutes to Members not on the committee opposing it, instead of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as the rules of the House required, under which there would have been ample time for debate, and page 10006 of the RECORD shows that I objected to thus considering it without ample debate, because it was a bill repealing the law requiring officials to give bonds, which law has been in force since 1878.

15 MINUTES TO THE SIDE THEN PROPOSED

The committee chairman then moved to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as the rules required, to debate the bill, but pending such motion asked unanimous consent that debate be limited to 15 minutes to the chairman, and 15 minutes to the ranking Republican. I then requested 30 minutes with the privilege of yielding part of same to other Members opposing the bill, which was objected to by a Member, and then I objected to limiting the debate to only 30 minutes without any of same being controlled by Members opposing the bill, and thus forced the bill to be taken up for debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under which I obtained an hour, and had the right to yield any part of it to others.

MEMBERS HEARING DEBATE VOTED AGAINST BILL

The bill was debated at length. I showed that for the fiscal year begining July 1, 1935, the Commissioners would have control of the spending of more than $41,000,000 in cash, appropriated by Congress for the District, and that if the bill were passed, they and 30 other officials of the District would no longer have to give bond for their faithful performance of duties. I showed that in all States, high officials were required to give bond for faithful performance. I showed that in every one of the 48 States, all notaries public, who handle no public funds at all, are required to give bond for faithful performance, and that they can be sued for damages for any malfeasance of office, by any person suffering damages because of their fraud or dishonesty. Less than a hundred Members were on the floor listening to the debate. After full debate, pro and con, I sought to strike out the enacting clause. I did not move to "strike out all after the enacting clause" as the Post erroneously asserted. You will find my motion on page 10011. I moved "that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out", and after debate, the Members voted on it, and my motion carried by a voice vote, which forced the chairman to ask for a division, requiring the voters on each side to stand up and be counted by the Chair, and if you will look on page 10012 of the RECORD you will see that my motion to strike out the enacting clause carried by the standing vote of ayes 48 to noes 26, and it was the chairman who objected to the vote because there was no quorum present.

NO QUORUM FORCED COMMITTEE TO RISE

After going into the House, I could have made there a point of no quorum, and forced a call of the House, but I did not do so. I did not filibuster, as the Post erroneously stated. I was doing all I could to protect the rights of the people. Then the committee chairman moved to go back into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the bill, and page 10012 shows that as soon as such action was taken, I called attention to the fact that my motion had carried that recommendation be made to the House that the enacting clause be stricken out, and I promptly made the preferential motion that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union do rise, and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out, and upon a voice vote the Chair announced that my motion had carried, and then a division was called for by the committee chairman, and upon a standing vote, counted by the Chair, there were 48 ayes and 49 noes, and, naturally, I called for tellers, and upon the Members all passing through tellers and counted there were 45 ayes and 56 noes, showing that some members responding to the bell for tellers had come in who had not heard the debate.

FIRST HOUSE VOTE 52 TO 48 FOR PASSAGE

Page 10014 shows that on the passage of the bill in the House the vote was ayes 52, noes 48, on a division called for by the committee chairman, which was not a quorum of the House, as a House quorum is a majority of the 435 Members, so I made a point of no quorum. The bells were rung, and the Members came scurrying over from their offices. They had not heard the debate. They knew nothing of the merits or demerits of the bill. The committee chairman stood near the lobby door and as Members came in, appealed to them to vote for the bill. I felt that I had done my duty by opposing the bill, and I made no appeals to Members. The roll-call vote on page 10014 of the RECORD shows that the vote for the bill was yeas 171 and nays 115.

ASKED JUST THE OPPOSITE OF WHAT THE POST ASSERTED

If you will look on page 10352 of the RECORD you will see that the Post misquoted me and erroneously asserted that I said just the opposite of what I did say. When the committee chairman mentioned my standing and activity on the Committee on Appropriations, the following colloquy occurred:

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the distinguished lady will not cut that out of her remarks, because I deem it a great compliment.

Mrs. NORTON. I am not in the habit of taking my remarks out of the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the best campaign speech that ever was made for me.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman is welcome to it.

Mr. BLANTON. Coming from such a distinguished Democrat as the leader of the Democracy of New Jersey, I would not take the world for what my friend has said about my standing on that committee.

I did not ask that something "be cut out", as the Post asserted; but I asked that it "not" be cut out, which is clearly shown, and there was no excuse whatever for the Post to assert as it did that I asked that something "be cut out." I distinctly asked that it "not be cut out."

NONE OF POST'S SAID ASSERTIONS ARE CORRECT

I ask every reader of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to carefully examine the pages I have referred to in the RECORD for last Monday, June 24, 1935, and they will see that the Washington Post has done me a grave injustice.

I was not "defeated in a half dozen ballots", as asserted by the Post.

I did not "resort to parliamentary tricks", as asserted by the Post, but merely resorted to the Rules of the House of Representatives, in doing my duty under my oath.

I did not "resort to a filibuster", as asserted by the Post.

There was no bad "legislative licking", as erroneously asserted by the Post.

I did not make any motion to strike out "all after" the enacting clause, as erroneously asserted by the Post. I tried to strike out the enacting clause itself, and a majority of the Members who heard all of the debate voted for my motion.

Mr. Eugene Meyer and his Washington Post must treat me fairly and justly. I am going to hold him responsible for what his paper says about me, whenever it is unjust. He cannot get away with it. So he might just as well understand it now as later.

NO MALICE AGAINST MEYER

I have no personal feeling whatever against Eugene Meyer. If his Post will treat me justly, I will never mention him in any speech. But every time his Post treats me unjustly, I am going to correct all erroneous statements in this RECORD, and produce the proof of incorrect statements, just as I have done in these remarks.

NO MALICE AGAINST HEARST

I have no personal feeling whatever against William Randolph Hearst. If he will treat me justly, I will never refer to him in any unkind way. Hearst and his papers are doing an invaluable service now for the United States Government in the splendid fight he is making against communism, and I take my hat off to him for it. I am grateful to his newspapers for showing me more consideration lately than they formerly did, and I deeply appreciate it.

RECORD HERE AN OPEN BOOK

My record here in this Congress for nearly 20 years is an open book. I have worked day and night to render service of some value to the American people. I have not had a single selfish purpose. I have accumulated no wealth. I have devoted my time to my duties. My record is before the people. I have a standing that neither Eugene Meyer, nor William Randolph Hearst, nor their influential newspapers can destroy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it certainly is not my function in this House, and I do not attempt to interpret the views and policies of the administration, nor to describe its wishes with respect to any particular measure, but we might as well, in view of the inquiries that were made, consider a few undisputed facts with reference to this bill.

The President in his message to Congress endorsed the principle of Government aid to the merchant marine. That is undisputed. The President further indicated the kind of aid which he thought should be extended. He expressed his disapproval of such aid in the form of mail contracts, describing them as a subterfuge. The President said that in the extension of this Government aid to the merchant marine which he approves, three prime factors should be taken into consideration. First, the difference in cost of construction of ships abroad and in America, the difference being the higher cost of labor and the higher cost of material, the higher cost of material being due to the labor that goes into that material.

Second, the higher cost of operating our ships on the seas, due to better living conditions on those ships, higher wages for the crews, and better circumstances in conformity with our standards of living as compared with foreign standards of living.

Third, to meet the aid which foreign governments extend to their merchant marine. He recommended that legislation to that effect be passed. He did not send down a ready-made bill for that purpose. If for that reason this bill, which embodies the recommendations of the President, might not be called an administration measure——

Mr. WEARIN. Does it embody all of them?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; but the fundamental and basic recommendations of the President are written word for word in this bill.

Mr. MORAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. MORAN. What has the gentleman to say about construction loans? Did he approve them?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; he did not, but they are not Government aids in the sense of subsidies. They are not Government aids in the sense of subsidies any more than loans from any other Government agencies are subsidies to those who are the recipients of those loans, and they are loans for which ample security is offered and which must be in every event repaid.

Mr. WEARIN. Have they been repaid in the past?

Mr. LEHLBACH. There is not a loan that the Government has lost money on which has been made since the beginning of the construction-loan fund in 1920 to the present date. The gentleman cannot point to a dollar that has been lost from that fund.

Mr. WEARIN. Their payments are overdue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Now, as I said, this bill embodies the basic, fundamental recommendations of the President with respect to this subject. The bill was not drawn ready made and presented to us for our approval in committee and for passage in this House. The bill is the work of the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Virginia, Judge BLAND, and it is an honor and a credit to him, and I trust it will be a part of the permanent legislation of this Government and will be known as the "Bland bill" for decades to come. [Applause.]

In the drafting of this bill the chairman of our committee had the cooperation of the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, Dr. COPELAND, and he was in constant consultation with those officials of the administration who are peculiarly charged with shipping matters, the Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce, who may be assumed not to thwart the administration, but to present its views in consultation and advice with respect to this bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And they constitute a part of the executive branch.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The basis of this bill is the President's message. The details of the bill are the principles laid down by the Interdepartmental Committee, whom he appointed. The work on this bill, the mechanics and the specific details, are the work of the Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, aided and assisted by those officials of the present administration appointed by the President and functioning with respect to shipping matters, the shipping authorities of the Department of Commerce. That is this bill.

If that is not an administration bill, then you want a bill where it is impossible to cross a "t" or dot an "i." That is not what I call an administration bill. A bill that carries out the administration's policy, written by a Democratic supporter of that administration, is, in my judgment, an administration bill. I am not supporting it because it is an administration bill, but as a member of the minority I am supporting it, notwithstanding the fact that it is an administration bill. It is a bill replete with material benefits to the people of our country.

Mr. MORAN. Is it not true that in the letter of the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Roper, this statement was made?

This print differs in at least two important respects from the recommendation made by the President of the United States in his message of March 4, 1935.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; but that does not condemn the departures from the recommendations of the President. The gentleman shut his ears to the truth when the gentleman from Virginia told him that it was impossible to work out the scheme without the continuation of the loans to be repaid unless a monopoly in shipping was desired. As to the recommendation to transfer the regulatory powers over commerce on the high seas to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the recommendation came originally from Mr. Eastman; and when he appeared before the committee he said he did not want that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as long as I have been drawn into this discussion and the letter of the Secretary has been referred to, I want to complete the letter of the Secretary in that particular. The Secretary did point out that those two features were not in the bill, but he added further:

I understand, however, that the provisions which you now propose to report out on the points involving these differences are the result of thorough consideration by your committee. Under these circumstances, and especially as the bill in its present form seems well designed to accomplish the President's chief objective, viz, the replacement of the present system of indirect mail subsidies, which has been demonstrated as so unsound by a system of direct subsidies along the lines recommended by both the President and by the Interdepartmental Committee on Shipping Policy, I am glad to advise you that it has the approval of this Department.

Further than that, I do not know what an administration bill is or is not. We produced this bill as carrying out the purpose desired.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Reference has been made to the American merchant marine. Does the gentleman consider a fleet owned by the big industrial organizations which transport their own products as part of the merchant marine?

Mr. BLAND. Those ships are part of the American merchant marine and can be taken over for war purposes and are in many respects engaged in the carrying of general commerce as well as their own products.

Mr. WHITE. Is there anything in this bill to prevent those big industrial organizations such as the Standard Oil Co., the United Fruit Co., and Henry Ford from securing under the provisions of the bill taxpayers' money with which to build their ships?

Mr. BLAND. Not at all; because we need ships of that character to build up the merchant marine and to have as auxiliary cruisers in time of war.

Mr. WHITE. Then the gentleman is in favor of giving a subsidy for the building of ships to Henry Ford, the Standard Oil Co., and the United Fruit Co. to haul their own products?

Mr. BLAND. We need that type of ship under the American flag for use in time of war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Page 38, line 3, strike out "unless permission is first obtained from the Authority in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Authority."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, let me point out first that under the discussion just now as to the President's attitude toward the bill or the administration's attitude the attitude of the Secretary of Commerce is most interesting in this respect. When the Secretary pointed out that this bill violates two specific recommendations of the President, then it is clear that the bill does not meet the President's recommendations, even though the Secretary of Commerce may say that he is not opposed to the bill. I may as well say frankly that in my opinion I think a member of the President's Cabinet ought to stand behind the representations and the position of the President of the United States.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is it the gentleman's idea that a Member of Congress is bound to take orders from the administration and not exercise any judgment or discretion about these matters?

Mr. MORAN. No; not at all; I do not take that position; but when we have the information set out by the report of the Post Office Committee, when we have the information that is set out in the Black committee report, and all the information our committee developed itself, I think we have ample information upon which to base our own judgment in that particular respect. Most emphatically, however, I state to the gentleman that my position is not as he stated.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is the gentleman in favor of transferring the regulation of ocean shipping to the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. MORAN. I would be in favor of that.

Mr. Chairman, in regard to this particular amendment it will be noted that this paragraph provides aid, but still allows, by discretionary power, the ownership, the chartering, and the operation of foreign vessels. How can we build an American merchant marine if we permit operators to charter and operate foreign ships?

What is the reason for this discretionary power? Why should they want to charter foreign ships? Because of lower building costs, lower wages. That is the only reason they want such legislation. It will only result in lower wages on our own ships. Certainly the chartering of foreign ships is not conducive to giving employment in American shipyards.

Surely no other argument can be made with respect to the discretionary power contained in the bill.

Unless permission is first obtained from the authority in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the authority.

Why leave it discretionary? If it is so bad that they put it in the bill with these so-called "safeguards" around it, why leave the discretionary power in the bill at all? If it is such a difficult question that Congress in its wisdom cannot determine it, how is it to be expected that an authority sitting down here can determine it?

It is my opinion that the bill will be tremendously improved by the elimination of this discretionary power.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the authority, as I stated yesterday, will be composed of men of the highest type, men who are able to understand and know these problems. We are not in favor of the use of foreign ships, but there are conditions that arise sometimes in connection with the operation of certain lines where there are not sufficient vessels at this time of the proper draft to serve the purpose and until the purpose can be accomplished to have those ships, permission is given to the maritime authority to grant permission under these very limited circumstances. That is all there is to the section.

So far as building in foreign yards and using foreign ships are concerned, I have no hesitancy in saying that I am opposed to it, but there are conditions that we cannot meet in legislation and that we cannot meet by law. They have to be left to the maritime authority, and this vests them with discretionary authority.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

IS MORGENTHAU INTERESTED IN THE AMERICAN PEOPLE OR THE INTERNATIONAL GOLD BANKER?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I must disagree with the chairman of the committee in reference to the amendment just offered to prevent bureau chiefs from acting arbitrarily. In opposing the amendment, he indicates that we should have the utmost confidence in the individuals who may be appointed to administer this act. When we enacted the Gold Devaluation Act, we delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury certain powers in the stabilization of the American dollar. What did our Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, do recently? He used American gold to stabilize the French franc, notwithstanding the French Government is a defaulting nation. The French Government branded itself as a "chiseling" nation when it refused to pay us a just post-war debt.

If we are to have stabilization in currency, it should be a stabilization of the American dollar based upon a commodity index. Our Secretary of the Treasury and the administration are to be condemned for using American gold to stabilize the French franc. The international bankers in Paris and London appear to work in concert with our international bankers here in New York, who, doubtless seeking to protect their interests in Paris, exerted their influence upon the Secretary of the Treasury to use American Treasury credits to save the cursed gold standard, which has brought more misery and suffering to the people of the world than any other device invented by Satan! If these same conditions of what I consider to be malfeasance in office are to prevail in reference to this board, perhaps all the ships may be built abroad. I propose to support the amendment as a protection against such a contingency.

Mr. Chairman, we are giving too much authority to these bureaucrats here in Washington. I hope to obtain the floor today or tomorrow to speak in reference to the racketeers in the city of Washington, who are more of a menace to good government than were the racketeers and gangsters in the city of Chicago.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does the gentleman include Mr. Eugene Meyer in that list?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I referred to Mr. Eugene Meyer a moment ago when I asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] a question. Of course, Mr. Meyer is out of the international banking game now, ostensibly at least, but I would eliminate everyone in charge of any facility whatever in the Federal Reserve. If we sincerely wished to do the right thing for the American people, we would take from the private bankers the power of issuing currency and exercise this right ourselves in the interest of the people.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman referred to the French as chiselers. Does he consider Lafayette a chiseler? Does he consider the French Army that served at Yorktown and received the sword of Cornwallis as chiselers? Does he consider the nation that sold Louisiana to America as chiselers? Does he consider the country that presented the Statue of Liberty to America as chiselers?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman is referring to the "horse and buggy days" when the French Nation was ruled by tyrants who brought upon themselves the French Revolution in which the oppressed people of France justly wrested a measure of liberty from those who ruled by "divine right."

I am not criticizing the French individually. During my 28 months of service overseas I found them to be no different from other individuals. The French citizen has the same difficulty as does the American citizen in regard to the bankers. Through the worship of gold and the manipulation of credit, the French standard of living is much lower than ours. The individual French are the victims of the same conditions which exist in our own country today.

Referring to more recent history, however, I may call the gentleman's attention to the fact that during the Civil War the French Government, under the incompetent, anti-American, Napoleon the Third, did everything possible against the Government of the Union. We may recall the violation of the Monroe Doctrine by France in its abortive attempt to seize Mexico and set up a monarchy on our borders.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made an attack against Russia on the floor of this House recently, but we should not forget that Russia was the only nation which tried to protect and guarantee our liberty and the maintenance of our Union during the period of the Civil War. It is reported that our purchase of Alaska was motivated by the friendship which we felt for Russia because of her helpfulness to us in our struggle to maintain the Union. If the historical truth could be accurately known, it is very probable that we would find that we owe our greatness as a united nation today in large part to the moral and other support accorded the Union by the Russian Government and the Russian Admiralty during the Civil War.

Oliver Wendell Holmes recognized the friendliness of the Russian Nation and the anti-American attitude of the French Nation during this same period when he wrote his stirring poem—Who Was Our Friend When the World Was Our Foe?

In common justice we cannot forget the debts of gratitude which we owe from the past, and it should be our earnest aim to live amicably with all nations of the world. At the same time, in justice to our own, we cannot overlook the fact that our first duty is to protect and advance the interest of the American people, and that insofar as we sacrifice this interest to the advantage of foreign nations or special-privileged groups we are false to the trust which the people of the United States repose in us. With this thought in mind, I am unalterably opposed to the meddling tactics of governmental bureaucrats in the affairs of Europe, especially when the problems of our own suffering people absolutely demand the devotion of our every thought and our every energy to their solution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

TAXATION

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] who yesterday deplored the attitude of the administration in endeavoring to ram down our throats a very important tax program at the very end of the session, and to do it within a period of 5 days. I deeply resent such action, and I want to say that as a member of the majority side I am inclined to vote against that entire tax program if such method is to be adopted. I think it is a matter that is most reprehensible, and certainly those in authority should reconsider their action.

In the first place, a subterfuge was used in the way of putting on as a rider to the nuisance tax this particular tax program. It is constitutionally required that that type of bill originate in the House, and we must deeply resent and deplore subterfuges of that sort. [Applause.] Secondly, it is an absolute rebuff to the important political committee of this House, the Ways and Means Committee, to take this matter out of their hands and place it in the hands of the Senate Finance Committee. That is lamentable. [Applause.] I believe that if we Members of the House accept that kind of procedure we would be a bunch of spineless jellyfish. It is time to call a halt. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We accepted that sort of procedure in connection with the economy bill and 90 percent of the other bills passed by this House. Why does the gentleman take exception to that sort of procedure in connection with a bill which will tax the rich?

Mr. CELLER. We should not make that mistake twice, thrice, or four times. It is not a matter of taxing the rich. I favor increasing inheritance and gift taxes. I am in favor of a bill of that sort, provided you tack on the tax-exempt-securities ban and amend the Constitution in this regard. We should reason this thing out. For 20 years the history of tax legislation has taught us that it takes 4 months to work out a well-reasoned plan of taxation. Now, we are to get this and accept it, I repeat, as spineless jellyfish, within a period of 5 days.

Why the hysterical haste? Why rush pell-mell? I am not opposed to increased inheritance taxes. Our taxes in that regard are far lower than England's. But why raise taxes if the taxpayer can take refuge in tax-exempt securities? He thus thumbs his nose at us. I shall insist upon early action upon my tax-exempt-security amendment before our Judiciary Committee if the administration demands immediate action upon its tax program.

In connection with the so-called "haste", I quote from an able editorial that appeared in the New York World-Telegram last night:

SHOOTING FROM THE HIP

Except for political expediency, there is no reason whatever for the administration squeeze play on the tax bill.

A preponderance of the people, we believe, are strong for the President's general tax objectives—so far as they understand those objectives. A majority of the Members of Congress have long wanted to enact a tax measure of the type outlined in the President's message—and have waited only for Presidential bidding.

There is no need to short-circuit hearings before the House Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committees, no need to shut off opportunity for study and debate in the committees and on the floors of Congress.

Intelligent consideration of this bill—probably the most vital tax measure in the Nation's history—is impossible under the administration's marching orders to have done with it in 6 days. That is where the squeeze play comes in. The bill is being attached to another measure extending the nuisance taxes, which expire July 1.

Congress, which has not yet seen the bill it is expected to pass in less than a week, should demand time to study and legislate in orderly fashion. It should refuse to treat important tax reforms as a casual amendment to another measure on the Senate rush calendar. If handled by this hurry-up administration plan, these complex and far-reaching tax provisions will not even be considered by the House Ways and Means Committee, where all tax legislation should originate, nor considered except as a lump proposal by the House itself.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee if he is going to try to finish this bill today?

Mr. BLAND. I am going to try to finish it today, and I announce at this time that while I am not going to object to the gentleman from Ohio speaking out of order for the next 2 minutes, in order that there may be no discrimination against any Member of the House I shall object to anyone else speaking out of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman going to object to the gentleman from Ohio speaking out of order?

Mr. BLAND. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. RICH. Let the gentleman from Ohio speak.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Virginia is going to object to anyone else speaking out of order following the gentleman from Ohio, I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the right to object, and I object.

Mr. YOUNG demanded the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection of the gentleman from Oregon comes too late. The Chair asked if there was objection and stated there was no objection. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. TRUAX. No.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to comment on the little speech that was made yesterday by our good friend and distinguished fellow Member, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. I am sorry to say that I disagree with him and I disagree with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], who just addressed you.

I am one in this House who is ready to vote right now, with subterfuge and all, for any tax program that will not only soak the rich but make the rich carry its just share of the taxation burden of the United States. [Applause.] Oh, it was perfectly all right when you came in here in March of 1933 and, after 2 hours of debate, soaked the soldiers of this country; that was all right; that did not require due consideration because that affected some of the poor people of this country; but now, when the President of the United States writes a new declaration of independence and wants to tax the millionaires and the billionaires of this country, there are too many Members of this body, I am sorry to state, who want "due time" and "due consideration" and "due deliberation." I am for the program now. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

MERCHANT MARINE

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 33, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 535. (a) No contract shall be made under this title with respect to a vessel to be operated on a service, route, or line served by citizens of the United States, unless the authority shall determine after proper hearing of all parties that the service already provided by vessels of United States registry in such service, route, or line is inadequate, and that in the accomplishment of the purposes and policy of this act additional vessels should be operated thereon; and no contract shall be made with respect to a vessel operated or to be operated in a service, route, or line served by two or more citizens of the United States with vessels of United States registry, if, in the judgment of the authority, the effect of such a contract would be to give undue advantage or be unduly prejudicial, as between citizens of the United States, in the operation of vessels in competitive services, routes, or lines. The authority in determining for the purposes of this section whether services are competitive shall take into consideration the type, size, and speed of the vessels employed, whether passenger, or cargo, or combination passenger and cargo vessels, the ports or ranges between which they run, the character of cargo carried, and such other facts as it may deem proper.

(b) Contracts under this title shall be entered into so as to equitably serve, insofar as possible, the foreign trade requirements of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports of the United States. In awarding contracts under this title preference shall be given to persons who are citizens of the United States, who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: On page 38, line 9, strike out the word "proper" and insert in lieu thereof the word "public."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, in this instance we are talking about the negotiations that are to be held whereby this Authority is to determine various matters with regard to services, whether the lines are adequate or inadequate, and so forth. You notice the word used is "proper." I submit the word to use is "public", and here is the reason: These mail contracts, 42 out of 43 of them, were produced without competitive bids; and any person who reads the hearings before the Post Office Department and sees how those things were put through, when we see how we have had actually working together officials and applicants, privately, with star-chamber proceedings, it seems to me obvious that private negotiations are bound to open the door to fraud. Why is it that such a hearing should not be public? Why is it that interested persons involved in such instances cannot have an opportunity to be present and submit their views?

We have had actual cases under these mail contracts where it has been determined to do this or that in regard to a route and the notice was sent to only one person without any competition whatever. Was there any public hearing? Was there any consideration of anyone else? No. Why, even the specifications were drawn up so that they fitted only one person. They even labeled the kind of boats required, the number required, the speed required, and after you got through reading the specifications there was only one company in the United States that could bid under those special conditions.

Do we want this type of thing to continue? Proper hearing! If it means public hearing, let us say public hearing. If "proper" means a continuation of the past procedure, then I submit this Congress will want to change the word "proper" to "public."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Ostensibly, the amendment would seem to be fair, but upon consideration—and this was given consideration by the committee—it was determined that here you are investigating and examining into the particular affairs of an individual line, and to make these applications and these investigations public would disclose matters of a confidential nature which would involve giving out to their competitors information that should be in the hands of the authority, and information that could be called for by Congress when deemed necessary.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. One of the features of such an examination would be the financial strength and resources and obligations of the company concerned, and such information, manifestly, should not be given to competitors.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is correct. The financial resources and all similar questions would be open to all competitors and could be used to the detriment of the company giving such information.

Mr. KELLER. Why should not the information be given to competitors?

Mr. BLAND. Because it would be essentially dangerous. If the gentleman were in a business of this kind, he would not want to give out all the details of his business to his competitors.

Mr. KELLER. If my competitors are doing the same thing with me, why should I not give it to them? Would not the people profit by just such an arrangement?

Mr. BLAND. I do not think so.

Mr. KELLER. It seems to me so.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I think it is highly essential that these matters should be made public; that there should be held public hearings. Who is there to determine what is a proper hearing? Who is there to say what shall constitute a proper hearing when it has been brought out by testimony, by investigation, and otherwise, that there is practically no competition when these bids are opened; that out of 43 cases there was only one bidder in each case?

I would have Members of this Committee know that since 1928, since the enactment of this subsidy law, under which we are now operating, that this Government has spent around $120,000,000.

I wish the Members of this Committee to know that if this bill is enacted into law the taxpayers of this country will have to spend around $200,000,000 because of the enactment of this law. Why should the affairs be shrouded in secret? Why, with the money furnished by the taxpayers, should not the hearings be public. Why should not the men and women of the country, who furnish the money to pay these taxes, why shouldn't they know what is going on? Why should it be shrouded in secrecy in a few minds and in a few hands?

I repeat the question, Who is there to tell us, when you ask us to vote for this bill, what is a proper hearing? Who is to determine what a proper hearing is?

There has been much talk this morning and yesterday about this being an administration bill or an antiadministration bill. If we are to follow the President's message—and that is one reason why many Members of the House support the bill—if we pass this bill it does not conform, nor does it follow up the suggestion made by the President. Does the bill provide for the abolition of the ocean mail contracts? It does not. Does the bill follow the suggestion made by Postmaster General Farley for the abolition of these pernicious ocean mail contracts? In many cases we are paying thousands of dollars for one letter or one pound of mail delivered. How are you gentlemen from the western States, when you go home, going to defend your vote for this bill? Can the gentleman from Nebraska tell the farmers in his State that he voted for a ship subsidy that lacks these provisions?

The subsidy the Government is now granting was enacted under a Republican administration and by a Republican Congress. If this bill becomes a law, it will be the work of a Democratic Congress and during a Democratic administration. There is no question about that. The Democrats in the House of Representatives in this Congress outnumber the Republicans 3 to 1. Not one of this committee who sponsor, favor, and approve this bill has had the temerity to come here on the floor and say that this is the President's bill; they have not the courage to say to us that President Roosevelt has studied, that he has analyzed the bill, that he approves the bill, and demands its passage. On the contrary, in his message to Congress the President outlined the pitfalls, the dangers of ship subsidies, yet nothing is done to counteract, to cure, to correct these evils.

If this bill is enacted into law, while it may be said by some that it is an administration measure and that it has the backing of President Roosevelt, I challenge anyone here in this House today to point out one single place, one single page of the report, one single communication from the President wherein he unequivocally states that he is for this bill. Then, if the bill is enacted into law, it cannot be said that it is an administration bill or is on the President's program of "must" legislation.

This bill continues and perpetuates the frauds and corruption disclosed in the investigation that resulted in the canceling of the mail contracts, which proved that these subsidies caused appalling losses to the Government and scandal that was aired all over the Nation. The Postmaster General and the President both favored and authorized the cancelation of all such contracts, yet you now ask us to enact into law the legalization of such frauds in the ocean mail contracts. If you wish to use precedent and experience as a guide, just recall that Government loans have been negotiated at ridiculously low rates of interest for shipbuilders, in many cases money being loaned to wealthy shipbuilders for one-eighth of 1 percent interest.

The United States spent $3,500,000,000 for the construction of a wooden merchant marine. Following the war these ships were sold for a song, and the taxpayers lost an enormous sum of money; and remember, under this new bill the Government will pay direct subsidies to shipowners; they will make up the difference between the cost of construction in this country and in England. Can anyone today tell me what that difference in cost of production is or will be? Again the answer is "No." This Government will be buying a pig in a poke and a mighty costly one at that. Under the guise of building up and helping the United States Navy, millions of dollars will be wasted and squandered. The prevailing theory in this, as in so many other pieces of legislation, seems to be, "Let Uncle Sam take all the loss; let the taxpayers pay the bill." Why do we not hear now from those Members of Congress who are complaining and squawking about the attempted hurry and speeding up of consideration of the President's tax bill? I have heard it said by some that they do not propose to be hurried, that they will not be crowded or have the tax measure that taxes the rich crammed down their throats. I respectfully direct the attention of these gentlemen that when there was enacted into law by the Seventy-third Congress a measure to crucify soldiers and war veterans with the so-called "Economy Act" we who opposed the bill were given only 40 minutes to express that opposition; and that bill, one of the most infamous of all times, was literally jammed down our necks. With some legislators it seems to make a remarkable difference as to whose ox is being gored.

For many years I have opposed and have made addresses in many sections of Ohio in which I have condemned all ship subsidies and ocean mail subsidies. Now; if I were untrue to every concept, if I were faithless to every well-founded conviction, if I were a traitor to those millions of people in Ohio, who must in one form or another work for a living, must earn their bread by the sweat of their brows, then I should support this bill. As it is, however, I am speaking against it, I will vote against it, and I will use every effort at my command to prevent its enactment into law.

Does this bill safeguard the Government of the United States, does it safeguard the American merchant marine such as we have been told, does it meet with the recommendations of the President of the United States, does it pay attention to the suggestions of the Postmaster General? It does no such thing, and the only interests that can be said to be safeguarded if this bill becomes a law are the builders who build the ships, the owners who operate those ships, and the beneficiaries of ocean mail contracts, at exorbitant and unjustifiable rates. Vote "no" on the bill.

Some attempt is made, and I may say a somewhat feeble attempt, to defend this bill on the grounds that Congress has already granted subsidies to the farmers, to manufacturing industries, to bankers, and to labor. They contend that subsidies have been granted to agriculture through the creation of the A. A. A. and the levying of processing taxes. This might be figuratively so, but not literally true, since the A. A. A. was created and processing taxes enacted for the benefit and welfare of America's greatest producer—the tiller of the soil. The processing tax is not paid out of Government or taxpayers' funds. It is paid from the proceeds of the processing taxes invariably paid by the processor and middleman, and the disparity or spread in prices between producer and consumer is so great as to be readily absorbed by that processor and middleman without either penalty or hardship upon the grower or consumer.

I deny the statement that manufacturing industry is subsidized directly by the Government. True it is that tariffs and other protective legislation for larger industrialists act indirectly as a subsidy, but the cost of that subsidy is financed mostly by consumers and users of the commodities and appliances produced by the industrialists. In no manner, shape, or form can it be argued successfully that this is a direct subsidy such as the bill which we are now considering is a direct subsidy to the Shipping Trust, the ocean mail monopoly, and the grasping, marauding shipbuilders.

I deny also that banks and bankers are directly subsidized by the Government. It is apparent to all fair-minded observers that banks do have an indirect subsidy, a legalized racket if you please, in the unconstitutional privilege that they enjoy, namely the issuing of currency, the loaning of check-book money and depositors money, and the pyramiding of interest charges on money that they actually own—by pyramiding of interest charges, I mean the collecting of interest by bankers annually on ten times the amount of money they actually own. The word "subsidy" is entirely too mild a term to apply to this form of grand larceny, but here again in no instance of legislation enacted by this or the Seventy-third Congress will it be found that direct gifts or subsidies to bankers was authorized.

I resent the inference and insinuation that American labor has been subsidized by proper restrictions on immigration. Charges are made often and somewhat anthoritatively by Members of this and the other body of Congress, that several million unlawful aliens are either working in this country or living on Government relief doles, and with the American Federation of Labor saying that 11,000,000 people are unemployed, that statement alone will refute the inference that labor is so subsidized. Consequently, I will brand and you will be forced to conclude that all that argument is specious, that it is captious, is beside the point, and too far-fetched to be given as justification for anyone voting and supporting this obnoxious bill.

Again the attempts of the Government to correct soil erosion and to build reservoirs and dams for flood control is inapplicable in this case. Such public resources are designed for the benefit of all of our citizens and not for the selfish overprivileged few.

We are told by the proponents of the bill that 75 percent of this ship subsidy will go to labor and that 30 percent will go for materials which will employ labor indirectly. My reply is that these figures are overdrawn, unsound, and I challenge their accuracy. I propound the question, How much of this subsidy goes to profit of the capitalists? How much of the ocean mail subsidy goes to the sons of the idle rich, producers who are living on dead men's predatory wealth? This bill is wholly bad. It does not follow the President's recommendation. It does not eliminate the most objectionable features, namely, the construction of new ships at taxpayers' expense; the junking of old, worn-out, antiquated vessels, old tubs, and hulks at taxpayers' expense; the operation and maintenance of these vessels built by Government expense for 20 long years.

The crowning argument against the enactment of this bill and the one that should engage the attention of every Member of this House who is interested in the welfare of farmers, wage workers, and small businessmen and producers, is the undeniable fact that in normal years only 16 percent of our commodities, agricultural, industrial, and otherwise, only 16 percent of those commodities are exported to foreign countries. At the present moment, with our European debtors having erected all sorts of insurmountable barriers in the way of prohibitive tariffs, with their constant refusal to buy American goods, and with their determined and stubborn refusal to pay us the money which they owe us, there is not one good, sound reason why American taxpayers should shoulder the burden and subsidize these shipbuilders, owners, and grafters to vainly pursue an elusive and somewhat imaginary 16 percent of all the commodities that we raise and produce in this great country of ours.

The United States of America is the most self-contained unit in all the world. Our resources are unlimited—unknown. Those resources were here at creation's dawn. Those wonderful resources have only been partially developed. Until every arable acre has been tilled to the utmost, until every mine has been probed to its innermost depths, until every forest giant is felled, those resources will not have reached their zenith of development.

Then why should we, as taxpayers facing a national debt of more than $30,000,000,000, concern ourselves with subsidizing an industry that at best can cater to only European and other foreign countries?

Do we as American citizens find it necessary to travel to Europe? Do we find it necessary to go to Europe and other countries to exploit the wares of Rockefeller, Mellon, Sinclair and other oil barons? Do we find it necessary to travel to other countries to build up, promote, and perpetuate the commodities manufactured on foreign soil by American manufacturers? No! It is not so. About the only real reason we can have for going to those countries today is to tour and see the sights, and the most of us have not the money nor the means of so gratifying that desire.

Do the men and women who sweat and toil in the factories and shops want this bill passed? Do the farmers who now bare their brawny arms and chests to the sun's scorching rays want this bill passed? Do the small business men and producers who are hanging on by the skin of their teeth in the struggle for existence want this bill passed? Do the soldiers and war veterans who have been denied their share of the loaf, who live in soup houses and bread lines because they are denied what is justly and honestly due them, want this bill passed? The answer is No, a thousand times no! [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN) there were 39 ayes and 83 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 537. The owner of any vessel constructed or reconditioned under the provisions of this title shall, if requested by the authority, carry insurance payable to the authority in addition to any insurance required to be carried by section 11 (g), as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 46, sec. 870 (g)), in an amount equal to the unamortized amount of any construction differential subsidy paid on such vessel. For the purpose of this section the amount of such subsidy shall be amortized ratably over the entire economic life of the vessel. The authority shall upon request of the owner provide for the payment of the premium for such additional insurance, either through an operating differential subsidy or otherwise.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MORAN: Page 40, line 6, insert the following additional sentence: "No part of the insurance on vessels on which a construction subsidy is paid or a construction loan made by the authority shall be placed, either directly or indirectly, with any foreign insurance company, and the authority is authorized to underwrite such insurance."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, we have the interesting fact that this merchant marine which we are to build under this bill is to constitute a naval auxiliary. Some of the plans of these ships will show emplacements and turrets; they are a part of the plans of the ship. When we turn around and place the insurance on such a ship in a foreign insurance company, for example, an English company, the plans of that ship, including the auxiliary naval plans, are made available to a foreign naval department. If you think that is a proper thing to do, then vote down this amendment, but if you believe that we should not allow those plans, which are naval plans, to come into the hands of another country and give them the advantage of that knowledge, then you should vote for the amendment, for it will prevent that.

Incidentally, I cannot see why we cannot take care of that insurance in American companies, and to avoid any possibility of exorbitant charges on the part of insurance companies in America, to avoid any possibility of their working together in collusion to get high rates or too high rates, the amendment provides that the authority can take care of it. There is nothing unusual about that. We have a Government insurance fund right now, and it merely opens that up and makes it more generally available. I think it is far better to have our merchant marine insured in American companies, with the protection of the American Government fund available, if desired, than to turn those plans over to foreign powers.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the matter of insurance is one that is most important, and is to be given very serious consideration by the committee at its next session. However, we have insurance companies. Some years ago there were American syndicates arranged and a law passed providing for American insurance companies. It is questionable just how far the Government should go in insurance. We would be embarking on a very large field to put the Government in the insurance business any more than it is now. There is nothing in the matter of the disclosure of naval plans. Those are mere gun mounts.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. Is it more important that we should open up these plans to foreign governments or that we should keep them away from foreign powers?

Mr. BLAND. I would hope that we would have insurance companies in this country to take care of the matter.

Mr. KELLER. Then why not provide that they shall take care of it?

Mr. BLAND. I do not know whether we have or not. This provides that the Government shall take care of it.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORAN. Apparently the gentleman did not hear the amendment read. The amendment itself provides that the insurance shall be placed with American companies, but that the authority is authorized to write it. In other words, the Government fund that now exists can be used to write it, and American companies can write the insurance.

Mr. BLAND. I question whether we have sufficient insurance companies. If we have, I should be delighted to vote with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN) there were—ayes 44, noes 58.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. MORAN and Mr. RAMSPECK were appointed to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 538. The Authority shall require such security, in such manner and form as it may determine to be reasonable and necessary to insure the performance of any contract made under this title.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WEARIN: Amend title V, part 3, to read as follows:

"SEC. 539. No aid shall be extended under this title to more than two lines operated by the same contractor or its subsidiary, holding, or affiliated companies."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, under the terms of this bill it would be possible for an intercoastal line to be interpreted as being a foreign shipping line by virtue of the fact that it stopped at one foreign port in its route and thereby came under the terms of this particular bill from the standpoint of drawing a percentage of the subsidy for that particular service, and that is actually being done at the present time, as was brought out by the Post Office Department investigation and the hearings before the Senate committee. The effect of that is to subsidize two competing lines to the disadvantage of a privately owned and unsubsidized line, competing in the same intercoastal service. I want it to be perfectly clear that under the provisions of this bill, the permissive provisions of the bill, it is possible for an American-owned unsubsidized intercoastal line to be forced to compete with one that is being partially subsidized on the same route, by virtue of the fact that the latter stops at some foreign port, such as one of the British possessions not far distant from say Puerto Rico, not serviced by the unsubsidized line operating over practically the same route.

In other words, the taxpayers of this country are paying the price of competition between two lines on the same service. There is no reason under the sun for such a provision in a subsidy bill if we are interested in protecting the Public Treasury. I trust this amendment, which will eliminate any possibility of such a contingency arising, will receive favorable consideration by the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say that a company can secure a subsidy in the way of financing the building of a ship and they can then operate both on the open seas and on the Great Lakes or up the rivers or along the coast?

Mr. WEARIN. No. Evidently I have not made myself clear to the gentleman. The fact is this: Take this hypothetical case: If there is an intercoastal line operating from the United States to our American possessions along the Atlantic and Gulf coast line, and there is another line operating on a similar service which stops at some foreign port, some British possession close to an American possession or close to the American coast, that line so operating can receive a percentage of subsidy under this bill and place the American owned and operated line that is not subsidized at a disadvantage as a result of it. That should not be the case.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, a company can receive financing which engages partly in foreign commerce?

Mr. WEARIN. Exactly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And partly in intercoastal or coastal operation; is that correct?

Mr. WEARIN. That is my understanding.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then, naturally, it would compete with the coast line which did not receive any financing subsidy?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes; it could, under the provisions of this bill, as I have described them.

Mr. SCHULTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. WEARIN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHULTE. Is it not a fact that this makes it exceptionally difficult for an American-owned ship or vessel to continue to operate in competition with those that are being subsidized by the Federal Government?

Mr. WEARIN. That is exactly correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa inadvertently has not portrayed the situation. A coastwise vessel can get construction aid from a loan, not a construction subsidy. A vessel to gain a construction subsidy must be a vessel that is going to operate in foreign trade. That vessel cannot enter the intercoastal trade unless, under exceptional circumstances, passed on and considered by the Authority, it is found that the vessel is needed in intercoastal trade, and if it is, then its construction subsidy for that time must be returned. There is absolutely no operating subsidy for the coastwise ships, and that vessel could get no operating subsidy. It is only when the Authority shall determine that the coastwise service is inadequate that these ships could enter. There is no permission in the bill for construction aid or an operating differential for a vessel operating in both services.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. Is it not true that if we have a line operating in the intercoastal service that makes a stop at a foreign port—say a British possession, which is in line of route along the intercoastal service—under this act it can be interpreted as being a line in foreign service and receive a subsidy on that portion of the business it does?

Mr. BLAND. On that portion; yes.

Mr. WEARIN. That is exactly the contention I have been making before this committee.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

For instance, if a boat were going into Canada on the Great Lakes from the United States, that ship could not get a subsidy unless it had certain qualifications, is that not so?

Mr. BLAND. That would be true, I think.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I would like a little information on this point that has been brought out by the gentleman from Iowa. Do I understand that if a ship is engaged in intercoastal trade and that ship merely touches at Kingston in Jamaica, it would be entitled to a subsidy in construction, and if it did not touch at Kingston, but simply plied between American cities on the coast it would not be entitled to that?

Mr. BLAND. It would not be entitled to it. I cannot conceive that the maritime authority would construe the one stop as ocean service. If they did, I, for one, would be in favor of amending the bill.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think some Members of the Committee may not understand that the coastal carriers do not have any foreign competition, as I understand it. Foreign carriers are not permitted to engage in the intercoastal trade; is that not true?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; that is true.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And that is the reason for the distinction. We are only dealing with the question of foreign commerce, where we have foreign competition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] has expired.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may again be read before it is voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were ayes 29 and noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend title V, part III, to read as follows:

"SEC. 539. No aid shall be extended under this title to more than two lines operated by the same contractor or its subsidiary, holding, or affiliated companies."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is another attempt to do exactly what I endeavored to do by the preceding amendment; it follows directly in the footsteps of it and provides simply that there shall be a specific provision placed in this act specifying the fact that no coastwise line stopping at a foreign port in the route of its service shall be considered as eligible for a subsidy under this law which is provided in the pending bill. The reason for this requirement is to prevent intercoastal lines from stopping at a foreign port and thus being considered to be in the foreign service to the extent of the amount of cargo carried to that foreign port. In this respect a subsidized line thus comes into competition with an American owned and operated line that does not happen to stop at the foreign port but which operates over the same identical service with that one exception. It is simply a measure to prevent operators who might come in under such a subsidy provision as I have described competing with other American owned and operated lines.

I believe the chairman of the committee and I reached an agreement a moment ago with reference to the fact that it is permissible to do what I have just described under the terms of this bill, namely, to have an intercoastal operator stopping at one foreign port and thereby receiving an operating subsidy even though, to all practical purposes, it is an intercoastal line operating in competition with unsubsidized ships.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I do not agree with the position of the gentleman that this section of the bill applies to an ocean service incidentally stopping at a foreign port. I do not think such a service would come within the provisions of this section.

Mr. WEARIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon for misunderstanding his views. It is still my contention, however, that an intercoastal line stopping at some one foreign port on one of its services could come under the provisions of this bill, permissive or otherwise, and be eligible to receive a subsidy on that portion of the cargo it carried to the foreign port, whereas a service operating over the same route, with the exception of that one foreign port of call, would be excluded from receiving any subsidy.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I would say to the gentleman that if the case he is trying to reach is the one of the line that stops at Bellevoir, or some place down there, I think that assistance never should have been granted.

Mr. WEARIN. I agree with the gentleman; I think it never should have been granted. That is why I have introduced this amendment. I think we should place a specific provision in this bill which will absolutely preclude any possibility of a repetition of that illicit practice in the future, and for that reason I offer the amendment to the Committee.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman's amendment because it goes entirely too far. I think he reaches out for the ocean service, rather than for the coastwise service.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. The amendment simply provides that a line operating an intercoastal service and stopping at one or two foreign ports shall not be eligible for the subsidy.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 28, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Page 40, line 7, strike out section 538, lines 7 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 538. The Authority shall require adequate security in such manner and form as it may determine to be necessary to insure the performance of any contracts made under this title. Adequate security shall mean such security as a prudent business man would require under similar circumstances, and a personal bond shall not be deemed adequate security."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, the whole point of the amendment is the personal-bond proposition. The Government has been accepting personal bonds and has lost thousands of dollars in so doing.

At this point I would like to answer the argument that has been advanced at least three times that the Government has not lost any money on mail contracts or on any of these construction loans. It is all a matter of what is called a "loss." If I lend a man $10 and am not paid back in 20 years and still consider that it is a good debt and he has not decided to pay me, it might be said that I have not lost the $10, but I would think I had. I call your attention to House Document No. 118, page 10, where are listed specific past-due items totaling $5,032,178.92 and unpaid balances of $111,366,757.68. In other words, in answer to the statement that this Government has lost no money under this merchant marine build-up, I note the fact that there is overdue at this time over $5,000,000.

I call attention also to the report of the Black committee, page 24, which report, I understand, is available at the desk. The headline reads: "Millions due the Government in default, but contractors and lobbyists continue to profit." Then are given a number of examples. I read from the report the following:

While ocean-mail contractors were delinquent in their obligations to the Government on December 31, 1934, by not less than $3,852,699 (which figure does not include the delinquency of $439,812.46 of the Seatrain Lines, Inc., the validity of whose contract is denied by the Government), inexcusably heavy profits have been made by some ocean-mail contractors, and excessive salaries, fees, commissions, and expense accounts have been paid to officers, agents, and high-powered "fixers" plying their art in Washington.

And the report goes on to show various sums paid, various withdrawals paid, in one instance an increase in the amount of withdrawals for salaries of $1,800,000 when the company was in default on its debts to the United States Government.

In this instance we are trying to meet that sort of thing. We have had actual cases. Any business man and any attorney knows the danger of personal bonds. Do you want personal bonds given to the United States Government for sums of this size in face of the fact that the Government has already lost hundreds of thousands of dollars by accepting these personal bonds?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Where is there anything in the bill that mentions personal bonds?

Mr. MORAN. My amendment eliminates section 538, which states that the authority shall require such security in such manner and form, without specifying and without standards; therefore, I assume they may continue to do the same thing that has been done in the past. My amendment seeks to correct this situation by stating that a personal bond will not be acceptable.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman's amendment still leaves it in the discretion of the authority as to what sort of security they shall take.

Mr. MORAN. I am sorry, but I disagree with the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. MORAN. Permit me to read the amendment:

The authority shall require adequate security in such manner and form as it may determine to be necessary to insure the performance of any contracts made under this title.

That sentence is just a general statement. Now, then, I go ahead and define "adequate security" in the second sentence:

Adequate security shall mean such security as a prudent man would require under similar circumstances, and a personal bond shall not be deemed adequate security.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, the language of the act as the committee wrote it is just as strong, in my judgment, because both the amendment and the original provision leave it in the discretion of the authority. Of course, the gentleman has added the phrase that personal bond shall not be considered as adequate security, but I have no idea the Authority would consider that adequate security. The gentleman cannot condemn any stronger than I the things that have happened under the old Shipping Board. I think they were outrageous. I believe there was mismanagement. But we are setting up a new authority, to be appointed by our present President, and the committee has given careful consideration to practically every question that has been raised here.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to the Members of the Committee that in my judgment this bill has been written in the manner in which Congress ought to write legislation. We gave careful consideration to the recommendations of the President and of the various departments affected, and then the committee sat down and used its own judgment in writing the language of this bill. We heard every objection raised by the gentleman from Iowa and discussed those objections day after day for a period of 2 months. Now the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Maine are trying to rewrite this bill on the floor of the House without giving any reason or adequate consideration to the technicalities involved in dealing with such a subject. I hope the Members of the Committee will support the committee unless there is some adequate reason shown for changes in this bill.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Has it been the custom in the past to accept personal bonds as security?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not know.

Mr. KELLER. Is there any reason why we should not amend this bill to prevent personal bonds being given?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman that I think the question of security, even if we adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, is left in the hands of the authority, where we must leave it. We cannot legislate in detail as to what will be adequate security in each case. In this case the security taken under this bill will be primarily a mortgage on the ship.

Mr. KELLER. It must be, that is true; but if you take personal security, you know what happens to personal security. We have had some experience with that matter.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman that if a man is a crook, he is going to crook you whether you have collateral or not. I am of the opinion that the best security in the world is the word of an honest man. We have had surety companies go broke on us. We have to leave some discretion in the hands of this authority, and if we do not get the right kind of members on the authority, the plan will not be a success.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The Committee divided.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request for a division.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, it is too late to withdraw the request. The Committee has divided.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine to withdraw his request for a division?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I renew the request.

The CHAIRMAN. That is tantamount to an objection.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN)—ayes 32, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not get a record vote, but the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Page 40, line 10, insert the following additional section:

"SEC. 539. At the end of each month, each contractor and shipbuilder under a contract in force under this act shall file with the authority a detailed report of all moneys expended in an attempt or attempts to influence legislation, or to prevent legislation, by the National Congress, or to influence any Federal department, bureau, agency, or Government official, or Government employee, or official or employee of any Government-owned corporation to make, modify, alter, or cancel any contract with the United States Government, or any United States department, bureau, agency, Government-owned corporation or official, as such official, or to influence any such department, bureau, agency, corporation or official in the administration of any governmental or corporate duty, so as to give any benefit or advantage to such contractor.

"(b) Such attempts shall be construed to include the distribution of literature, lectures, and public speeches, appearances before committees of Congress, interviews with individual Members of either House of Congress, appearances before or interviews with Federal bureaus, agencies, or employees, the preparation and/or publication of books, pamphlets, or newspaper or magazine articles.

"(c) Such detailed reports shall contain the names of all persons to whom such moneys were paid, the amount paid to each, and for what purpose, and the papers, periodicals, or magazines in which any articles or editorials were caused to be published for a consideration.

"(d) All reports required under this section shall be made under oath before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths.

"(e) Any person who shall make a false affidavit, where an affidavit is required by this section, shall be guilty of perjury and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $5,000 nor more than $25,000 or be imprisoned for not less than 1 year nor more than 10 years, or shall be both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not germane to the bill. It is really undertaking to write an antilobbying bill. I shall not discuss the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON in the chair). The amendment clearly is not germane and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Page 40, line 10, insert the following additional section:

"SEC. 542. No applicant whose mail contract has been canceled shall be eligible for aid under this title unless he consents in writing not to enter suit against the United States for the alleged breach of such contract."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that it was not possible to present the previous amendment to the House, because I think if there is one thing——

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that is not germane to the amendment now before the House. We must get along with the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). The gentleman from Maine will proceed in order.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides that no applicant whose mail contract has been canceled shall be eligible for aid under this title unless he consents in writing not to enter suit against the United States for the alleged breach of such contract.

We have a very ambiguously worded section.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is not that true of the bill?

Mr. MORAN. In answer to the gentleman's question I will say that nearly every time the Government's interest is concerned it is extremely ambiguous.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield for a further observation?

Mr. MORAN. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. It developed in another body on yesterday that the subsidy part of this bill was nothing more or less than a hand-out, that they base it on the proposition of the cost of a ship in some other nation when there is no way in the wide world we can determine the cost of that ship, and they are coming in here and getting their hands into the Treasury up to their shoulders, and it looks like all we have to do under this bill is to stand by and be bled by it.

Mr. MORAN. In answer to the gentleman's question—and I think this may be very pertinent to my friends on the Republican side—you will notice one statement by Senator VANDENBERG in the Senate yesterday. He is not taking the same attitude that the Republicans in the House are taking. He said:

I call the attention of the Senator to another difficulty at this particular point. So long as international exchange is a fluctuating item there is no way in the world by which we can tell for more than 24 hours whether the differential is five million, or eight million, or twenty million dollars.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the discussion is not on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). The gentleman's reading is subject to a point of order, which is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman know what a distinguished Senator said yesterday, "The bill throws the gates wide open for all kinds of graft and all kinds of corruption to creep in"?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order for us to read from the Senate proceedings and I make the further point that the gentleman is not discussing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). It is not in order for any Member to read Senate proceedings, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, was there objection to reading the statement?

The CHAIRMAN. If a point of order is made against it, the Chair must sustain the point.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say that this bill, according to the statements that have been made by distinguished Members of this body and of the other body, throws the gates wide open for graft and corruption of all kinds.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). It is against the rules of the House to refer to Senate debates.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, my last statement was not the reading of any statement but was my own statement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

This amendment is simply an attempt to deny an American citizen who feels himself injured the right to go into court and try out his rights as a citizen. I suggest to the proponent of this amendment that he read what Thomas Jefferson said about the British doing that to us, as he sets it forth in the Declaration of Independence.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). The Chair desires to read into the RECORD the rule of the House respecting reference to what has been said in another body. I read from section 371 of Jefferson's Manual:

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there, because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses.

Mr. TRUAX. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TRUAX. Is it against the rules of the House to notice what a Member of the other body says for a newspaper publication?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). If made as a Senator in his official capacity, yes. The gentleman understands the English language, and the Chair has read the rule of the House. It was held by Mr. Speaker Clark that it is improper for a Member of the House to refer to a Senator even in complimentary terms. [Laughter.] The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORAN) there were 26 ayes and 48 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE VI—CONSTRUCTION LOAN FUND

SECTION 601. All the powers and duties under the provisions of section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 46, sec. 870), formerly vested in the United States Shipping Board, the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, and transferred to the Department of Commerce by section 12 of the Executive order of June 10, 1933, pursuant to the act of Congress approved March 3, 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 5, secs. 124 to 132, inclusive), are hereby transferred to and shall be exercised by the Authority.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 601, title VI, by adding the following after the word "Authority", line 23, page 40: "No loans shall be made except for the construction of vessels to be engaged exclusively in foreign service, any provisions in section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920, as amended, and sections 301 and 302 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928, to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to limit the field for loans that may be made for the building of ships to foreign commerce. The President asked us to stop the business of loaning money for shipbuilding, and this is an amendment to the existing law that will stop the loaning of money in one particular and confine it to foreign commerce, with which the proponents of the bill claim it is primarily concerned. I trust the amendment, following out the limitations and suggestions of the Executive, will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—26 ayes, 48 noes.

Mr. WEARIN and Mr. O'MALLEY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WEARIN and Mr. RAMSPECK.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 33 ayes and 76 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 602. The Secretary of Commerce may credit to the construction loan fund created by section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, all or any part of the proceeds of sales of ships and surplus property, including proceeds from securities, consisting of notes, letters of credit, or other evidences of debt taken for deferred payments of the purchase price, and of interest received on such deferred payments and on construction loans, until the amount thus credited when added to the amounts previously credited to said fund (exclusive of repayments) will bring the amount of the fund up to the full amount authorized by law. The Authority is hereby authorized to make loans as provided in such section 11 and in this act in the aggregate amount of the fund, or to make such other use thereof as is provided in this act.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 602, line 24, page 40, by substituting the word "Authority" for the words "Secretary of Commerce."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, we have come to a section in this bill that involves a very great difference of opinion between the report of the committee and the recommendations of the President. This particular amendment attempts to transfer from the hands of the Department of Commerce provisions that should be under the administration authority.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I hope the gentleman will put the President's recommendations in his remarks and point out the difference in this bill from what the President recommends. Some of the Members in the cloakrooms rush out here and vote with the committee blindly. They seem to think that this is a "must" bill and that we must vote with the President on this bill when it is not in accordance with the President's recommendations at all

Mr. WEARIN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I call these words to your attention, quoting from the minority views:

(1) The President in his message to Congress condemned the practice of lending Government money for shipbuilding, stating that in practice this policy has been a failure; this bill continues and enlarges upon this condemned practice.

(2) The President proposed that we end the subterfuge of mail contracts as rapidly as possible; this bill gives no assurance that existing ocean mail contracts will be terminated prior to their respective contractual expiration dates.

(3) The President stated that some American shipping companies have engaged in practices and abuses which should, and must be, ended, such as improper operating of subsidiary companies, excessive salaries, the engaging in businesses not directly a part of shipping, and other abuses which have resulted in poor management and improper use of profits; discretionary termination of these abuses as provided in this bill does not positively end these practices as insisted upon by the President.

(4) The President stated that quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative duties of the present Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce should be transferred for the present to the Interstate Commerce Commission; this bill fails to comply with that important recommendation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman think that we ought to report this bill back to the committee and let it bring in a bill in keeping with those suggestions and stop the abuses in the future that we have had in the past with these subsidies?

Mr. WEARIN. I do. The amendment that I have offered attempts to make the transfer from the Department of Commerce to the authority, so that this group of men may have charge of the administration of this act, so that it will not be bandied back and forth from one department to another, when the administration is endeavoring as best it can to consolidate the departments of the Government and to eliminate excessive expenditures.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that many Government officials believe that such methods as that, dividing up the power, spreading it out to the four winds, enables lobbyists to play one department against another department of the Government?

Mr. WEARIN. Exactly.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WEARIN) there were—ayes 16, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixteen Members present, a quorum.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 603. (a) Subsection (a) of section 11, as amended, of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Loans may be made under this section to aid in the construction of vessels for use in coastwise trade as well as in foreign trade. Upon request of the Secretary of the Navy any vessel for coastwise trade in the construction of which a loan is made under this section, shall embody such naval features as the Secretary of the Navy may indicate: Provided, That all costs incident thereto shall be paid out of naval appropriations."

(b) Subsection (d), as amended, of such section 11 is amended by striking out "5¼ percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "4 percent."

(c) Such section 11, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) In case a loan is applied for under this section by an applicant who has as his principal place of business a place on the Pacific coast of the United States (but not including one who having been in business on or before June 1, 1935, has changed his principal place of business to a place on the Pacific coast of the United States after such date), to aid in the construction of a vessel to be operated in a coastwise or intercoastal service, route, or line from or on the Pacific coast of the United States, and the amount of the lowest responsible bid of shipyards on such coast for the construction of such vessel does not exceed the amount of the lowest responsible bid therefor of shipyards on the Atlantic coast of the United States by more than 6 percent of the amount of the bid of such Atlantic coast shipyard, such loan shall be made only if the applicant accepts such lowest responsible bid of the Pacific coast shipyard, and agrees to designate and continue as the home port of the vessel to be constructed a port on the Pacific coast of the United States. The minimum rate of interest on such loan shall be three-fourths of 1 percent lower than the minimum rate which would otherwise be applicable under subsection (d), as amended, of this section, with respect to the periods of construction of such vessel and its operation exclusively in coastwise and/or intercoastal trade. Such lower interest rate shall not apply with respect to any period in which the applicant:

"(1) Does not continue as its home port a port on the Pacific coast of the United States,

"(2) Operates the vessel in coastwise trade other than on the Pacific coast,

"(3) Operates the vessel in intercoastal or foreign trade except to and from ports on the Pacific coast, or

"(4) Having been in business before June 1, 1935, and having changed his principal place of business to a place on the Pacific coast after such date, maintains his principal place of business at any place on the Pacific coast."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RABAUT: Page 41, line 18, after the word "trade", insert "and on the Great Lakes."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

My colleagues, I rise in opposition to the bill now under consideration, H. R. 8555, a bill to provide subsidies for the merchant marine.

This is a vicious bill and should be voted down. It proposes to perpetuate the evils and gross racketeering that have been carried on in the past under the guise of Government subsidies. The statement was made on the floor of this House yesterday that this was an administration measure. By checking this bill with the President's message delivered to Congress on this subject March 4, 1935, you will find that this bill in its present form is not in line with the President's recommendation.

Strenuous effort was made yesterday to amend the bill in order to correct some of the evils adroitly embodied in the bill, but to no avail. One amendment after another was voted down by certain groups on both sides of the House. Party lines apparently were obliterated when it came to supporting these shipping interests, who for years have waxed fat at the crib of the Federal Treasury. Where were the friends of the President yesterday when attempt after attempt was made, with no success, to amend this bill to bring it in harmony with his plan and purpose as expressed in his message? The gallant fight to correct this bill was made only by a handful. I want to commend those who led that fight with such vigor—the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN]. If our cause goes down in defeat you and those who fought with you can rest assured that a good fight has been waged in an attempt to stop this racket.

I do not have the time to go into detail as to the defects in this bill. I just want to repeat the objections voiced in the minority reports signed by Mr. WEARIN and Mr. BREWSTER, which appear on page 34 of House Report No. 1277:

1. It violates the shipping lessons of the past 6 years as specifically pointed out by the President in his messaage to Congress.

2. It fails to correct evils disclosed by the Senate and by Postmaster General Farley and denounced by President Roosevelt.

3. It gives no assurance that its asserted policy of providing an adequate merchant marine can be realized.

4. It is incapable of efficient administration and invites maladministration.

The few minutes I have are too short to elucidate on these propositions. I may go into detail at a future date to show the raids that have been made on the United States Treasury by this subsidy racket. Suffice it to say at this point that this racket has cost the American people sums running into the billions of dollars, and we have nothing to show for it. How long are we going to stand for this kind of a thing?

In the Black report, Senate Report No. 898, attention is called to some of the defects and shortcomings of our past ship-subsidy policy. From this report I quote (p. 2):

> The subject of this investigation and report is the unsuccessful and tragically disappointing attempt of the United States to create and maintain an adequate privately owned American merchant marine. The American merchant marine is neither adequate nor is it in any true sense privately owned. Responsibility for this country's failure to secure that which it sought and for which it was willing to expend and has expended hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money must lie at the door of three classes of people: First, this burden of costly failure rests upon the enactment of an ill-advised compromise law. Second, upon certain public officials who flagrantly betrayed their trust and maladministered those laws. Third, upon those individuals who, publicly posing as patriots, prostituted those laws for their private profit.

In that same report it is shown how an investment of $500 yielded a profit of $6,700,000 (p. 5).

Gentlemen, is it not time that we stop listening to these special pleaders, who have in the past and who will continue in the future to make their annual raids on our Public Treasury? Let us reject this bill and bring such legislation as may be necessary on this subject within the scope of the President's message and in accordance with the views he expressed. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 703. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation service and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve both rail and water transportation, and the Authority and the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby severally authorized and directed to cooperate to that end.
>
> (b) A Board is hereby created, to be known as the "Joint Transportation Board", to be composed of the Secretary of Commerce and of two members selected by the Interstate Commerce Commission from among their members, and of two members selected by the Authority from among their members, of which Board the Secretary of Commerce shall be chairman. Said Board shall appoint a secretary, who shall keep minutes of its meetings, which minutes shall be furnished to all members of the Authority and of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Board shall hold regular semimonthly meetings and such additional meetings as may be necessary to transact its business. Any officer or employee of the Authority and the Interstate Commerce Commission may be assigned to the service of the Joint Transportation Board.
> (c) The Board shall consider and make such recommendations to the Authority and the Commission pertaining to the interrelation of rail and water traffic as in its opinion will further the purpose and policy declared in subsection (a) hereof. None of the provisions hereof shall be construed to limit the power or jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of the Authority or of the Secretary of War with respect to any matter within the lawful jurisdiction of either.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend section 703 of Title VII by striking out subsections (b) and (c) on page 45, beginning with line 1 and ending in line 24.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to strike out the superfluous board that is being set up in this bill that will occasion the United States Government some additional expense eventually. There are existing agencies of government which can undoubtedly carry on the work proposed in these particular subsections. In my judgment, there is no occasion to set up any additional boards or commissions for the purpose of administering or having a tendency to direct the administration of the pending subsidy legislation. This will simply result eventually in an added burden to the people.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. How are we going to reconcile this with the Democratic national platform, in case we want to follow that? The Democratic platform says we shall reduce Government expenses 25 percent, and that we shall consolidate and abolish useless boards and commissions and not create any more. How will we reconcile this bill with the Democratic platform?

Mr. WEARIN. We cannot reconcile it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am wondering where the gentleman finds any danger of additional expense? The language says "any officer or employee of the Authority and the Interstate Commerce Commission may be assigned to the service of the Joint Transportation Board." It does not authorize any new employees at all. It is a matter of cooperation.

Mr. WEARIN. It provides another miscellaneous board that can be permitted to function under the provisions of this act, and there is nothing in the world to prevent it from coming to Congress next year, after they get their crowbar in this year, and asking for an appropriation to carry on some experimental work that they desire to do. That is the exact purpose and intention of these provisions in this bill.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, they can come and ask for money if they do not have any board.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto conclude in 3 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, as was stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], there is no new board created. It is the Secretary of Commerce, two men from the Interstate Commerce Commission, and others from the maritime authority, who are to get together and try to work out the problems that govern the railroads and shipping, and so work coordination between those great bodies. That is all in the world there is in this provision. There are no salaries provided at all.

I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propound a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent to return to section 701 so that I may offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nineteen Members are present, a quorum.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 704. This title shall become effective 30 days after all of the five original members of the Authority have taken office.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: Page 46, line 1, strike out "30" and insert in lieu thereof "365."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, there is a sincere purpose in offering the amendment. If adopted, that amendment would withhold the effect of this enactment, would withhold the operation of this law until the Members of this Congress would have ample opportunity to hear from the people back home. [Laughter and applause.]

In my judgment, 98 percent of the people in the State of Ohio, which I represent, are unalterably and absolutely opposed to any ship subsidy. They are opposed to any subsidy for ocean mail contracts. They are unalterably opposed to the Government building ships for shipowners. That is what this bill does. The Government, through its taxpayers, will take over old tubs, old hulks that are worn out and of no use, and they will scrap that old hulk, they will scrap that old tub, and the taxpayers of this country will pay the bill. We have heard a great deal about England and the other foreign countries. In England they are required to scrap the old ships that are no good, but the owner pays for scrapping them and not the Government. We do not do that in this bill. First, we subsidize the shipbuilder for the construction of new ships. Then we subsidize him in his operating expenses and in his maintenance expenses. Then we subsidize him further in the subsidy that is given for the carrying of mail. We pay as high as $80,000 a pound for mail that in other classes is carried for 8 cents.

I want to tell you what the President of the United States said on these two vicious and iniquitous features of this bill, and I trust no one will object to my reading what the President said.

The President said to you:

This lending of money for shipbuilding has, in practice, been a failure. Few ships have been built and many difficulties have arisen from the repayment of loans.

The President also said:

Similar difficulties have attended the granting of ocean mail contracts. The Government today is paying annually about $30,000,000 for the carrying of mails which would cost, under normal ocean rates, only $3,000,000.

Yet you ask us here today to enact that sort of a bill, to reenact that sort of infamy, that sort of raid upon the taxpayers of the country. The Captain Kidds of the Shipbuilding Trust could do no better if they had written this bill themselves. The Sir Francis Drakes of the ocean mail subsidy could not have bettered this bill if they had tried. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 802. Section 2 of the act of March 4, 1915 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 673), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. In all merchant vessels of the United States of more than 100 tons gross, excepting those navigating rivers, harbors, lakes (other than Great Lakes), bays, sounds, bayous, and canals, exclusively, the firemen, oilers, and water tenders, and the sailors shall be divided into at least three watches, and each such watch shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel. The seamen shall not be shipped to work alternately in the fireroom and on deck, nor shall those shipped for deck duty be required to work in the fireroom, or vice versa; nor shall any seamen in the deck or engine department be required to work more than 8 hours in 1 day; but these provisions shall not limit either the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, the whole or any part of the crew is needed for the maneuvering of the vessel or the performance of work necessary for the safety of the vessel, her passengers, and cargo, or for the saving of life aboard other vessels in jeopardy, or when in port or at sea from requiring the whole or any part of the crew to participate in the performance of fire, lifeboat, or other drills. While such vessel is in a safe harbor no seamen shall be required to do any unnecessary work on Sundays or the following-named days: New Year's Day, the Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day, but this shall not prevent the dispatch of a vessel on regular schedule or when ready to proceed on her voyage. And at all times while such vessel is in a safe harbor, 8 hours, inclusive of the anchor watch, shall constitute a day's work. Whenever the master of any vessel shall fail to comply with this section and the regulations issued thereunder, the owner shall be liable to a penalty not to exceed $500, and the seamen shall be entitled to discharge from such vessel and to receive the wages earned. But this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, yachts, or vessels engaged in salvage operations."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee some questions. He is very familiar with the Shipping Board, I presume, and I should like to ask him some questions in reference to certain matters which I think in a way at least are connected with this bill.

I addressed a letter to Mr. Peacock of the Shipping Board calling his attention to a law of the Congress which forbids discrimination against American vessels in favor of foreign vessels on rates, and brought to his attention the fact that, for instance, cotton blankets are shipped from Germany to the United States, the rate being $10, whereas it costs $20 to ship the same blankets from the United States to Germany in the same vessel. That was merely one item. There are numerous items in the same category. I should like to know from the chairman if any remedy is provided in this bill against such a situation, or if it is the intention in future to provide a remedy which will help American manufacturers and exporters to combat this discrimination.

Mr. BLAND. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I do not think there is any remedy in the bill. The question of the minimum rates to be fixed on ocean shipping is a very serious international question, as the gentleman knows. There was a provision in the bill which would have given the authority certain power in this respect, but a serious question was raised by the State Department and there was very serious opposition on the part of exporters and importers throughout the country. It was, therefore, considered by the committee that rather than bring it up in this bill it should be the subject of very serious consideration in the future.

I may say, as chairman of the committee, that there are several matters we want to take up during the next Congress, one of which is the rights and welfare of the seamen. I want to see the seamen brought up from something higher than the mud sill of civilization, as dear old Andrew Furuseth has called it.

The question of rates is such a serious one that it was decided it would be better to leave it out for the present.

Mr. CONNERY. I call the attention of the chairman to the fact it is a very serious matter to flout a law passed by the Congress of the United States and signed by the President, a law forbidding discrimination; yet the North Atlantic Conference establishes rates against American vessels and against American exporters, and those rates are O. K.'d by the Shipping Board. This is breaking the law.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. CONNERY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. Under the 1916 act conference rates have to be approved by the Shipping Board.

Mr. CONNERY. That is the point I was endeavoring to bring out.

Mr. BLAND. Now, one step further, it is to get some insight into the operation of these conferences, to know their mechanics and possibly to control some of them, that we provided that no conference shall be approved that does not permit representatives appointed by the authority to participate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee needlessly, but this is a very important matter.

Mr. BLAND. It is a very important matter.

Mr. CONNERY. It flouts the dignity of the House of Representatives, it flouts the dignity of the United States Senate, and the dignity of a law of the United States, the act of 1916, which specifically provides that discrimination shall not be made against American ships and American exporters; yet the Shipping Board deliberately breaks the law. I called that to their attention in this letter and gave specific instances. I am calling it to the attention of the chairman of this committee because I feel he will do something about it.

Mr. BLAND. We expect to watch that.

Mr. CONNERY. The idea of a conference of shipping interests making rates in contravention of law against American exporters! As I said, the rate on blankets shipped from Germany to the United States is $10, but the rate on the same blankets shipped from the United States to Germany, in the same ship, is $20. If we continue to permit such differentials we shall have no American manufacturers left.

Mr. BLAND. Heretofore we have had no Government representatives on the conferences. The members of the conference have been operators, on one side foreign and on the other side American, with the foreigners probably outvoting the Americans.

After this bill passes we shall have representatives of the United States on those conferences.

Mr. CONNERY. I am very glad to hear my friend make this statement.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the pending bill specifically designates that the maritime authority shall send one of their members to every conference held.

Mr. CONNERY. I am going to let the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. BLAND, and my friend from New York, Mr. SIROVICH, take care of the situation. I feel that they will look into this matter and see to it that the Shipping Board shall live up to the law and stop the Board from aiding foreign competitors to drive our American manufacturers out of business.

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 803. Section 4551 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 643) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4551. Every seaman upon a merchant vessel of the United States of the burden of 100 tons or upward, except vessels employed exclusively in trade on the navigable rivers of the United States, shall be furnished with a book, to be known as a service book, which shall contain the signature of the seaman to whom it is so furnished and a statement of his nationality, age, personal description, photograph, and home address. Such books shall be in such form and issued by the shipping commissioners in such manner as the Commissioner of Navigation, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, shall determine. Any person, corporation, or association, other than a shipping commissioner, who shall issue or cause to be issued any such book or imitation thereof, or any person, other than the real owner, who uses or endeavors to use any such book, or who makes any statement or endorsement in any such book not herein authorized, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not less than 1 month nor more than 3 months, in the discretion of the court.

"Upon the discharge of any seaman and the payment of his wages, the shipping commissioner shall enter in the service book of such seaman the name of the vessel, the nature of the voyage (foreign or coastwise), the class to which the vessel belongs (steam, motor, sail, or barge), the date and place of the shipment and of the discharge of such seaman, and the rating then held by such seaman. Whenever a seaman is discharged in any collection district where no shipping commissioner has been appointed, the master of the vessel shall perform the duties of such commissioner and shall make the proper entries in such service book. Any master who fails to make such entries shall be fined the sum of $50 for each such offense."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: On page 48, line 8, strike out all of section 803, beginning with line 8, page 48, and ending with line 17, page 49, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 803. The Commission is authorized and directed to investigate the employment and wage conditions in ocean-going shipping, and after making such investigation, to prescribe and enforce minimum manning scales"——

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think the reading of the amendment has gone far enough to indicate that it is not germane to the particular section. It strikes out the substance of the section whereas it should be a new section, for it is not germane to the section read.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment to read as follows:

Page 49, after line 17, insert a new section to be known as "section 804", to read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORAN: Page 49, after line 17, insert a new section to be known as "section 804", to read as follows:

"SEC. 804. The Commission is authorized and directed to investigate the employment and wage conditions in ocean-going shipping, and after making such investigation, to prescribe and enforce minimum manning scales and minimum wage scales for all officers and crews employed on all types of vessels operated by citizens of the United States, and including vessels operated by the United States Merchant Marine Corporation, in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States. After such minimum manning and wage scales shall have been prescribed by the Commission no change shall be made by the Commission in such scales except upon formal complaint, public notice of the hearing to be had on such complaint, and a hearing by the Commission of all interested parties, under such rules as the Commission shall prescribe. Every citizen of the United States operating ocean-going shipping shall post and keep posted in a conspicuous place on each vessel operated by such citizen a printed copy of the minimum manning and wage scales prescribed by the Commission and applicable to such vessel. The provisions of this section shall be enforced in the same manner herein prescribed for the enforcement of the orders of the Commission."

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, this is the labor amendment to the bill. Attention is particularly called to the Black investigation report, page 36, where the following language appears:

While the clamor has always been made that our marine subsidy would provide funds for the payment to American seamen of wages set at a proper level, and substantially in excess of foreign wages, in many instances the proper wage scale has been cut and money transmitted to mail contractors in constructive trust for American seamen has been diverted by the contractors to their own private profits for exhorbitant salaries and unearned bonuses. This practice and result is wholly indefensible.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. I notice in the amendment which the gentleman has offered that he has a provision for manning. The gentleman knows that the manning is now by law in the hands of the Bureau of Steamboat and Navigation Service?

Mr. MORAN. That is right. Mr. Furuseth, legislative representative of the Seamen's Union, in a public letter to one of the Members of the other House, gave his view as to the status of the seamen of America. He said:

The slave status sticks to the seamen and the slave never was assumed to speak to tell the truth until his heels were roasted.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I did not catch the import of the gentleman's amendment. Does the amendment include carriers by water on inland waters and other carriers that do not come within the purview of the general terms of this bill?

Mr. MORAN. The amendment reads:

Every common carrier by water operated by a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. This bill applies only to the coastal, intercoastal, and foreign trade. Could the gentleman change his amendment to apply to the bill under consideration?

Mr. MORAN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman's amendment goes to the operating subsidy so far as the seamen are concerned. It does not take into account the construction subsidy by providing a wage scale for the construction part of it?

Mr. MORAN. No. This covers the seamen.

Mr. CONNERY. We offered an amendment yesterday to take care of the prevailing rate of wages on the construction end.

Mr. MORAN. Yes. This catches it so far as the seamen are concerned. If I had the time I could show you in these reports the illustrations of wage cuts imposed upon labor by subsidized American operators.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. The principal question, so far as I am concerned, and I do not know about the gentleman from New Jersey, is getting the amendment in shape to apply to the ocean-going ships. As it is written now it would extend to inland waters and those getting no subsidy. That is the principal point.

Mr. MORAN. I will be glad to change the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman from Maine will yield, may I say that I tried to be helpful?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. This bill includes ocean-going commerce, and I understand the gentleman includes certain interstate commerce by water; in other words, inland water transportation. With reference to this particular subject, the gentleman is giving the maritime authority jurisdiction over operations which are not under their control. Speaking for myself, if the gentleman will get his amendment in shape to apply to the kind of shipping over which the maritime authority has control, I will have no objection.

Mr. BLAND. I wonder if we could not save time by passing over this amendment at this time and returning to it later?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Returning to it any time before the conclusion of the reading of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. At any time before the conclusion of the reading of the bill.

Mr. MORAN. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the amendment at this time and return to this section at any time before the conclusion of the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the building and the operation of ships in this country since the Great World War has not been of any credit to the American people. Too often our great shipping industry has been contaminated with scandal and sometimes graft and fraud. As one individual, I am not very much in favor of the subsidy system; but in view of the fact that every other great maritime nation in the world is subsidizing their ships, so far as I observe, there is no other way by which we can keep the American flag on the seas.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like the past history by which our ships built during the World War were sold for a song. I do not agree with the policy by which Government money was lent to ship operators for less than it cost the Government to obtain the same money. I am opposed to the high commissions and the high salaries that the operators have charged. It seems that all the Government benefits in years past have been poured out to the builder, to the owner, and to the operator, and very little attention has been paid to the seamen.
